Mr. HOWE. Are there any other matters which you believe I should hear about as to the administration of the occupation in Haiti?

Gen. BUTLER. I do not think of a thing. I touched the question of martial law. That is the one danger point we have, Senator. You were

The CHAIRMAN. You might take that up again. In connection with what I have said with respect to the administration of justice, you might bring up the committee whether you believe, in the event of a re-formation of the court, the continuance of martial law would be necessary, provided, of course, that the civil magistrates would do their duty without favor and without partiality.

Gen. BUTLER. As long as the American troops stay in Haiti, and as long as they are as they are and will remain, unless you change the Haitian constitution, it is unfair to our soldiers not to give them the protection of martial law. The modified martial law that is now in existence makes a man relatively safe. That is, only offenses against the safety of our troops are punishable by the martial law courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not think it might be interesting, in the course of your study of the capitulations between the foreign bureau of Turkey on the one hand, and Egypt on the other, and the system of the administration of justice in Egypt, before the administration commits itself to a policy?

Gen. BUTLER. I think that might be well. I am not familiar with the Egyptian system.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a long time since I have studied it, but I have the impression that in Egypt an assessor sits on the bench with the judge, and advises him in the formulation of his decisions.

Gen. BUTLER. That system is all right. Under the present system, if the murder of a marine would call for nothing but commendation of the Haitian courts.

e time you became chief of gendarmerie, what were the hich the chief could receive reports and communicate with his subordinates throughout the country? Can you give us a notion of your methods of communication and your methods of repair?

Col. WILLIAMS. When the organization of the native police, its development into a national military police, was begun, the communication available throughout the Republic were by telegraph, mail, and mounted messenger. The wire communications were inefficient, the mail communications were utterly unreliable, and courier service was very slow and not dependable. The post did not increase in efficiency until about three years of American occupation had passed. Wire communications increased in efficiency from the very beginning, because they were in repair by the marine personnel, and certain wire lines were operated by marine personnel, so that the wire communications increased in efficiency from the very beginning until the end, when they were generally fair. Communication by courier increased—

Mr. HOWE. Just before you get off the subject of the wires, was there any metallic circuit? Did you have a metallic circuit?

Col. WILLIAMS. No; all the wire lines were ground return—wire, with an earth return—and subject to constant interruption by the climatic conditions. The insulation would be largely lost by storms, and as in many stretches the wires were fastened to trees rather than to poles, a windstorm would carry them away. In addition to that, the wires themselves were in a very bad state through constant breaks and repairs. It counted between two poles at one time 110 splices.

Mr. HOWE. Why was not a more efficient system installed, do you think?

Col. WILLIAMS. Because the Haitian administration was not able to install one.

Mr. HOWE. Were the funds available to the gendarmerie for the repair or improvement of the lines?

Col. WILLIAMS. The military commander, who disbursed the funds turned over to him by Admiral Caperton, I believe, allotted the funds for the purchase of material and for labor, but most of the repairs were made by marine expeditionary material and by marine personnel.

Mr. HOWE. Is it correct to say that it was a lack of funds which prevented a further improvement in the wire communications?

Col. WILLIAMS. By the Haitian Government, you mean?

Mr. HOWE. By the Haitian Government or by our military authorities?

Col. WILLIAMS. In the case of the Haitian Government, funds were not found for this purpose. In the case of repairs made by our military authorities, we were undoubtedly hampered by the lack of personnel.

Mr. HOWE. You were going on to speak of the road communication and messenger communications.

Col. WILLIAMS. As we became familiar with the geography of the existing road system, and found that certain couriers were reliable, we were not, and had determined approximately the necessary time for the transmission of messages by courier, we were able to more efficiently use the courier service, and also hold up the couriers themselves to a high standard of performance.

Mr. HOWE. How would you characterize the development of the courier service? Did it become efficient?

Col. WILLIAMS. Its development to the point of efficiency was because we finally brought about a fairly satisfactory system of communication. In the interior, however, we were dependent upon messenger service to a great extent, especially when the wire lines went out, and for the most part the courier service might be said to be fairly efficient.

Mr. HOWE. Colonel, with these means at your disposal, was it possible by which you could supervise your command, and by which you could learn of the performance of its duties by your command? How were you in touch with it?

Col. WILLIAMS. In the very beginning the headquarters of the gendarmerie can hardly be said to have kept in touch; communications were necessary to the more remote posts so difficult. With the improvement of the system, certain reports were called for. All officers who were charged with individual responsibility were required to make, first, a monthly report, and gave every contact which the gendarmerie made with the Haitian authorities with Haiti. That report was divided into heads and subheads, and was complete, and was designed to give the chief of the gendarmerie a complete picture of the gendarmerie activities in any area.

that, the ordinary military reports of strength, health of the barracks of barrack construction, progress in road work, condition of the inmates, etc. Also reports were obtained informally from various sources. It was customary, for instance, for travelers of the long Pourtaud au Prince to call on the chief of the gendarmerie, and this they were cross-examined so far as possible regarding. In addition, the Haitian Government received from its various departments covering their administrative work, and from time to time, reports touched on the activities of the gendarmerie, either in favorable or unfavorable comment, excerpts from the reports sent by the minister of the interior to the chief of the gendarmerie, and sometimes with the request that an investigation be made. It means, however, that the senior officers of the gendarmerie had knowledge of what was going on in the country was by their visits were unannounced, followed no particular schedule, and the most valuable means of keeping in touch with the work. The chief of the gendarmerie, or the department commander in chief, who also inspected, was called upon by all the local commanders discussed with them the conditions obtaining in their districts, in reference to the work of the gendarmerie. These occasions were very valuable indeed as a means of obtaining information, and the officials never hesitated to speak frankly, and often in a critical manner to which they might object.

the district commanders make reports of these meetings to the senior officer as a rule? Say, if a district commander held meetings which you have described was that meeting and anything else, it reported to headquarters?

Yes; if anything of note developed, mention would be made, however, there would be perhaps three or four of these meetings and they were, in certain respects, rather tiresome. No formal meeting made that a meeting had been held in such a State and local-were these visits comprehensive? Did they cover all posts?

In my own case, I visited all but three, I think, of the posts, and they were so remote and of so little importance that the time for the detour necessary to visit them.

the district commanders, however, visit the posts in their own frequency?

The district commanders were required to visit all posts quite frequently. I have forgotten what the regulation was. The subdistrict commanders made more frequent visits to the district commanders, and the department commander visited all posts in his department at certain intervals, and all subdistrict commanders at certain intervals—just what they were I have these visits were systematized?

The visits were systematized in that they must be made at regular intervals, but they were not on a schedule of dates.

In case any emergency came up, were there no means available in the outlying country to receive instructions or to ask them questions?

In the large cities it was comparatively easy to get in touch with headquarters. In many of them it was possible to get telegraphic communication. I speak now of the later development. In the smaller posts it was sometimes very difficult, but the means of communication had been interfered with by hostile neighbors. There would be but one post, I think, more than two days beyond the nearest headquarters. That means that a courier from that post would take two days to reach the nearest reliable wire station.

How many of such posts were there?

I think there was but one. I may say, however, that an officer with full confidence of receiving an answer and the message was enough. There were a good many relay points on these wire

Who were the operators?

Col. WILLIAMS. The operators were Haitians.

Mr. HOWE. Under those conditions, Colonel, what confidence do you have of knowing of all cases of irregularity in the gendarmerie?

Col. WILLIAMS. Its confidence in knowing of the regularity following their occurrence was fairly good; of knowing of their irregularity was excellent. No irregularity, and I speak from recollection, could obtain over any considerable period without knowledge to headquarters from unofficial sources, or from the Haitian Government.

Mr. HOWE. When serious irregularities were heard of, or reported to headquarters, was an investigation always made?

Col. WILLIAMS. An investigation was made of any report, but it might seem on its face. A great part of our officers' work was in making reports which on their face were unworthy of credence.

Mr. HOWE. In general, all these answers of yours would apply during which you were chief of the gendarmerie?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; except where I spoke specifically of the gendarmerie and of the wire communications.

Mr. HOWE. During the time you were commander how many reports did you get to you of the killing of natives who, at the time they were reported, had already been taken prisoner, and without trial?

Col. WILLIAMS. I can remember two instances. The dates I cannot remember, the location and the attendant circumstances I remember fairly well.

Mr. HOWE. Those are the cases of which you heard, as distinguished from other cases investigated and either disproven or confirmed?

Col. WILLIAMS. These were both investigated.

Mr. HOWE. Is the total number of which you heard?

Col. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. HOWE. Let me qualify that question a little bit more. Killings of natives the responsibility was attributed to white officers of the gendarmerie, excluding any killings which you may have heard of, unauthorized killings of native members of the gendarmerie, but I am referring to authorized killings of native prisoners on the responsibility of white officers of the gendarmerie. How many such reports did you receive? If you can remember exactly an approximate answer would suit my purposes.

Col. WILLIAMS. I am trying to remember whether or not I received any notice. I do not remember any report ever having been made of unauthorized killings of prisoners on the responsibility of a white officer.

Mr. HOWE. You mentioned a moment ago two cases of which you can remember the precise dates, but where you could describe the attendant circumstances. Which were those two cases? Can you give the names of the persons involved for the purpose of identifying them?

Col. WILLIAMS. In neither case was a white officer involved. In both cases were unjustified killings of prisoners by gendarmes, and in both cases the offenders were court-martialed and punished. I think in one case sentence was executed, but in the other case I do not remember what the punishment was.

Mr. HOWE. Before we get to those, let me ask you if you are familiar with the contents of the investigation conducted by Major Hooker, and Col. Lay, with the investigation conducted by Generals Butler, and with the Mayo court of inquiry?

Col. WILLIAMS. I am familiar with the investigation conducted by Major Turner to the extent to which I was a party. I was personally present at the trial of Col. Lay. I was at that time given an opportunity to testify in my own testimony of other witnesses. Of the proceedings of the Mayo court of inquiry investigations conducted by Gens. Lejeune and Butler I know nothing.

Mr. HOWE. Then, let me ask you this: In those three investigations, charges investigated and testimony taken which brought in the names of Brokaw, that, in the first instance, came up in the Johnson court-martial, the case of Capt. Lavoie, charged with having prisoners killed; I think it was Lang, who was charged with killing a native unjustly; Williams, charged with killing the notary, Garnier—I do not remember the name charged, but accused in some manner—and an officer about whom I do not know, called Lifshitz testified, he referring to that officer by the name Koskoski. Did you learn anything of the circumstances connected with those accusations against those officers whom I have mentioned?

Col. WILLIAMS. Your question makes it necessary that I answer to a previous one where I stated that I had received no reports

...s under the authority of a white officer. I meant by that ved no reports of such killings when action lay in my hands.
you mention I am more or less familiar.
Will you please explain a little bit further just what you mean

Mr. HOWE. The gendarmerie regulations did not authorize a martial. Was that right?

Col. WILLIAMS. They did.

Mr. HOWE. For American officers?

Col. WILLIAMS. Not for American officers, but for members of gendarmerie whose conduct merited such trial.

Mr. HOWE. Would that include American officers?

Col. WILLIAMS. One test case was made, and a lieutenant who was forgotten was tried by a gendarmerie general court-martial and sentenced to dismissal. He protested against this. How far carried I do not know—I was not chief at the time—but it was decided and he was separated by the sentence of the court from the grade and reverted to the status of an enlisted man in the Marine Corps. He was transferred from the constabulary detachment to the brigade to serve, I assume, as an enlisted man in the brigade. No one was tried. We did not have the available material for their trial.

Mr. HOWE. Now, Colonel, to illustrate that explanation which I mentioned while ago as to your knowledge of these cases which I mentioned, stand it, you said that none of these cases was reported to the time in which you could take action?

Col. WILLIAMS. I meant by that that the report was either made by the brigade commander who assumed jurisdiction, and that was the case of Brokaw—

Mr. HOWE. Who was brigade commander?

Col. WILLIAMS. Gen. Catlin.

Mr. HOWE. He assumed, as I understand it, jurisdiction before the case had reached you or before you had had an opportunity to investigate that correct?

Col. WILLIAMS. That was true in the case of Brokaw. In the case of Williams, and Lang Gen. Catlin made the investigations himself and assumed jurisdiction. Of Lang's case I do not know, except as I heard of it.

Mr. HOWE. Then the first report, or the first action in the case of the officers whose names I have mentioned, Brokaw, Lavoie, Lang, and one more mentioned by Lifshitz, was taken, in the first place, by the brigade commander?

Col. WILLIAMS. By the brigade commander.

Mr. HOWE. Did you learn officially, or at first hand otherwise, of any of the circumstances in any of these cases? For instance, in the case of Brokaw, Brokaw being the officer alleged to have directed the action and McQuilkin to shoot prisoners.

Col. WILLIAMS. In the case of Brokaw I know nothing at first hand. The investigation of that case was conducted by the brigade commander. The final action was taken by him. Do you want the circumstances of the investigation of that case was conducted by the brigade commander? He ordered the court-martial of Pvts. Johnson and McQuilkin?

Col. WILLIAMS. The brigade commander. I had no authority to order courts on members of the marine personnel.

Mr. HOWE. Did the brigade commander, however, take action on your report or suggestion?

Col. WILLIAMS. I know nothing whatsoever about those cases which you have heard.

Mr. HOWE. Did the killings alleged in those cases take place under the command of the gendarmes?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; but the men involved were not members of gendarmerie or the constabulary detachment.

Mr. HOWE. That is it, they were out as members of the Marine Corps on telephone duty, is not that it, and not under your jurisdiction?

Col. WILLIAMS. On what duty they were I do not know; they were under my command.

Mr. HOWE. In the case of Capt. Lavoie, as I understand it, he was court-martialed. What did you learn directly about the case of Lavoie? Will you go into that fully?

Col. WILLIAMS. Early in March, 1919, I visited central Haiti with Gen. Catlin. He wished me to go along, and led me to believe that his reports in regard to conditions in central Haiti which warranted intervention. I accompanied him on this trip, but was not present at his role. In fact, his investigation was conducted without my aid.

How designedly—designedly on his part or yours?

Designedly on his part, and I agreed with him. It was the presence of the chief of the gendarmerie, who had considered the natives, would perhaps influence the native witnesses agreed with Gen. Catlin in this, and also pointed out to him that the chief of the gendarmerie would have a reflex so bad as to, in my opinion, any benefits which followed my absence. That in the minds of the natives, that the chief of the gendarmerie, they ever met, was now entirely discredited, and the Haitian nationalist by tradition and disposition, would see an opportunity to throw in a favorable light in the eyes of the new man by telling things of the old one and his administration.

As a matter of fact, how was this tour of investigation conducted?

Gen. Catlin first sent for the local officials and questioned them on conditions in the district. He sent for the local priest and

Were you, as a matter of fact, excluded from most of these

I was, as I said, designedly excluded.

Now, in the case of Capt. Lavoie, did you take any part in whatsoever?

I took no part in the investigation, but after Gen. Catlin gave Lavoie over a considerable period, privately, Gen. Catlin sent Lavoie to repeat before me that which he had told him relative to certain prisoners.

And what did Capt. Lavoie say then in your presence and mine?

Lavoie stated that he had caused to be executed a certain number. Six or seven is in my mind—how many he exactly stated. That concluded the investigation so far as I was involved.

Did he say nothing of the circumstances under which the execution was carried out?

He explained how this execution had been carried on, where?

And where.

You tell us what he said as well as you can recollect it?

He said these men—

Where was he stationed, at Hinche?

At Hinche. He said that the men were well known Cacos, that they had been captured redhanded; that the civil courts gave assurance that they would be punished; that the only agency present was the marine provost court in Cape Haitien.

marine provost court?

The marine provost court, and that that court had been limited to six months confinement, and a very considerable gold ransom to be beyond the capacity of any Haitian to pay, that is any peasant class; that if sentenced to six months, good conduct for four, and then they would be back on his hands and again which he was then trying to put out of business. That was his reason. He did not go into the details of the execution, it had been carried out a short distance from town.

in what town?

From the town of Hinche, on the road leading to Malissade, men carried out by a detachment of gendarmes. That was, as far as I know, what he said.

By his orders?

Yes; the execution.

Execution had been carried out by gendarmes by his orders?

By his orders.

He fix this by date at all?

I do not think he did; if he did I do not remember.

As, however, the only occurrence of that kind of which he Gen. Catlin?

Col. WILLIAMS. I do not know what he said to Gen. Catlin.

Mr. HOWE. To you and Gen. Catlin together, I mean.

Col. WILLIAMS. Together, that was the only case of which

Mr. HOWE. Before you and Gen. Catlin?

Col. WILLIAMS. The only case of a killing that was spoken

Mr. HOWE. Is that all that you recollect of the talk there Lavoie, you and Gen. Catlin?

Col. WILLIAMS. I think Gen. Catlin and I discussed the pects of this case.

Mr. HOWE. But was that in the presence of Capt. Lavoie?

Col. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. HOWE. So that was all of what Lavoie said at that time,

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Then you did have a discussion with Gen. Catlin

Col. WILLIAMS. I believe we did.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know why charges were not then Lavoie? What is the reason they were not? Why did you not at that time?

Col. WILLIAMS. I did not prefer charges because the case hands, my immediate military senior having taken cognizance Gen. Catlin did not prefer charges I can not state, because directly. From the general tenor, however, of the entire in-led to believe that, despite Lavoie's statement, who is a witness Catlin was not convinced of the truth of it. That, however, on my part.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, Gen. Catlin will be called as a next week, before this committee, and will, of course, be inter-point when he appears as a witness.

As to L'ent. Williams, did you make any investigation your-present at any investigation in his case? I mean the Lieut.
was charged with killing the native notary, Garnier?

Col. WILLIAMS. Lieut. Williams is the subdistrict commander.
Catlin and I, with several other officers, Gen. Catlin's interpreter from St. Michel, went to Malssade by motor. There Gen. Catlin tain of the civil officials and asked if there were any gendarmes make any complaint against Lieut. Williams, their commander.
Gen. Catlin heard from the civil officials I do not know designedly excluded. In the case of the gendarmes I was designedly, but was asked by Gen. Catlin to be present when they they had told him. Their complaints about Lieut. Williams were to Catlin's investigation of conditions, so the allegations made were founded upon an investigation at which I was not present that. One of the witnesses whom Gen. Catlin interrogated was by Gen. Catlin to repeat what he had told them. That was in death of Garnier Jean. The allegations made against Williams far as I could make out from my part in the investigation and vestigations, substantiated in any degree by the witnesses, but tion having been taken over by Gen. Catlin, I made no official the sense of having a board investigate it; I investigated it myself.

Mr. HOWE. The Lang case you know nothing about?

Col. WILLIAMS. Of the Lang case I know nothing.

Mr. HOWE. The Mayo court of inquiry heard the Lang case derstand it, Mr. Chairman, exonerated Lieut. Lang entirely of that will appear when the record of the Mayo court is put as it will be.

These cases, I believe, Colonel, that I have mentioned are all cases which were developed in the course of these investigations whether the statements made by these witnesses before you, or do so by Gen. Catlin, were substantially the same statements before Gen. Catlin previous to making them before you?

Col. WILLIAMS. In the case of Lavoy, Gen. Catlin did not way that what he told me differed substantially from what
In the case of those witnesses who were asked to repeat before they had told Gen. Catlin in the case of Williams, I think the ferences, and I think they were substantial. I do not remember details were. There were some questions that came up in

I may explain at this time, Creole is the language of the but Creole differs in the different parts of the country. There is the north Creole, and central Creole. The interpreter, a Haitian, at that time did not seem to well translate central Creole. I believe the differences in statement between those made to Gen. Catlin and me together were due to the interpreter or different, I do not remember.

These were, of course, the cases of native witnesses that you are referring to?

Yes. These were all native witnesses. There were no other persons, aside from Brokaw, Lavoy, and Williams, you know of persons having been made against any of the white gendarmerie in connection with the killing of native prisoners; is that it?

I believe one officer was tried by general court-martial in connection with a killing. That was Hamilton.

Yes, adding the name of Hamilton, those were all that you

Yes.

Then the only killings of prisoners under the orders of white officers or by white officers are the ones of which these people that I have mentioned, these officers that I have mentioned?

Yes. Do you believe there were any more killings than those, suppose, that took place?

From my knowledge of the gendarmerie American personnel, and knowledge gained during the close association of four years, that the gendarme officer was inspired by a very high sense of duty, considered his paramount duty, first, to do everything which would be in the interests of the Haitians; second, to do everything which would be in the interests of the Marine Corps. Aside from this conception of duty, the greatest friendliness and sympathy for the natives. They sympathized with every local movement for the betterment of their country. They had developed an acquired national spirit but a district pride, a jealousy and resentful of what they would consider favoritism in giving more funds to one district than to another. Their relations with the natives were very friendly; they were spoken of highly by all classes, and from time to time for what might not meet with the approval of the natives it is difficult for me to believe that any gendarme officer would kill or cause to be killed a native who was under his control. This was the case in military operations.

Did you referred to what might be described as cold-blooded killing of natives they had become prisoners?

Yes.

Did you, therefore, do not believe that, aside from these possible cases that have been mentioned, that there were any of those cold-blooded killings in any direction or by gendarmerie officers?

I not only do not believe that there were any others, but I am convinced that the ones alleged occurred.

Alleged?

As alleged. I may say in this connection that I have no doubt that many natives were killed by the native personnel of the gendarmerie. I say that because I had occasion to try a number by court-martial over to the civil authorities for trial by the criminal courts without any good reason, had killed prisoners or people whom they had made prisoners.

I want to come back to that branch of your testimony and go into it before we get there, there is just one other matter I want to mention, in connection with the white officers of the gendarmerie. Do you suppose while you were chief of the gendarmerie that any officer commanded directly or indirectly encouraged the killing of

I had no reason to believe it and every reason not to believe it. In my personal conversation and in written communications to the officers, and I hoped through them to indoctrinate the native people the idea that no life must be taken and that no suffering must be inflicted unless it was absolutely necessary to the legal or police duties or military operations.

Mr. HOWE. To be more specific, have you any reason to believe Maj. Wells encouraged officers under his command to kill natives who had been taken prisoner? I refer to Maj. Wells, who was, I believe, commander.

Col. WILLIAMS. He was a department commander in north Haiti. In intimate association with Maj. Wells, I do not believe that Maj. Wells encouraged, much less directed, the killing of prisoners. I saw no knowledge of his character, from a realization that such things were counter to gendarmerie policy, and, thirdly, because Maj. Wells was of considerable difficulty in having such orders carried out. The subject I do not believe would lend themselves to any such program. It is the fact that such orders had been issued or such things resulted or later come to me.

Mr. HOWE. And it did not come to you?

Col. WILLIAMS. And it did not come to me.

Mr. HOWE. Later on in the course of some of these investigations by Maj. Turner, some witnesses testified that Maj. Wells used language to this effect to them: "I do not want to have any prisoners. You know what to do with the prisoners." You never heard of Maj. Wells using such language to his subordinates, or giving such directions to him or making such suggestions to his subordinates, during all the time he was under your command?

Col. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. HOWE. Or at any other time?

Col. WILLIAMS. Such parts of the investigation that have come to my knowledge informed me of that allegation.

Mr. HOWE. But that is your only information?

Col. WILLIAMS. That is all I know of it.

Mr. HOWE. On the subject?

Col. WILLIAMS. On that subject.

Mr. HOWE. Is there any further statement you care to make about the accusations against Maj. Wells? What was his first name?

Col. WILLIAMS. Clarke H. Wells.

Mr. HOWE. That is the Maj. Wells to whom we have been referring?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes. Maj. Wells, I understand, is further informed his district and subdistrict commanders that they were to be quillity in their districts, whereas, in fact, conditions were far from quillity. I can not reconcile that with the common sense which distinguishes a gendarme. It was unnecessary. I knew, and it was a matter of common knowledge that conditions were not tranquil in these districts, and, moreover, it was possible for the attack of a small gendarmerie post and the killing of gendarmes to be passed over in that fashion. A knowledge of this fact came to me. Wells could not conceal it, and I therefore do not believe he issued such orders.

Mr. HOWE. Now, as to killings of natives by native members of the gendarmerie, have you any reason to believe that such killings occurred among native prisoners?

Col. WILLIAMS. I know they occurred. I had occasion to investigate many; and where there was any hope of obtaining evidence sufficient for a warrant trial, these gendarmes were brought to trial. Some were convicted and sometimes acquitted.

Mr. HOWE. Before what tribunal?

Col. WILLIAMS. Before the gendarmerie general court-martial, which was subject to the approval of the President.

Mr. HOWE. The President of Haiti?

Col. WILLIAMS. The President of Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. Were any men executed as the result of these trials?

Col. WILLIAMS. My recollection is that only one man was executed, I believe, in the town of Ouanaminthe. He had been convicted by the gendarmerie general court-martial of murder. Whether he was the prisoner, or what not, I do not remember. You must understand, there had been hundreds and hundreds of courts to look over, and I do not remember the details.

In that connection, Colonel, I want to ask if, in killing trial, the gendarmerie did something which had never before, or if, in your judgment, they did that which, under the circumstances, had been done by the forces subject to the command of the Government, etc.?

For the unauthorized killing of prisoners, there is an unlimited number of precedents running back to that established by Cacique

Is that a Caribbean chieftain?

Columbus discovered Haiti in 1492, and the Santa Maria landed near what is now Cape Haitien, and out of the timbers he built Fort Nativity. He left in that fort, not being able to take them on his reduced fleet, about 29 Spaniards. These were very brutal in their treatment of the natives, a very harmless people, and in their demands that gold be produced that the natives under the leadership of the Cacique Caonabo, massacred every Spaniard and destroyed the fort.

You think, then, that certainly during the period of the Haitian Republic executions without trial were customary?

I would not say customary; I would say they were very common. The greatest problem in the organization of the gendarmerie was the lack of experience with him had led us to believe that he was not so much to the value of human life; that he was prone to make use of police authority, and very liable to exceed it. His treatment was generally brutal. The earlier arrests were attended by great cruelty to the prisoner, usually by clubbing, and it was with the greatest reluctance on the part of the natives, that his attitude became materially modified. One of my best noncommissioned officers, a speaking gendarme, made an arrest in the town of Leogane, which I have forgotten I was interested in this particular case. The corporal when he returned to the capital. He said he had been left by him in Leogane. Why? Because the prisoner had escaped, and he had shot him in the leg. I had him explain to me of the attempted escape, and the corporal told me, and I was unable and would have justified firing on the escaping prisoner. I told him what measures he had taken to hold the prisoner, and I had arranged for his burial, and it developed then that he had been shot, and not being able to stand the sight of his suffering, he had thrown the head as he lay on the ground. This early instance was because this man was a representative of the 3,000 with whom we had police Haiti.

Did you have that case investigated?

That case was investigated in more or less of an informal manner. In the beginning it was impossible to investigate everything, but we were satisfied, however, that the occurrence was substantially

That the prisoner really was trying to escape?

Yes; that statement was later substantiated when I visited Haiti for an informal investigation.

Did you ever turn over your native gendarmes for serious offenses more than the gendarmerie general court-martial?

The Haitian law did not provide for military courts, as I was against the institution of gendarmerie courts-martial not subject to appeal. There was considerable opposition among the lawyers of Haiti. We, however, believed that it was essential that discipline in the gendarmerie must be under the control of the Government, because the only regenerative influence in the gendarmerie was the Government, and if we were not free to organize, train, discipline the gendarmerie according to our American conceptions of discipline, we felt that the gendarmerie would remain what it was, and it is to remain, a Haitian organization, and consequently of the Government. We insisted, in discussions with the Government, the Haitian Government, that the gendarmerie courts be not subject to review by the Government. First, the limitation of punishment was life imprisonment.

In view of the bad conduct of the gendarmes on several occasions, influence with the President to have him approve a modification of the regulations which permitted the gendarmerie court to subject to presidential approval, to adjudge the death penalty. The life imprisonment was not bringing the disciplinary results which were desired. However, as a matter of policy I exercised my discretion, to the civil courts several cases where the evidence against the accused was so complete and the crime had been attended by such publicity that a conviction would follow, and the death penalty be adjudged and the American officers shown. The only case of which I recall was that of a gendarme in the town of St. Michel, which was under the jurisdiction of the criminal courts of Gonaïves. The district judge may be called, in Gonaïves was one of the most efficient I had seen.

The CHAIRMAN. Among the Haitians?

Col. WILLIAMS. Among the Haitians. The judges seemed good, but they had a rather high cultural development. This gendarme had a woman about 60 years old. She was a professional beggar, a half idiot, and she begged about the streets of the town, half nuisance. The gendarme's defense before the court was self-defense. This woman had thrown a handful of pebbles at him. The judge acquitted. This acquittal was in what I thought probably the best district of the Republic. I think that was the last important case over to the Haitian courts.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any idea, or have you any means of knowing how many native prisoners were illegally killed by Haitians in the absence of without or against the orders of their white superior officers?

Col. WILLIAMS. So far as my recollection serves me I think I have brought to trial. I think I caused to be investigated perhaps 500 killings, but most of them, because they were not true or because the evidence was not possible to obtain sufficient evidence, were handled in some other way, taking disciplinary measures, such as the transfer of the man to another post where he was serving to another post, or his discharge from the gendarmerie.

The CHAIRMAN. You refer now to cases where you felt you could not prove a capital crime?

Col. WILLIAMS. Could not prove any crime. Investigations were conducted with so much difficulty, and the native witness is so unreliable that an investigation of a serious charge was, according to our standards, of what an investigation should be, almost impossible. I think I am inclined to think that at least 50 per cent of the gendarmerie officers' time was spent in investigating. A native witness, in the first place, while not necessarily unreliable, simply because he argues directly from cause to effect without considering the modifying intervening circumstances, jumps to conclusions. If he hears once or twice becomes a belief. If he hears it more than once, he is firm conviction, and he is prone to relate as a fact that which is only knowledge only as a bit of gossip.

In connection with the killing of a native by a gendarme, a case where the circumstances seemed to warrant the trial of the gendarme by court-martial, the principal witness for the defense testified that he had been standing near the gendarme during the events leading up to the killing, at the time of the killing and immediately subsequent thereto. He stood cross-examination of his testimony, and when he had completed his testimony, following the usual system of court-martial procedure, his testimony was read and he was asked if it was correct, and to correct it, if necessary. He said that those were exactly the words of his friend, so nearly as he could remember, and he tried to stick to his friend's statement.

It then developed that he had not been anywhere near the scene at the time of the event, but that his friend, who was the real witness, was to draw irrigating water for his little farm on that particular day, and he missed it the week would go by and all of his bananas die, and he came to this witness to testify in his place, and the witness, in perfect good faith, committed himself to be identified as the real witness and sworn. He stood cross-examination, and it was only by the merest accident that the ignorance of all the facts in the case became evident.

That was a striking instance, but there were many others less striking. That led us to believe that the native's testimony was not reliable unless it was substantiated by many witnesses.

The investigations themselves were conducted under the greatest difficulties, especially in the case where the officer charged with the investigation

ently. Even a knowledge of French would not help much, because in the interior did not understand French. Two gendarmes brought a prisoner one day, a prisoner who had stated that he was hidden. He was a civil prisoner, but we promised him that if we could persuade the President of Haiti to pardon him, if there the arms were buried. The two gendarmes, accompanied by an officer, went to the town of Croix des Missions, and they came the next day and reported that the prisoner had attempted to escape and run into the cane fields where they could never get him, and they killed him, and they buried him.

Not only because it was the proper thing to get a side light on the gendarmes, I ordered a board of witnesses to the place of the killing, and interrogated them through an interpreter. At that time few, if any, of the gendarmerie spoke French fluently. The witnesses testified substantially to the same story. They proceeded to the place where the man was buried, and they submitted a written report. The only thing that led to their conclusion that the gendarmes had been justified in this was that the body was rather badly decomposed. We sent for a doctor at Port au Prince, and asked him about this, and he said that the condition of the soil and the drainage might bring about decomposition in three or four days, but it was rather doubtful. However, no time to make a further investigation. Three officers of the gendarmerie had spent two days on this, and their services were rather amorphous organization we had at the time. About the prisoner was arrested 30 miles from the place where he was buried. I sent an officer who spoke Creole fluently to Croix des Missions to collect most of the original witnesses, who stated that they were not present at the time of the first investigation; that they had told the truth at the time, but that now that they had satisfied the American, would the American be good enough to tell them the truth for many months, that is why the three white men were digging up the body of a man who had been buried, having been buried three months before.

Investigation in all its phases is characteristic of the investigations that go on to the very last. Witnesses were willing to identify themselves and they would try to determine what the court wanted to find out, and they would use the court or the board. If they disappeared from the investigating officer, it was difficult to get them back, because they would say that the name which they identified themselves was just the name of the day following day they would perhaps have another name. They knew the country so much that it was hard to find them. They knew an oath, and they were informed of the pains and penalties of perjury, and they would recite as facts things which they imagined.

perjury a crime in Haiti?

Perjury, as I remember the code, is not defined as such, but false testimony is punishable.

Colonel, were all reports of unauthorized killings by the gendarmerie justified?

Every report against the gendarmerie body or its individual members foolish because the reports seem on its face, was investigated as far as we could possibly investigate them, and in many cases we found that the reports were justified.

And in the case of justified complaints there were trials where the charges could be proven?

If the circumstances justified a trial, they were tried.

And there were, as you say, about nine convictions there, you

My recollection is that the gendarmerie courts convicted some neighborhood of ten people for serious crimes.

For the killing of prisoners and other crimes?

They must have been for the killing of prisoners, because they did not have brought them to trial by general court. We had departmental courts and districts courts, with more limited power of punishment. They handled the minor

Mr. HOWE. There were other classes of killings down there where the individual resisted arrest, or where he was out he ran away and was shot as he was running, classes of killings come under the head of killings incident to military operations of course, true, is it not, that there were in those military killings?

Col. WILLIAMS. The repression of banditism involved the many Haitians.

Mr. HOWE. What was the attitude of the white officers in general, toward the killing of natives in the field?

Col. WILLIAMS. Of extreme regret. It was realized that if they came to be called, the Cacos, were probably 75 per cent not want to do what they were doing. The bandit leaders selective draft which worked about in this way: A bandit leader ex-criminals or bad men would come to the remote house of a man would offer him his choice between joining the bandits, the he they called it, or having his head cut off.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel, upon what evidence or report did you base that statement? Did the peasantry tell this to your marines or to you?

Col. WILLIAMS. The peasants in many instances told it. It was common knowledge among the educated Haitians that this was the method employed in gaining recruits. It was the direct testimony of a man who had elected to remain peaceful and in whose cases his peace consideration had interfered with the completion of the head of the band we fixed them up in our hospitals. I have spoken of the Haitian testimony, but the testimony regarding this particular method is universal that one could not but believe it. Few resisted this method and the bands grew very rapidly, and as they grew the number of them increased; and I think it is conservative to state that at the end of the field were there against their wills, but as soon as they became committed by having operated in this field they felt they could not desert. Deserters from a band or gang were treated with a natural degree of suspicion and they had to prove themselves before they were permitted to go loose, and when they were turned over they were quickly murdered by the members of the gang or some other band. I think that in an attack on a bandit gang, in a fight between bandits and gendarmes, if there were 10 men of the natives, probably 7 of them were innocent of any hostility to the Americans.

Mr. HOWE. So the natural result from that was that you were loath to kill unless it seemed to them necessary, is that correct?

Col. WILLIAMS. They were loath to kill, but it must be understood that in the jungle and in the morning twilight it is impossible at times to tell exactly what a man's inclinations are.

The CHAIRMAN. When you captured bandits what disposition did you make of them?

Col. WILLIAMS. Various dispositions. The most usual disposition was to turn them over to the American provost courts. We had found that the provost courts generally were not able, where willing, to punish in such a way that the punishment would act as a deterrent. The sessions of the provost courts were held at points very distant from the scene of the bandit cases were tried months, perhaps, after the occurrence, and the effect of the criminal court's action, where it could be obtained, was small. The provost court acted promptly and the punishment was usually by hard labor—six months at hard labor. I am not quite sure.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any killings that came to your knowledge that were with natives escaping from corvée gangs?

Col. WILLIAMS. I had reason to believe, and received reports, that there had been killings in avoiding corvée work, but in no case was it possible to collect sufficient data to justify more than such investigation as was made or directed some other officer to make. In other words, I do not have a thorough investigation as is incident to the trial of an accused person. I have no doubt, however, knowing the native persons who were killed.

Mr. HOWE. Were the corvée gangs guarded by gendarmes?

Col. WILLIAMS. The corvée gangs were always guarded by gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. For what purpose, to protect the gang or to prevent the natives from escaping?

I know of only one instance where the gang had a guard for protecting it, and that was in the Massade district.

And in the other case it was——

In the other cases they were guards to insure the continued laborers and to furnish subbosses for the road work.

What were the instructions of the guards? What were they in case some of the gang made a break and started to run away?

To recapture them.

Did their instructions justify them in shooting them?

No.

Did they run away?

No.

Then, any killing of a member of a corvée gang who was running legal killing, was that right?

Any killing of a member of a corvée gang who was engaged some time than a criminal assault on a member of the guard or a gang, would be a crime.

Do you refer to killings or to possible killings of escaping members of the gang? Do you mean those killings were by native guards?

By native guards.

Did you ever hear of such instances in which such a killing was ordered, or accomplished by the white officer of the gendarmerie?

No.

Did you hear of such instances in the marines?

The possibility of those killings was recognized, and such was possible was given.

Did you prevent them?

To prevent them; not specifically to prevent those, but to prevent the exercise of authority by the gendarmerie.

Did you hear of any cruelty by the native gendarmerie to the

I heard of cruelty; that is, the beating of corvée men by the gendarmes where it was possible to do so, those cases were punished. This was the only way to abuse authority was the subject of constant effort toward the gendarmes never succeeded in repressing it entirely.

Did your officers were directed to use their efforts to repress any of the gendarmes' acts of oppression against the natives, is that correct?

As I said before, our greatest problem in organizing and the gendarmerie was the gendarme, and we realized that the people could not be gained if the gendarme were to comport himself according to his inclinations.

I may interject that that is a difficulty which confronts the police of constabulary in the Tropics the world around.

I think it is characteristic of the lower races to exceed authority when they are invested with it. We had the same trouble in the Philip-

Can you estimate the number of natives who were killed by the gendarmes while trying to escape from the corvée?

I can not, because I do not know of any.

Do you believe that such killings were possible?

I believe that such killings were possible and probable.

At 1 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The assembly reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m. pursuant to the taking of Colonel, can you give us a brief definition of the term "corvée" under the Haitian law?

Corvée, in a general sense, is forced manual labor, or perhaps it is nonvoluntary manual labor.

Did Haiti have a law authorizing that?

The code rurale provided that the repair of the roads, and the repair of dikes, was to be performed by the labor of the commune whenever the commandant of a certain commune or department was doing the work done he would take the inhabitants of the district in which the work was to be made and put them on this work. There were other improper uses made of the corvee under the Haitian administration in the more remote districts frequently it was the custom of the men of a certain neighborhood and put them to work on private property.

Mr. HOWE. You are speaking of times previous to the occupation?

Col. WILLIAMS. The code rurale was adopted, I think, in the early sixties.

Mr. HOWE. And these abuses of the law of the corvee that you speak of, before the American occupation?

Col. WILLIAMS. Before and during.

Mr. HOWE. Was the term "corvee" ever used except in its original sense which you have defined?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; the word had such general currency that it became an expression descriptive of anything a person did not like. An unwelcome reception would be referred to by a Haitian person as a corvee which he must go through. The usual sense, however, in which it was work on the public roads.

Mr. HOWE. Was it used in common parlance for work on the roads, whether that work was being done for wages or whether it was done strictly as a legal corvee?

Col. WILLIAMS. The natives almost always referred to road work as paid or unpaid, as corvee.

Mr. HOWE. Paid road work was not corvee?

Col. WILLIAMS. Was not corvee in any sense.

Mr. HOWE. A previous witness, Gen. Butler, has given a description of the use of the corvee law by the occupation, and of the reconstruction of a considerable road system under the occupation. He brought his description up to the time of his relief. Will you take up the time you became chief of the gendarmerie and tell the committee the operation of the corvee from that time on?

Col. WILLIAMS. The inspiration for the application of the corvee was the definite recognition that the commercial and social regeneration of the people and Haiti called for roads which would bear wheels. Such roads, except in small stretches, hardly existed. The country had a splendid system of roads, uniting nearly all the principal towns. It had fallen into such disrepair that in many places it was difficult to find the traces of the roads.

Mr. HOWE. May I interrupt you? Gen. Butler devoted a good deal of his testimony to informing the committee as to the necessity for roads. Just let me perhaps go over the ground of some of his observations. A few questions we can take up your observations of the corvee from the time you became chief.

First of all what is your view as to the necessity for roads in the old French system of roads?

Col. WILLIAMS. As I say, the commercial and social regeneration of the people called for communication. When we landed in Haiti, the population was homogenous, the north Haitian knew nothing of the south, nor the central Haitian of the southern Haitian, and local interests were so strong because of isolation that there was no national unity that founded upon a common race. I believed that the corvee was necessary. The military aspects of the case also appealed to me because, as I have stated this morning, the most reliable means of getting in touch with what was going on in Haiti was by personal contact. Travel on horseback was utterly impracticable, and some more rapid means of communication must be devised. That, in my mind, however, was not the main object.

Mr. HOWE. As I understand it, your chief military mission was the preservation of law and order, was it not?

Col. WILLIAMS. That was why the gendarmerie was organized.

Mr. HOWE. And when you speak of the roads being a military necessity, the implication is strong, is it not, that roads were necessary for the preservation of law and order by the gendarmerie?

Col. WILLIAMS. For the development of the gendarmerie into a police organization, personal contact with all parts of Haiti was necessary. This could only be facilitated by the construction of roads, but, as I say, the corvee which obtained during most of my tour of duty made it possible.

accidental result of the road building, rather than that which believing them necessary.

your reason for believing them necessary was—

The social and commercial regeneration of Haiti.

Are any distinction to be drawn between work done on roads and work to be done on roads as a communal project?

The law, as I remember it, classified the roads, but the not very well be applied because there are no physical difficulties which might be called a communal road and what might be highway. None of them was passable for wheeled vehicles. Work on the roads under the corvée required also, however, of money, did it not?

Yes. The central Government appropriated, starting, in 1880 a month, and dropping finally, toward the end of my tour, for the repair and upkeep of the roads.

In addition to that, were any of the communal funds available for the construction or repair of roads?

The Federal appropriations were quite insufficient, and a stated money for the work on roads which would immediately regular town, and, in addition to that, a good-roads campaign which led to the receipt of very substantial contributions from the town of Aux Cayes, for instance, in one meeting the people 800 in gold, which is quite a bit of money in Haiti.

That money allotted out in connection with corvée labor?

It was allotted out in connection with corvée labor, or in paid labor, or in connection with both.

Is the case might have been in the particular locality?

Yes.

Is not a fact that during the time when the corvée was in use and construction was also done by paid labor?

Oh, yes.

More than one instance?

Yes. We found it necessary where the work approached real and excellent road work and rock work, to have organized the labor to train and keep together by the only possible means; that

Do you recollect how many days' labor the corvée law exacted in 1880?

Without the code rurale I would not care to state exactly, but it is that it did not cover the entire week, and that when the corvée ended, the corvée, or the workers, were dismissed.

the recruiting, as we might call it, of the corvée more difficult, or less difficult under the occupation?

It became more difficult. The population of Haiti is very varied. Along the coast it is relatively dense; in the interior it is sparse. In those districts where water is available for irrigation it is dense; in the arid stretches it is very sparse. Naturally, the most important roads were those through the more populous districts. In the arid stretches there was little difficulty found in the recruitment of labor for them, but where the road stretches passed through where the population was only a few to the square mile—I mean many—the labor supply did not begin to meet the labor the recruitment became increasingly difficult?

And the recruitment became increasingly difficult, because when men to go well back from the roads into the hills and mountains to get the people to work on these particular stretches. They came less willingly?

and they came less willingly as the work continued.

Was this operation under the corvée conducted by the gen-

Our first attempts at recruitment were conducted largely by the chief of section, or by the agents. This led to so many abuses, and so much bribery, dissatisfaction that we ceased using these agents, and collected these laborers with the gendarmes. These gendarmes were localities to notify the people who were due for road work.

Mr. HOWE. When that recruitment came to be conducted was it conducted without abuse, in your opinion?

Col. WILLIAMS. Knowing the gendarmes, I do not see could have been conducted without abuse, and instances came where the gendarmes had committed abuses.

Mr. HOWE. Will you give us one or two illustrations?

Col. WILLIAMS. In the town of Arcadale the gendarme was for a stretch of road in the immediate vicinity. He went collected the entire personnel of the brickyard, thereby, it impossible to attend the baking, or whatever you call it, the same neighborhood a gendarmerie sent out to collect cor on the roads collected the entire crew of a small coasting say, in the first place, that there has never been a census. The election laws provide for a registration, but the law carried out, so it was impossible, except in a very rough fashion the labor supply in any one district, and as for listing work, so that the work could be properly distributed among who were due to perform it, we tried that, and the only natives thought the registration was a preliminary step to slavery, and they took to the woods. We issued cards to complete their tour of duty. These cards stated, in effect, had completed so many days corvée, and was not available. I am afraid these cards did more harm than good, because with such a card, having had its meaning explained to him to evade work, when he saw a gendarme in that district duty of recruiting, would come forward confidently and sh gendarme. The gendarme's reasoning in that case was, "I do not need to go any further." And he would take the tear it up, and send him on to work.

Mr. HOWE. Did you learn of instances of that happening?

Col. WILLIAMS. I was unable to prove any instances of it, so general as to the practice that I was convinced that it existed.

Mr. HOWE. What effort did you make to put an end to this in the corvée?

Col. WILLIAMS. By the instruction of the gendarmes as to tion to recruiting, by talks with the officers, who realized than I did what the dangers were, and by the punishment whom we could prove guilty of any sort of abuse.

Mr. HOWE. When the gangs were recruited were they harassed instance that you know of?

Col. WILLIAMS. I do not know of a specific instance of There undoubtedly were instances. There were many thousands at a time, and they were working over hundreds of miles of under native foremen, and in some cases they were under commissioned officers who had qualified as road builders after have no doubt that they committed abuses, but there was these laborers. A certain stretch of road would necessitate, I will say, of 100 men. They came and they went without there were no pay rolls, there was no time to make them up, and signed them had we had them, and the identity of individuals absolutely lost, and I have been present when gendarmerie charge of road gangs have attempted to investigate cases of ment, and if we found the witnesses we could not find them we found the gendarme we could not find the witnesses. The way it ran. It was an extremely difficult thing to do.

Mr. HOWE. With the number of white gendarmerie officers was it physically possible to closely supervise the corvée work time keep your territory patrolled and policed?

Col. WILLIAMS. The gendarmerie officers were given such to supervise that it was utterly impossible for them to do work, except in those instances where rock work was being cases the gendarmerie officer was usually present, because of labor could not be trusted with the handling of explosives.

Mr. HOWE. Under the occupation there was far more cor month or per year than had been customary under the H before the occupation; is that correct?

That is correct.

I understood so from Gen. Butler's testimony.

The repair of roads under the Haitian administration was not casual fashion. They would throw a lot of rocks into a fire if it is all it amounted to.

I learned from Gen Butler's testimony the other day that at the repair work under the corvee the gangs were fairly contented to stay and work, and at the outset there was no dissatisfaction on the part of the laborers themselves. Would you concur in that view?

That is absolutely true. There was a campaign for good government. Officials were encouraged to take part in the work, and they were always for what had been accomplished, even though they had done it. The laborers were brought together, and the prohibitions of public dances on work days and cock fighting on Sundays and holidays, was suspended in the labor camps, so that the companionship during the day made the life of the Negro, who is a gregarious creature.

Under the Haitian laws against public dancing and against cock fighting on Sundays and holidays, rigidly enforced by the Haitian government, times?

No; they were not enforced. The laws were on the statute books of the Haitian administration it was simply a means of oppression.

Even during the day drummers were provided so that the work and shovel work, was syncopated. The men were paid a bonus upon the value of the gendarmerie ration, or else were furnished with food not called for by the code.

That contentment lessen and disappear as time went on?

Yes; it lessened very materially. As the road system became more complete it was necessary to call laborers a second time to work on their eyes was a magnificent boulevard, they could not see the object of doing the work.

It became drudgery?

It became drudgery and the old-time attractions disappeared. The continuation of the corvee, in your opinion, act as a hindrance and was that irritation a serious factor to be considered by the occupation?

It would be interesting to note to what extent it was a serious factor. The corvee existed as the sole basis for anti-American propaganda factors which came into action at the same time and place, joined in with the corvee and made a complete whole, based on a very strong anti-American feeling.

When you became chief of the gendarmerie, did you reach any conclusion regarding the corvee system?

I had reached a conclusion regarding the corvee system before my operation. I did not believe in it. I believed that it was a waste of producing results and I did not believe that the people in a sufficiently high cultural state—and I speak now of the peasant benefits which would accrue from their labor. On becoming commander I immediately took under consideration the question.

That was the first time I had been in a position to do so. I consulted with everyone, officers of the gendarmerie, officers of the Haitian Government, the President, and civilians all and the other treaty officials. I wanted to stop it at once, but the things that I had in mind was to disabuse the Haitian from the range of chiefs meant a complete reversal of policy. That, I obtained in their own administration. I wanted them to realize that the Americans meant a continuing policy; that they were one official and then play up the next. In other words, I wanted the administration to appeal to them as impartial, so far as the policy at that time the road system had been projected to a point where it would serve the material and social needs of the people and well, and I thought that the time to stop the corvee would be when it no longer existed.

Is to say—

When the projected road system had been virtually completed that that would be in October and issued an order stopping whatever sort throughout Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. May I call your attention to this letter and a of that order to which you refer?

Col. WILLIAMS. It is nearly three years ago. I think it is

Mr. HOWE. You might take a moment to look through it

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; that is mine.

Mr. HOWE. Was the order issued on the day it was dated

Col. WILLIAMS. No; my recollection is that the order was prior to that, and even before its issuance I had been les ment of corvee and increasing the amount of paid labor.

Mr. HOWE. This letter which I have just shown you, of General Order No. 22, is dated September 2, 1918, and is Order No. 21, dated May 10, 1918. As far as you know, is of General Order 21?

Col. WILLIAMS. I believe that is correct. It sounds right.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to have this order and the order in the record.

 Work stopped, as a matter of fact, on all those roads after General Order No. 22?

Free labor was discontinued on all those roads; corvée labor on those roads.

Matter of fact, did this order have the effect of stopping work entirely in Haiti at that time?

No; it did not.
 You tell the committee, please, about instances of where work continued after the issuance of this order, and what steps were taken to prevent connection?

Shortly after the order had been issued, and, as I said, it was the gendarmerie officers who had operated under the old order. Within a week of its issuance reports came to me from the fact that corvée labor was continuing on the road which we call the Maïssade-Hinche road. I called up on the telephone the commander at the Cape—I had a very good connection—and asked him, he said, "Yes," that corvée labor was continued on this road. It was not a large stretch—because he had not understood that to that particular road, where corvée had always been used, incidental to feeding or paying the men came from communal funds in the funds which I myself allotted from headquarters. It may be noted, may it not, that the Maïssade-Hinche road does not appear on the roads listed in General Order No. 21?

It was not listed. I thought my order was foolproof, but it was not. I believe the instance very well, because the officer who made the mistake was much chagrined over the mistake, and did not care for the trouble he had to go to him over the phone, and protested against it. That is the place where the corvée continued on any of the public roads in the project, or the roads leading into them, so far as I was ever

 These figures, 120112, would be the serial number of a telegram.

I think that is the time and date cipher. We had some time cipher, but just what it was I could not translate it.

The presence of those figures in the telegram would indicate to me that it was an official telegram sent on official gendarmerie business.

Yes. I think we can clear something up there. Maïssade is in the district of Hinche, and so when they referred to the corvée road at Hinche, the way in which Maïssade would be informed would be through Hinche.

Mr. HOWE. Then here is another telegram from the depart-

Col. WILLIAMS. The roads were becoming better daily.

Mr. HOWE. What can you tell us about the vote for the s titution, how it was conducted, and if it was conducted u or under the direction of the gendarmerie?

Col. WILLIAMS. Who decided and when and how it was plebiscite to determine whether or not the constitution shou not know; but when the question came up about holding was but one agency by means of which the mechanics of be carried through. The administrative system of Haiti no uniformity of performance can be expected from the m various parts of the Republic, but the gendarmerie had in mune an American gendarmerie officer who, by this time, h Creole in most cases very well, always sufficiently well t derstood, he had learned the people, he had learned the o way around, and it was proposed, by whom I do not know, t conduct the plebiscite. The President informed me that th of the Government, and I had several discussions with l ministers, notably the minister of the interior, regarding followed. They had no suggestions to make, because such cite was unknown in Haiti, and I had no suggestions to n never heard of one.

However, it was necessary, in my opinion, that a consti should be adopted, and I sent circular letters to all gend forming them that they would soon be called upon to supe people for or against the adoption of the projected constitut it was desirable that this constitution pass, but that in p people they must inform them that while there might be the constitution as published, that it provided for its ow that however they might dislike the constitution, it was be tution at all, and that the stability of the Republic called ment. I do not remember how long before the plebiscite v instructions were given, but there was a considerable ti enable the gendarmerie officers to conduct this campaign, proconstitutional.

other circular letters, furnishing them with arguments for constitution. I allotted from gendarmerie funds a small amount to each gendarmerie district and subdistrict commander for meeting prior to the date on which the vote was to be held; I recollect correctly, that I made some references to earlier campaigns where barbecues were features of the meeting. As the gendarmerie officer mixed with the people, sometimes he freely advocated the adoption of the constitution, told them which would obtain when the vote was taken; and insisted, at that season, that every voter would be perfectly free to vote as he thought, moreover, he might be certain that he would not suffer from a negative vote.

The voting was held on the same day throughout Haiti. At every voting place a gendarmerie officer, except at four or five where I was unable to go, and where I placed marines, whom I borrowed from the army, were thought qualified to act in such a capacity. The gendarmerie was allowed near the voting places but were allowed to vote. The gendarmerie officer, I believe, was directed to remain in the voting place during the voting period. Some question came up about meals, and, I think, I directed the gendarmerie to make arrangements to have their meals brought to the voting places to see that every person who appeared to vote had something to eat on that day, and to see that he received the ballot which he was entitled to. The ballots were roughly printed: "Oui," and "Non." I do not remember if they were of different colors or not; but the voter would be told for a ballot, negative or affirmative, and the gendarmerie the "Yes" votes or affirmative votes were printed on paper of one color, were they not?

I think so.

Did all the "No" votes were printed on the same colored paper?

That is my recollection.

Do you remember whether the "Yes" and the "No" were on different colored paper?

I do not think they were; I do not remember. I may say that the ballots were turned over to me by the minister of the interior or the public printing office and sent by me in sealed packages to the gendarmerie officers who would have to act in the voting places. They remained until the day of the election, when they were turned over to the gendarmerie officials who were directly charged with the conduct of the election. The judge de paix, the local police judge, the local mayor, and the gendarmerie officer. I think that was the composition of the voting committees. Each committee had a destination, except one batch intended for a little while, and the gendarmerie messenger who was to deliver these ballots. His horse, rifle, and stuff but never found him or the ballots. He was murdered or bribed to desert I do not know.

The election was conducted with the utmost order. I spent the day in Port-au-Prince from one balloting place to another, and, so far as I could see, the election was running perfectly smoothly. There was considerable excitement here always is on an election day in Haiti, but from all points of view it was clear that the plebiscite had gone through very nicely, without any serious disturbance. In one town, the town of Aquin, where a drunken row resulted in the death of a man, it was in no way connected with the political situation.

How did the vote come out?

The ballots were counted after the closing of the polls, in the presence of the gendarmerie officer and, after having been counted, were sealed in envelopes. Orders were issued for a recount, in case of a dispute, or their destruction. They were finally all destroyed, I believe. The count was 98,000 in the affirmative and seven hundred and odd in the negative. The figures would seem on the face of them to indicate fraud or at least a matter of fact, they do not indicate anything except a very strong feeling of the Haitian disposition. It was believed by all hands that the election would go through without a large dissenting vote, and this belief was held by the Haitian who wanted to vote negatively, rather than by himself with a losing cause, failed to vote at all. In Cape Haitien, after Port-au-Prince, the number of votes cast, both affirmative and negative, was ridiculous in comparison with the size of the electorate.

Mr. HOWE. So much smaller?

Col. WILLIAMS. So much smaller. The plebiscite I consider those which led up to it, and the phase of operation, and the result to be absolutely and entirely creditable to the gendarmerie. I am proud of the plebiscite. So far as supervision, orders, instruction could go, it was conducted as honestly as anything possible. I have no doubt there were many repeaters, but there was no ballot stuffing, or any such practice.

Mr. HOWE. You endeavored to guard against repeating?

Col. WILLIAMS. I endeavored to guard against repeating; but it did not amount to anything, and it very often occurs in the same name that not only are there many men of the same name but the same name have the same name two days.

Mr. HOWE. What was the attitude of the Haitian courts toward the occupation? How did they administer justice, both civil and criminal? You, Colonel, briefly what your observations were on those matters?

Col. WILLIAMS. The administration of justice in Haiti would have been not a tragedy. The lower-court judges with whom the people were brought in contact and with whom we as policemen were in contact, are, as a class, ignorant, venal, and utterly and entirely corrupt. There are exceptions, of course. I speak generally. The new judges show themselves to be excellent jurists, but their verdicts are in uniformity with which these verdicts are decided in favor of the government, to the case, excite suspicion. The very highest court, the Cour de Cassation, is a body of dignified jurists known for their legal lore ever since the independence, and these men are so wedded to the law, as law, that they have associated themselves from the life of the people. This last year, however, very high esteem, and the most radical political demagogue has accused the court of cassation, as a whole, or its membership, of being corrupt, but they do not qualify to pass upon conditions arising from the occupation. Have you time to hear an instance that is pertinent?

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Col. WILLIAMS. Admiral Caperton, in first landing, found the bank deposited to the credit of the Haitian Government, in the name of the bank, under a million dollars gold. This he seized and directed that it was to be paid out only on his order. In other words, the government was not permitted access to the funds deposited to the credit of the administration of this fund and other funds was conducted in accordance with the lines provided for in the Haitian law. In 1918, I think it was, a lawyer that presented a Government check which called for 75 gourdes, the Haitian monetary unit, for the rental of a building occupied by the Government. The bank had shortly before that time decided that certain classes of payments were to be made in gold. In order to stabilize the exchange which, at that moment, was fluctuating in fashion as to greatly interfere with the conduct of business, the manager who presented the check, refused to accept payment in gold. He went to the courts against the bank, represented in the person of the manager. The bank's defense was simply the production of a copy of Admiral Caperton's order and the subsequent order changing the situation. Of course, other things came into it, but the main defense was the defense of the bank. The court of cassation declined cognizance of the occupation and of Admiral Caperton's order against the plaintiff.

Mr. HOWE. In what amount?

Col. WILLIAMS. To pay the check in gourdes, as the writ for punitive damages, I think, of 100,000 gourdes; I am not sure of the amount. It was, like all punitive damages, for a very large amount.

Mr. HOWE. That being the decree of the court, what happened?

Col. WILLIAMS. Of course, it would be impossible to permit the check to be carried out, because, if so, the whole structure upon which the occupation would fall, so the manager of the bank was told to refuse to carry it out. I think the case is in that status now.

Mr. HOWE. If he did not pay the 75 gourdes and the damages?

Col. WILLIAMS. If he did not. I have mentioned that as a complete detachment of the one reliable court.

Col. WILLIAMS. They did not.

Mr. HOWE. And did the courts, the lower courts, do their part holding the hands of the police, and in maintaining order in Haiti?

Col. WILLIAMS. Speaking generally, when working under the influence of the gendarmerie officer, whom they may have learned and checked by the presence of the ministre publique, they did not feel influences and these checks did not exist. I do not believe they functioned differently from the way in which they functioned years before.

Mr. HOWE. In his testimony the other day Gen. Butler indicated that the way, and with some illustrations, the work which the gendarmerie was doing in straightening out and carrying on the affairs of the communes gave us some statement of your observations on that?

Col. WILLIAMS. I think they once reported that the most desirable results had been accomplished in Haiti by the communal administration under the direct supervision of the gendarmerie officers. Early in the year the minister of the interior, under whose administration the communes worked, issued a letter to all the communes, stating that their financial operations, and some other operations, under the supervision of the gendarmerie officers. This meant a tremendous amount of work. The gendarmerie officers undertook it gladly, and succeeded in materially improving the appearance, the sanitation, and the financial condition of the communes with which they were brought in contact. Some of the revenues were increased a hundredfold. In all cases their work was directed toward the development of civic pride. It would be too much to say that a civic pride, but I could see glimmerings of it in all the towns. The class of Haitians was willing to accept public office in the towns, the books, if crudely, were at least accurately kept. The revenue collection supervised by the gendarmerie officers, and extortion was minimized.

Mr. HOWE. Had extortion been at all prevalent before that?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; extortion in a negative sense. That is, without influence had to pay, and the people with it did not. Payments were made only on the approval of the gendarmerie officers. In Haiti an official made to show results. The Haitians themselves were enthusiastically, and supported, except in the capital where there was a deal of friction, the efforts of the gendarmerie officers for the improvement of conditions in the town. The work was enthusiastically carried out, definitely productive of tangible results of a very important nature.

Mr. HOWE. What kind of results?

Col. WILLIAMS. The town was cleaned up, in the first place. The market places would be built, and rough slaughterhouses, and slaughtering place would be provided, and stray animals were kept out of the streets. The gutters were cleaned out, the people were encouraged to clean their hedges and put up fences and whitewash their houses; saw a very, very rudimentary sort of work was carried out with some operations of the office charged with the collection of vital statistics, supervised to a degree which resulted probably in at least a few births and deaths being registered.

Mr. HOWE. Was that better than previously?

Col. WILLIAMS. That was much better, but mostly the gain was in civic pride, so that towns began to compete with neighboring towns, and saw the beginning of this pride which I considered so essential to Haiti coming to be.

Mr. HOWE. Did this undertaking of the rejuvenation of the town itself create any friction in any quarter?

Col. WILLIAMS. Naturally, tactless officers sometimes tread on the sensitive officials, but those could ordinarily be straightened out. Cases of serious friction that occurred were in the capital, and probably the only town where the municipal revenues are received after.

Mr. HOWE. Will you compare the prison conditions as you found them before the occupation with the prison conditions as they became after the occupation?

Col. WILLIAMS. The condition of the prisons in Haiti when I was there was unspeakable. In the large cities, where they should have been the worst, were probably the worst. There was no provision made for the prisoners, the sanitary arrangements were practically nonexistent.

cept as hardly to serve as a guide in the segregation and in treatment of prisoners. A man with influence or with family could have a cell to himself, from which he would conduct and the people without money or influence would be jammed in the cells that were extremely dirty.

Are the sexes segregated there among the prisoners?

Yes; except in the smaller prisons. The prison reform was of interest, and the officers liked it very much. The prison in Port-au-Prince, I believe, a model for what the prisons of a small country could make, not only made a sanitary, livable prison out of it, but had a workshop which made all the gendarmes' uniforms, all the shoes, and made a part of the shoes and a lot of miscellaneous equipment. There was an automobile repair shop in there, a blacksmith's shop, a brass carpenter's shop that turned out far better furniture than the natives did, and not only were the natives whose term was sufficient to make it worth while taught a trade, but they were paid a salary for their production brought in. The gendarmerie, for instance, made uniforms from the prisoners. It did not commandeer this often the case that a prisoner would be discharged with $150, a considerable sum for a poor Haitian.

Do they receive a fair ration while they were in there?

The ration was as much as we could buy. The Haitian Government, after discussion, allotted 8 cents gold for the rationing of that ration means per day per man?

Per day per man. In normal times this would have been the conditions brought about by the war it was——the World War?

By the European war; it was very difficult, indeed, to make out. We had a scientific ration of 2,400 calories worked out on the calorific value of the native products, and it resulted in a marked increase in the general good health of the population, but I must say that the prison mortality, while less than in the general population, was still very high.

Were the conditions in the prisons where these good conditions prevailed?

Even in the prisons where these good conditions prevailed. In Port-au-Prince we had a medical officer of the gendarmerie who had nothing else to do but look after the prisoners, and we had a hospital, and every care was given them. That was our fault, even there the death rate was too high. Compared with the death rate among people who were at liberty, it was much higher.

There was no way of telling what the death rate among the prisoners was, because the vital statistics were not sufficiently well kept. Do you know whether or not the prison death rate was higher than the death rate outside of the prison?

I have no figures to compare.

Does anybody know what the death rate in Haiti is, then?

Nobody knows what the death rate in Haiti is.

Do you have any means of knowing what the prison mortality was in Haiti?

Before the occupation they had exactly the same prisoners, the same prisons, no sanitary arrangements, no medical care, and no doubt assume that the death rate was very much higher than it is now in the American direction.

What, if any, progress was made in popular education as a result of the occupation?

The Haitian Government spends a large percentage of its revenue on education, and the money is practically all wasted. There is no training of teachers worthy of the name, and therefore the school-teachers are very incompetent. Again I speak generally. The superintendents of the schools are equally incompetent to teach, know nothing about educational methods, and hold their positions largely through political influence. The gendarmerie, or any of the treaty officials, have the legal right to be in the schools, but they are not.

Do the personnel of the teaching force or the school system?

Col. WILLIAMS. The only relations we had with the personnel were two. The monthly report, to which I referred earlier, I voted to the schools, and on which the gendarmerie officer made motions on the conduct of the schools as appeared to him pertinent. In case seemed to warrant it, I would send an excerpt of this to education. I never received any other answer than a flat denial.

Mr. HOWE. But it was a supplementary kind of inspection?

Col. WILLIAMS. It was not an inspection; it was simply another contact with the personnel of the schools was that essential fact that the gendarmerie delivered the cash, the monthly salary to that teacher, and before paying him or her, required him to sign a little slip which certified that he or she had conducted his class as such and such a sort of teacher during the month or portion of the month.

Mr. HOWE. How did that work out?

Col. WILLIAMS. That worked out to this extent that the teachers were paid on the school days during school hours, but as to their compensation for the month, I paid off a number myself, resulted like this. On the personnel, I paid off a number myself, resulted like this. When a teacher came forward to receive her check, which was not more than $2 for the month, and she could not sign the receipt. I asked her to sign, she said that she did not have to write; that she was a teacher. I could see for myself, if I read her ticket. That sort of thing was common.

Mr. HOWE. There were really a number of illiterate teachers?

Col. WILLIAMS. There were illiterate teachers.

Mr. HOWE. And did the American occupation have any legal change that?

Col. WILLIAMS. It had no legal authority whatsoever, and that was the reason because of it.

Mr. HOWE. Was the occupation responsible for building schools? Gen. Butler told us something about that, but was that work that he left?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes; a small sum allotted originally by the Government, when he had control of certain disbursements, permitted of what we liked to call model schoolhouses in several of the communes. With this money we put up a substantial building of the type, with a center partition to separate the sexes and provide for sanitary facilities.

Mr. HOWE. Could the school system be improved without a change in the constitution?

Col. WILLIAMS. The school system could not be improved; it had to be done over again.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Haitian Government spend a substantial amount of money on it?

Col. WILLIAMS. A very creditable proportion of the revenue of the Government has gotten what it is.

Mr. HOWE. So its reconstruction is necessary?

Col. WILLIAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. HOWE. And the treaty officials and the Marine Corps and the Navy did not have the legal right to bring about any such reconstruction?

Col. WILLIAMS. We had no legal right. We were all interested in it, but we believe that one treaty official—who it was I am not sure, but I think it was the financial adviser—persuaded the Haitian Government to contract a qualified American educator. He came to Haiti under the name of a school reform. His program was utterly impracticable and of little weight. He then came around and made such reformation as was material at hand, but being engaged in a purely advisory position, he was never able to put across any of his recommendations, and without accomplishing anything.

Mr. HOWE. There would be necessarily a long wait before the school system could be supplied? They would first have to be educated, would they not?

Col. WILLIAMS. There must be a normal school; there must be a normal teaching personnel.

Mr. HOWE. You will have to wait for your first crop of teachers?

Col. WILLIAMS. Or else import them.

there ever been any financial irregularity attributable to the in the administration of these communal funds or the paymasters that you know of?

The only two cases when an American has been even suspected in connection with the public funds were these: A sergeant in charge of some work—I do not know just what it was—his own use something in the neighborhood of $20, I think, entitled for that. The other concerns the seizure of $1,000,000 ton. It was currently believed that Admiral Caperton, when with him that part of the $1,000,000 which he had not turned over.

Currently believed by whom?

It was a matter of gossip in Port au Prince, and people who were—several did—told me they were eminently satisfied with the United States Government in shooting Admiral Caperton and the other for the part they had played in this.

I believed them equally well informed on both heads of the matter—as to Admiral Caperton's speculation and his later violent

I can not answer that. But, seriously, there has never been the slightest hint of a suspicion on the part of any Haitian administration of finances.

Butler has told us of what efforts were made under the circumstances of demonstrating agricultural possibilities down there. You are chief of the gendarmerie during that time, I believe. Were those efforts, or what efforts that were being made, continued during your time as chief?

No; they were not, except unofficially by individual officers and instances, being farmer boys who had enlisted, attempted to do something about better methods, particularly in the preparation of the soil.

Were the early efforts toward instruction in agriculture by the occupation?

We attempted to raise potatoes and improve the standard of living in Haiti, but our efforts were not successful.

In 1917 the constituent assembly was prorogued. Did you have anything to do with that or any direct knowledge of the process?

I was Gen. Butler's assistant at the time, but except from his knowledge and what he told me myself I know nothing.

Did you take no active part in that yourself?

I had no active part in closing it.

There was a similar prorogation in 1916.

The key, however, which I believe has become prominent in the matter, came into my possession.

What key to the chamber?

The key to the chamber. I had a great deal of difficulty in getting the Haitian minister to accept it. I did not want it. I have finally persuaded him to take it.

Did they get it into your hands?

I was assistant to Gen. Butler, and many details fell to me.

Gen. Butler hand you the key?

I do not know, sir.

Do you not know how you got it?

I do not remember how I got it.

There was a similar occurrence in 1916, the prorogation of the assembly. Do you have any direct knowledge of that, or take any part in it?

In your opinion, what would be the effect of an order abolishing temporarily while this committee is in Haiti investigating?

It would permit every liar in Haiti to go to the limit in his

Do you think it would do real harm?

I think it would do a great deal of harm.

Do you think it would endanger lives?

No.

The lives of our marines?

No.

Senator ODDIE. In what respect would it do harm?

Col. WILLIAMS. As I mentioned before, the Haitian is a what he hears he believes. The raising of martial law, which is stated except for the suppression of untrue newspaper articles, the publication of anything that any Haitian wished to say, undoubtedly—

Senator ODDIE. Say or print?

Col. WILLIAMS. Or print. It would result in a mushroom papers that would all find circulation, and what the Haitian papers he would accept as gospel. I can see that no useful gained.

Senator ODDIE. Would it have any effect on the testimony of the committee?

Col. WILLIAMS. I do not think so. On the witness who would you—and I take it that your visit there will permit only of the better qualified witnesses—the effect would be slight. A high class, does not fear punishment or imprisonment, especially of martyrdom goes with it. I do not believe that the better class would feel honestly that they would suffer because of any testimony disparaging it might be, that they gave before the committee. If, ship, it must be understood, so far as I was able to exercise, I criticised most of it—was directed only against the publication of libelous as a marine understands it.

Senator ODDIE. Untrue?

Col. WILLIAMS. Untrue. There was not the slightest attempt at criticism. That was fully discussed by me in a conference with the representatives of all the papers in the capital. That interview was printed in extenso, and I do not remember a single instance where were suppressed or their editors punished for printing a criticism. It could be even read as being truthful. I was one of the few French, and not only was a good deal of suppressing done but reading was done by me. I tried to get through all the papers, and was not difficult because there were only a few.

Mr. HOWE. To what extent would the existence of military law be affected by the suspension of martial law?

Col. WILLIAMS. It would depend upon the phraseology modifying the law or suspending it in whole or in part.

Mr. HOWE. It would not suspend the laws of courts-martial.

Col. WILLIAMS. If martial law were lifted without qualification, it would stop the operation of the military courts; I mean the provost marshal's courts.

Mr. HOWE. And that would leave only the civil Haitian courts.

Col. WILLIAMS. The civil Haitian courts.

Mr. HOWE. Are those, as they are now constituted, adequate for the administration of justice during the occupation?

Col. WILLIAMS. They are not adequate for the administration of justice so far as justice is involved in the adjudication of cases where the military or its representatives are a party.

Senator ODDIE. There is one more question I wanted to ask you with what I asked you before. If martial law were abolished, and our marines were still there, do you think there would be any sort of vengeance being worked against them?

Col. WILLIAMS. No; the Haitian is not an assassin. I think that in Port au Prince, a city of 100,000 people, there were not more than six or six murders.

Senator ODDIE. What would be the effect of suspending martial law temporarily while this committee is investigating matters in Haiti? Would there be vengeance being taken on the marines and result in harm to the Haitians who would then be unarmed, as far as the law is concerned?

Col. WILLIAMS. I do not believe that for a period of two or three months suspension of martial law would result in any crimes or violence.

Mr. HOWE. If the question referred to a longer period would the result be the same?

Col. WILLIAMS. No; an indefinite suspension of martial law would be extremely difficult the working of the occupation.

Senator ODDIE. If conditions remain as they are in regard to the occupation, do you think that it would mean any trouble in getting fair and unbiased statements from the witnesses?

I do not. The class of Haitians whom I assume you will have never had any reason to fear the operation of martial law, and they realize as well as we ourselves place on its application.

In connection with these questions in regard to martial law, I put to the witness, Col. Williams, regarding the lifting of martial law during the presence of the committee in Haiti, and I would seem to take their origin in the request or grow out of which I made last week or 10 days ago for the temporary lifting of martial law during the presence of the committee in Haiti, and I to appear on the record, in order that there may be no question in this connection, that the request was for the lifting of martial law during the period of the visit of the committee to Haiti, in any event, as I understand the present plans, above two days less than that.

Mr. SPEAR. We were firing as we ran down into the valley at us.

Mr. HOWE. The Cacos?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; we chasing them up the hill, consequently reversed; we were in the valley and they were on the hill with the men—I do not know how badly they were wounded or whether they were faking, these Cacos. I rushed ahead and grabbed the machine gun at that time—the Lewis gun—and detailed two of my men to guard it. That left me with three men.

Mr. HOWE. Let me get this correct in my own mind, as far as the hill had at the time that you took charge of the Lewis gun yourself, you were in command in your advance beyond the point where lay the Cacos who were struck down in your opening volley; is that right?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you were pursuing the others?

Mr. SPEAR. Pursuing the others.

Mr. HOWE. Up the hill?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; sending two of my men back to watch my rear.

Mr. HOWE. Having at that time passed over and beyond the top of the Cacos?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Go ahead, please.

Mr. SPEAR. One of the men came forward and said, "What are you doing with these wounded fellows?" And I said, "Go back and stay with them. Do not bother with the wounded men."

Mr. HOWE. How many Cacos were there in the forces opposed to you at that time?

Mr. SPEAR. About 100.

Mr. HOWE. Is that an estimate or an actual count?

Mr. SPEAR. An estimate.

Mr. HOWE. How did you estimate them?

Mr. SPEAR. Our intelligence department had said that there were about 100 and I was to attack; between 80 and 100, they said.

Mr. HOWE. Were you able to judge by the volume of their firing that there were numerous or not?

Mr. SPEAR. No; except that they were unusually skilled riflemen. They were coming very close to my men all the time. Ordinarily they would not.

Mr. HOWE. At the time you gave that direction to your men to go to the rear, where were the rest of the enemy with you?

Mr. SPEAR. They had almost completely surrounded us and were coming up on the hills and went around us.

Mr. HOWE. Was there firing from front and both sides?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Had there been any firing from the rear?

Mr. SPEAR. I do not know right at that time whether there was any firing from the rear. We could see them getting behind us.

Mr. HOWE. You could see these people?

Mr. SPEAR. Once in a while a flash through the trees.

Mr. HOWE. You say you could see them working around the hill in that position, some of them?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How were these Cacos armed?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, those we killed were armed with rifles, some with machine guns.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see arms in the hands of any of the Cacos who were running?

Mr. SPEAR. No; but I could see them shooting.

Mr. HOWE. Could you hear the bullets coming near by?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And were you able to judge how near the bullets were coming?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, some of them hit right between my men and they could see the dust fly.

Mr. HOWE. How long did this action last?

Mr. SPEAR. About an hour.

Mr. SPEAR. No; we went back; we could not get to the other side.

Mr. HOWE. Did you make a report of that engagement?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Reporting the casualties to the enemy?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. In that report did you make any mention of your wounded?

Mr. SPEAR. No; I did not suppose that was necessary.

Mr. HOWE. You counted those as dead?

Mr. SPEAR. I had to kill them; I could not leave them there.

Mr. HOWE. Had you at the time or have you now, any doubt or hesitation in giving that order?

Mr. SPEAR. Absolutely none—no doubt.

Mr. HOWE. You believe you were justified?

Mr. SPEAR. I certainly was.

Mr. HOWE. And if you had not given that order and the men had not been killed or hurt any of your men, would you have then felt responsible?

Mr. SPEAR. I would have felt responsible and I would have been court-martialed. It was my duty to bring my five men home.

Mr. HOWE. And your reason for that feeling is that this was a critical situation in the field?

Mr. SPEAR. A critical situation in the field.

Mr. HOWE. The circumstances of which justified the killing of the wounded men?

Mr. SPEAR. Absolutely.

Mr. HOWE. When you were addressing the court-martial in the field, did you have any other instances of the killing of wounded men?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. That was the basis of your remark?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And the sole basis of your remark?

Mr. SPEAR. The sole basis.

Mr. HOWE. Where I left off quoting your remark goes on, whether a treacherous guide need expect a trial if made prisoner or any occurrence in mind when you made that remark?

Mr. SPEAR. Not to my personal knowledge.

Mr. HOWE. That remark is, in general, correctly quoted by me?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What caused you to make that remark? Have you any other reason to give of it further than that you made it?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; I understand that a lieutenant in the 8th Infantry was betrayed by his guide one morning and I do not know whether he was killed on the head and killed him or shot him or what, but something doing there.

Mr. HOWE. On the spot you heard it?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. But you have no further knowledge than what I have just quoted, is that correct?

Mr. SPEAR. That is it; and if the guide did betray him, I am perfectly justified; there was no other way he could do with him.

Mr. HOWE. That is to say, out in the field and in the presence of the enemy?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; you understand we were out in the field.

Mr. HOWE. Your views are limited by that circumstance, and you expressed them, of the treatment of unfaithful guides and of the enemy in the field?

Mr. SPEAR. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. I will continue the quotation: "I merely mention that the men show that marines in the field live in this atmosphere and that they are surprised to receive orders to kill a man. I myself have been surprised to see forces in the field to which prisoners were sent and which were notified me—we had orders to execute. The captain detailed to guard the prisoner, which he did without question, close beside him."

you will give us your recollection, I will, with your permission, make as precise as possible the time and the circumstance.

was, I think, in May or June sometime that I was in the command of Capt. Edwards. was 1919?

Edwards?

you know Capt. Edwards's first name?

I do not.

you know what outfit his command belonged to?

I think he commanded the One hundredth Company at that time.

One hundredth Company?

believe so; yes.

you certain of that?

sir.

that is your best recollection?

sir.

you continue what you were going to say?

was in May or June, 1919, I think, and Capt. Edwards and I were at this town, Petit Fond, he, of course, being superior in rank there at 10-day intervals, and with relief sent out and prisoners out there.

at was that date?

it was May or June; I could not say which.

how long before your relief at Petit Fond had you been with me, you see, a part of the time I was in command at Petit Fond of the time Capt. Edwards. If you will state your question to answer what you are trying to get at.

said some time ago in your testimony that you left for the agent from the One hundredth Company?

your departure was very soon after your arrival in Haiti, is it not?

the next day.

was Capt. Edwards the commanding officer of that detachment you went?

I, in the meantime I was out at this little town I spoke about, command of the gendarmerie, Sauteau. Then I came right back with Capt. Edwards after that.

was your superior officer?

sir.

occasionally performed duty separate from him, did you not,

; he sent me out on patrols, of course.

you reported back to him after those patrols?

reported to him; yes.

at the time of your relief you were under Edwards's orders the time of my relief from Haiti, you mean?

at the time of your relief at Petit Fond.

yes, sir.

how many men did you have there? Were you there under orders?

forty-three, about.

those were all marines?

marines, except our guides.

and the marines were not on gendarmerie duty there?

sir.

and neither were you?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And neither was Capt. Edwards?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Now, go ahead please.

Mr. SPEAR. Our relief brought these prisoners out, and I saw Capt. Edwards saw me and said, "You are responsible for this."

Mr. HOWE. How many were there?

Mr. SPEAR. Two.

Mr. HOWE. Do you remember the names of the prisoners?

Mr. SPEAR. No; they were Negroes.

Mr. HOWE. Haitians?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes. He detailed me to guard the prisoners. I was to shoot one of these fellows, but you are responsible. Watch him. He tried to try to get away from you." So I very carefully walked right up to the way, personally myself, as a guard.

Mr. HOWE. All the way from where to where?

Mr. SPEAR. To the place I am going to tell you about, and I saw a place there, and he detailed a man to execute this prisoner, and I personally witness it, he did execute the prisoner.

Mr. HOWE. What is your basis for saying he did execute the prisoner? Did you observe there from which you concluded he executed the prisoner?

Mr. SPEAR. I heard the rifle shot, and when I went back the prisoner was lying low there dead.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know any of the other circumstances—other men were in the firing squad?

Mr. SPEAR. One man.

Mr. HOWE. How do you know that?

Mr. SPEAR. I guess the captain told me afterwards—no; he told me the fellow away. I saw the marine taking the Negro out.

Mr. HOWE. You saw the marine taking the Negro out?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. To the point where shortly afterwards the shot was fired?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. The sound of the shot came from?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And the marine was taking the Negro out in the place where you subsequently saw the Negro dead?

Mr. SPEAR. There was no question about it; he shot him and he was concerned.

Mr. HOWE. Is there any question but that he shot him and he was concerned? Capt. Edwards?

Mr. SPEAR. I could not say. I did not hear the captain give the order.

Mr. HOWE. The captain, however, told you he had ordered the execution?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did he tell you on whose authority those orders were given?

Mr. SPEAR. No; he did not.

Mr. HOWE. These two prisoners were brought out by this man?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Where were they brought from, do you know?

Mr. SPEAR. Mirebalais, I think.

Mr. HOWE. Do you recollect who was in command, what man was in command at Mirebalais at that time?

Mr. SPEAR. No; I can not. If you can refresh my memory I can remember. He was a major in the Marine Corps, a colonel in the army. I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. How could you refresh your recollection?

Mr. SPEAR. I believe if somebody mentioned his name I could tell you he was the man or not; I do not know. He wore a mustache.

Mr. HOWE. Have you with you or at home any notes, correspondence, material in which you could hope to find the name of this man?

Mr. SPEAR. No; I could not—I could not tell.

Mr. HOWE. What were the names of the officers coming out with the force to Petit Fond?

Mr. SPEAR. Capt. Brecker or Becker, I do not know which.

Mr. HOWE. Brecker or Becker?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

you have any conversation with Capt. Edwards about this?

that night, yes; after we were back in Mirebalais.

at the return of the second prisoner?

it was that?

it is fair to assume that he learned that he had mistaken his yes; that is the fact.

sir; except hearsay, you understand, as I told you.

Mr. HOWE. By hearsay you refer to rumors of similar occurrences.

Mr. SPEAR. Well, I would not say similar. I have heard of men being executed. I suppose they were bandits; I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. Did the rumor which you heard go into particulars as to those executions were before or after the trial?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir; I do not know whether this particular case of Edwards was before or after a trial either.

Mr. HOWE. Did you ever inquire of Capt. Edwards whether he was authorized after trial?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir; I never asked any questions.

Mr. HOWE. Do you recollect whether the Capt. Edwards referred to was named Thomas L. Edwards?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Have you in mind anything about the commandant of Mirebalais, the major, acting as colonel in the gendarmerie, or the committee to identify that commanding officer?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, Gen. Catlin was the commanding officer at that time.

Mr. HOWE. Had you heard of any previous service in the gendarmerie that major had performed?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; Capt. Edwards was under him in Mexico.

Mr. HOWE. In Mexico?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. At what time in Mexico did you hear?

Mr. SPEAR. About 1914, was it, when they had the trouble in San Cruz that time?

Mr. HOWE. Are there any other particulars that you can give of the commanding officer by which we could identify him?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, if I could think of the name of that district of the gendarmerie that was there, I could identify him by him, but I cannot think of his name.

Mr. HOWE. There was a lieutenant of gendarmerie at Mirebalais?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; the commander of that district there, the district headquarters for this major.

Mr. HOWE. If you should think of any other circumstances that could identify the commanding officer there, while you are thinking, please speak of it.

Mr. SPEAR. I will.

Mr. HOWE. Now, as to Capt. Edwards, had you any information at that morning as to his present whereabouts?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What was the last you saw of Capt. Edwards?

Mr. SPEAR. I saw him in Port au Prince just before the trial.

Mr. HOWE. The trial of Johnson?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Which was on the 26th of June, 1919?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you have not heard from him or seen him since; that correct; Edwards, I mean?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any subordinate of this commandant of Mirebalais whose name you recollect?

Mr. SPEAR. Maj. Pearce.

Mr. HOWE. Was it the same Maj. Pearce who was called Johnson court-martial case?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Maj. McCLELLAN. That is Jacob M. Pearce.

Mr. HOWE. J. M. Pearce was the witness in the Johnson case; one to whom you have reference?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Where was Maj. Pearce stationed at the time of these prisoners; do you know?

Mr. SPEAR. I can not remember the name of the town; I think it was some miles from Mirebalais.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether he was in Mirebalais at the east at the time when you got back to Mirebalais with the prisoners?

Mr. SPEAR. I have no idea.

Did you, as counsel for the accused in that case, believe Lieut. Brokaw was lawful?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. You believed that Lieut. Brokaw, then, had these one or more Haitians to be shot without trial?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir; I meant lawful as regards to the private.

Mr. HOWE. You mean lawful authority to the privates?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. HOWE. For their actions?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you believe it was lawful in the marine listed man to obey the order of a superior officer to execute trial?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir. I do not want to get in an unfair Angell. I mean that a private should always obey the order officer under all conditions. That is what I meant to say to Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that the belief which you have is the duty of enlisted men to obey orders of a superior circumstances was common in the marine personnel in Haiti?

Mr. SPEAR. Absolutely.

Mr. ANGELL. And irrespective of whether or not the order, instance to which we have just been referring, was that prisoner lawfully convicted, should be executed?

Mr. SPEAR. It was the duty of a subordinate to carry out superior.

Mr. ANGELL. And that was the common and usual belief personnel in Haiti?

Mr. SPEAR. In a military force.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring now to the instance of the shooting prisoners at the time of the attack to which you have just say whether or not, in your belief, the shooting of wounded similar circumstances was or was not common in engagements in Haiti?

you passed by them on your way up to leave this collection of the hill after the Cacos?

; passed over them, you might say, and went right on. There was a great deal of confusion in this whole thing between a Caco and a bandit, and I can not understand it. A Caco is a man in the field, a bandit, or whatever you want to call him. I do not know the difference. They were the fellows who were fighting us. They were the worst of them were called just Haitians.

Was it your understanding of the general situation in Haiti, the instances referred to, that our forces there were engaged in fighting against the Cacos in the hills?

And that the rules and customs of regular modern warfare prevailed entirely.

What respects did they not prevail?

Well, those Cacos were very savage men, and if they had captured him they would probably have skinned him alive.

Did you ever know of such circumstances?

I never knew of such.

Did you ever hear of any such instances?

It was reported to me that one of the native guides was found by the road one morning in pieces this long.

Mean cut into pieces?

; I knew what to expect from them.

That was hearsay, so far as you were concerned?

; of course, I had viewed those Cacos, too, at close range. I had seen a lot of men they are.

Did you never know, did you, of any formal declaration of war by the United States against Haiti, or the bandits of Haiti?

Yes, sir.

There was none, as far as you knew?

I do not know anything about it. I did whatever I was told.

What were the general instructions that you had upon arrival in Haiti for operations against the Cacos?

I had no instructions. I was sent out with the other officers to take charge.

What was your understanding, derived from your conversation with the officers and instructions from them, as to the attitude to be taken toward the Cacos?

The attitude, from instructions and observations, was that we were to kill the Cacos, and the quicker the better; but to be very careful not to hurt the natives. When I went out to this town to take command, they were regardless of any belief that I held toward the black race, and I went and got to the chief magistrate and take him into consultation.

What were you doing what?

I was more taking command of the town, and work with him, and was more sympathetic toward peaceful men. But all Cacos were to be killed. I was more sympathetic toward peaceful men. But all Cacos were to be killed. Warfare, as I understood it.

Did I understand you correctly to say that you went out into the field after you reached Haiti?

Yes, sir.

And what general instruction was given, if any, in your case or in the case of those that you know of, to newly arrived officers in Haiti, regarding the conditions there?

Well, I do not just exactly remember the distinction between the general way of doing things, but I knew that the thing was to kill these cacos. They figured there were from 3,000 to 7,000 of them, and the quicker we got them killed the better the whole thing would be off. They had devastated this country where I was.

What was the substance of the instructions you had, or the instructions which you acquired, upon your arrival in Haiti and during the time of your duty there?

Mr. ANGELL. And you believe that was the general under general instructions that were given at that time to newly a yourself?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there any general or specific instruction to your brother officers about the time of your arrival there, member, regarding detailed conditions in Haiti; that is to condition, the social condition of the people, their attitude government and toward the American occupation; in other words, which might assist you in dealing with the people and performance there?

Mr. SPEAR. No; no more than what I picked up from C expect he was my tutor; I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. He was your commanding officer?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. In other words, there were no detailed instructions in Haiti given to newly arrived officers?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. How long after your arrival were you placed in town or subdistrict or other area?

Mr. SPEAR. Two days; but it was supposed to be a peaceable

Mr. ANGELL. Was that a fairly common practice; that newly arrived officers command duty in the country within a very short time they arrived?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir; I do not think it was. They picked newly of lieutenants to take command of that town. I was senior first lieutenant there.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether many or most of the newly they arrived in Haiti, spoke French?

Mr. SPEAR. Very few of them. It is a kind of a patois the Frenchman can understand it.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring now to the second instance of which morning, did I understand you correctly to say that prior to this one man whose body you saw shortly after the rifle shot, said to you that the man was to be shot?

Mr. SPEAR. About two hours before that. I was to guard ready to shoot him.

Mr. ANGELL. Capt. Edwards said nothing to you, either before or afterwards, as to whether or not the man had been condemned to death?

Mr. SPEAR. No; he said nothing.

Mr. ANGELL. You had no knowledge on that subject?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. How far had the man been brought under guard edge, for his execution?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, they sent him out there. They made him out to us. I do not know how far it was.

Mr. ANGELL. Out from Mirebalais?

Mr. SPEAR. Sixteen miles or so, I think, or whatever it was.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you believe that this man had been lawfully arrested and sentenced to death?

Mr. SPEAR. I do not know anything about it. I believe he was.

Mr. ANGELL. And that was sufficient justification?

Mr. SPEAR. I was not in it.

Mr. ANGELL. No; I am asking merely for your belief. Were you not in it.

Mr. SPEAR. Well, it was claimed they found this man with a I think he should have been shot right there.

Mr. HOWE. Before being taken prisoner?

Mr. SPEAR. Before being taken prisoner.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it your belief that the decision to shoot this man was made by Capt. Edwards on his responsibility, or came from

Mr. SPEAR. Came from higher up.

Mr. ANGELL. There is no doubt about that in your mind?

Mr. SPEAR. No.

Mr. ANGELL. You said that you had heard rumors of peace. Were those rumors common among the marine personnel in What do you mean by common? Do you mean hundreds of them, or ones?

Well, how current were such rumors? How often did you come to, I suppose I heard it four times while I was in Haiti.

What rumor?

The rumor that people were being executed.

And, illegally?

Right, I will make it specific. What were the rumors which were heard about people being executed?

I had heard that they had executed people, that was all.

Do you mean lawful executions as the result of trial and conviction to death, or unlawful executions?

Well, they did not state that to me. I could not tell, you see.

Were these rumors those of the death of Cacos in battle?

I do not know; I do not think so. It was after they were captured were executions, then, of prisoners?

I suppose they were prisoners, yes; that is, I do not say that of my own knowledge, you understand.

Referring now to the Johnson court-martial record and to the testimony of the accused, Walter E. Johnson, and particularly 38, which appears on page 21, I want to read you the question as follows:

It is your duty to kill Cacos if taken prisoner and if you recognize American forces in Haiti are in war against these Cacos. I am authorized to shoot a Cacos."

That testimony is this, Johnson's own testimony?

Johnson's own testimony; yes.

Questions asked by his own counsel?

Yes; questions asked by his own counsel.

That would be question 38 by yourself?

Yes; that would be your own question. Do you regard that as having just read to you in answer to the question put by yourself to Johnson, as a fair reflex on the attitude of the marine toward the Cacos?

I said you had not seen the action of the convening authority of the court,

yes, sir. I left Haiti very shortly after the court-martial?

One week after.

Are the findings of the convening authority are not, under the law, to the accused's counsel, are they?

That I know of.

They certainly were not referred to you?

Do you know the action of the court must be reviewed by the convening authority?

Yes, sir.

And that even the prisoner himself, or the accused himself, is kept advised of the action of the court?

Yes, sir.

Will the convening authority has acted on the court?

Yes, sir. I left Haiti on what date, about?

About the 2d of July.

Was the action of the reviewing authority which was read by Mr. Johnson on July 18, 1919. You certainly were out of the country at that time?

Yes, sir.

Did a copy of this was not later furnished to you?

Yes, sir.

Did you answer some questions on cross-examination as to the duties of the officers by the orders of their superior officers?

Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You know that to be a general rule of military discipline, our Marine Corps. in our Army, or Navy?

Mr. SPEAR. A fundamental rule.

Mr. HOWE. And not one peculiar entirely to the service of the military service?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You know, of course, that as a matter of law it is for a subordinate to carry out an illegal order of a superior.

Mr. SPEAR. No; I did not know that.

Mr. HOWE. But you do know, or it was your feeling when you were an officer, that you were to presume the legality and authority of your superiors?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did you yourself, when Capt. Edwards directed the execution of a prisoner until he should be executed, inquire of Capt. Edwards whether the prisoner had been duly convicted and sentenced, or ask him about the circumstances of the proceedings leading up to that?

Mr. SPEAR. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Why did you not?

Mr. SPEAR. I expect I would have got whacked on the head.

Mr. HOWE. It was not customary for you to question the orders of your superiors, is that it?

Mr. SPEAR. Certainly not.

Mr. HOWE. By your answers you did not mean to state that you were being clearly aware of the illegality of the orders of a superior, and yet you were satisfied to carrying them out?

Mr. SPEAR. I do not think it is for him to judge whether it is or is not.

Mr. HOWE. You made some answers about the shooting of the prisoners. You would not say, would you, that the killing of wounded prisoners was all and any circumstances?

Mr. SPEAR. Of course not.

Mr. HOWE. You answered that the shooting of wounded prisoners was in your opinion, under circumstances similar to the circumstances of the shooting, you gave your orders to shoot these wounded?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did you hear of many cases of similar circumstances, such as the detachment of 5 men and 1 officer surrounded by 100 Cacos firing at them?

Mr. SPEAR. In the district next to me there were 33 men and 1 officer. The others until their ammunition ran out. I think they killed them. I know whether they killed any of the wounded, or what they did. They were outnumbered all the time.

Mr. HOWE. Is it your opinion that the responsibility is on the commanding officer in a unit in battle under those circumstances to take care of the safety of his men?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And if in his opinion the killing of wounded prisoners would remove an element of danger to his command, it would be his order to do it?

Mr. SPEAR. It certainly would.

Mr. HOWE. But you would say, would you not, that each case, under such circumstances, must be judged on its own circumstances?

Mr. SPEAR. Of course.

Mr. HOWE. Entirely?

Mr. SPEAR. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. You would agree with me, would you not, that in such circumstances when it would be clearly the duty of a commanding officer to kill a wounded enemy?

Mr. SPEAR. Certainly. They had their rifles there yet. We took their rifles with us or take their arms away from them, or use them.

Mr. HOWE. How many men would be a proper prisoner of war?

Mr. SPEAR. I should say—

Mr. HOWE. The minimum, the least that you could get along with?

Mr. SPEAR. It would depend upon the circumstances. One man could lick 10 of our men if he got hold of them with a knife.

Mr. HOWE. Let us assume the circumstances that existed in the case of the Cacos.

Mr. SPEAR. They are powerful men.

many men would it require safely to guard two wounded of 100 armed and unwounded Cacos?

ould say two or three men.

Mr. SPEAR. Well, I think so. Some thought they ought to deal with them than I thought. I was a kind of middle-of-the-road.

Mr. ANGELL. What have you in mind when you say some ought to go a little stronger?

Mr. SPEAR. Well, some of them thought the warfare should be that there should be more troops there, and harder fighting and get rid of them; kill all the Cacos.

Mr. ANGELL. What were the beliefs of the others who, from the inference of your answer right, had the view to the other direction from you?

Mr. SPEAR. No; I do not know of anyone, except some of the officers or two of being more partial to the native troops than his own troops; that is what I mean.

Mr. ANGELL. Generally speaking, you think your opinion is representative of the general opinion of the other marine officers on these questions?

Mr. SPEAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as you can remember, did you or any of the Marines in Haiti believe that the application and enforcement of the law contributed to the numbers of the Cacos operating, or that the Marines were operating, or to the attitude of these Cacos?

F LIEUT. COL. ALEXANDER S. WILLIAMS, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS—Resumed.

Chairman, at the end of the committee meeting last Thursday, the direct examination of Col. Williams, and I would suggest l has any questions, that he proceed to ask them. There may of the examination, some points that may come up that the counsel may want to further question Col. Williams about, at to the end.

Very well; you may take the witness, Mr. Angell.

the beginning of your direct testimony the other day, Colonel, member correctly, that you could remember only two instances prisoners without trial, and you then went on to say that you s, except where action by way of investigation or disciplinary ie in your own hands. That is substantially correct?

That is substantially correct.

as your position, and were your duties in Haiti such that been other reports made of killing of prisoners without trial, have come to you personally?

It is, of course, possible that reports of killings were made to and those subordinates did not inform me. Of that I can not nswered the question you have quoted, I answered it in that o exclude the Lovoie, Williams, and Lang allegations.

o, and that the thought was expressed that your presence as gendarmerie might influence the native witnesses to reticence. Why you felt that would be the result of your presence?

I do not remember whether or not Gen. Catlin stated persons to be excluded, but I knew that it was because he thought would have a tendency to restrict the witnesses' testimony. Gen. Catlin as to this being a fact. I believed that my presence as witness in testifying, because it was perfectly evident to even that the final responsibility for misconduct on the part of must fall on the responsible senior, and that to a certain extent the investigation and to any charges which might be additional witness in that case, looking to his own future, might be antagonizing a man who, with the exception of Gen. Catlin, the biggest man he had seen.

Speaking generally and without reference to that particular instance, do you or do you not think that it was the Haitian population generally that the ultimate responsibility by the gendarmerie must, in the last analysis, come back to the titular head of the force?

To what extent a peasant could work that out in his mind I think the better-educated Haitian was fully able to come to such a conclusion.

I presume in such an outstanding matter as the allegation of Williams that the peasant might be able to trace the case, for example, the history of the later phase of the corvée work that the Haitian population generally regarded the senior officer of the gendarmerie, and ultimately the brigade commander and the American occupation in general, as responsible for the corvée law, and, in a general sense, responsible for whatever occurred under it?

The Haitians generally, both ignorant and educated, seemed unable to make out in the many conversations I held with them to hold the occupation—by which they meant the gendarmerie, treaty officials, etc.—jointly responsible with the Haitian adverse corvée. It was well known that the corvée, in its inception and use, had the tacit approval, at least, of the Haitian Government.

Do you have any personal knowledge, Colonel, of the Hamilton case—the case of Capt. G. D. Hamilton?

No personal knowledge whatsoever. I believe that happened in detachment; at least the development of the case did.

Do you have any knowledge of the general court-martial of one

I do not think I did.

There has been just one passing reference to that somewhere in my testimony, but I do not think we have any specific testimony mainly, the court-martial record is not in the record before this. I do not recall any mention of it.

There is just one. I am trying to find out what it is. The color of it.

I never heard of it.

At this point I think it becomes necessary to refer to the court-martial of Capt. Hamilton, because in there is a matter which I possess personal knowledge of the witness, and I would therefore enter in the record, subject to such digesting and shortening as may Counsel refers to the court-martial record of Capt. George D. Hamilton, court-martial record in that case, and in the cases of Johnson and Hamilton will be offered to the committee in evidence, but, with the suggestion of being admitted in full, that it be incorporated in the summary or a digest satisfactory to all parties represented.

Howe and I discussed that general question already, and we have decided that.

Very well.

For the purposes of further identification merely, the court-martial of Hamilton was the court-martial which took place at the marine barracks in Cape Haitien on August 4, 1919, and the thereto.

Charge I, preferred against Capt. Hamilton, upon which he was convicted for disobedience of a lawful order of his superior officer, of which portions, for our present purposes, are the specifications thereof, are as follows:

"In that Capt. George D. Hamilton, United States Marine Corps, commanding the Constabulary Detachment, First Provisional Brigade, in the Gendarmerie D' Haiti, at Grande-Anse, Haiti, having on or about March 10, 1919, had addressed (then Lieutenant colonel) Alexander S. Williams, United States Marine Corps, commanding the constabulary detachment, aforesaid, and charged him with the issuance of an order of which he was conversant, in words to the following effect:

"1. No prisoner while in custody, whatever his or her status, shall be executed, or permitted to be shot.

"2. In case of an attempt to escape every reasonable effort shall be made to prevent the escape before shooting is resorted to.

"3. A report will be submitted to headquarters gendarmerie in the event of a shot under any circumstances. This report will contain a full and complete account of the circumstances brought out by careful investigation."

Do you remember that order, Colonel?

Col. WILLIAMS. I remember an order which I believe to be the order issued by Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember the reasons why that order was issued?

Col. WILLIAMS. Yes. Incident to Gen. Catlin's inspection of the gendarmerie at Haiti, and the investigation of the allegations made against the gendarmes, it transpired that there was no written order ever issued by the headquarters of the gendarmerie which forbade the killing of prisoners. Gen. Catlin suggested that such an order should be issued. I proposed to issue such an order, but did issue it in the form in which it was issued. It was delivered personally to Lovole by me, and on my return to the United States, I believe, the order was sent out immediately in regular form.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know why Gen. Catlin felt that the issuance of such an order was required or proper? Did he give any reasons for it?

Col. WILLIAMS. I do not remember that he gave any reasons for it. It was a strong tradition in the military service that every offense was punished by the issuance of an order forbidding every one else to do the same.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as you know, did the fact of prior reports of the killing of prisoners by gendarmes motivate the issuance of this order?

Col. WILLIAMS. So far as I was concerned, no. What Gen. Catlin said to me was that I could not say. You mean by that reports prior to these parties?

Mr. ANGELL. No; I meant by that question reports coming to the attention of the date of the issuance of this order. In other words, was the issuance of this order the mere fact that no such order had been issued, or was it, in addition, the fact that there had been reports of the killing of prisoners by gendarmes?

Col. WILLIAMS. The order was issued immediately following the receipt of the allegation against Lovole. But I issued it because Gen. Catlin issued it. What I mean is that I did not believe that such an order was necessary any more than one that housebreaking should not be carried out without a permit to think differently, so I issued it.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring still to the record of the Hamilton case, particularly the testimony of Lieut. Col. Hooker, on pages 4 and 5, will you read to me a part of the answer to the third question based on that:

"I asked the accused (that is, Capt. Hamilton) what he knew about a prisoner who had been shot, and the accused told me that he had shot all Cacos captured if he was positive that they were not officers. He told him about an order issued by Gen. Williams, chief of the gendarmerie, dated March 10, the gist of which was that no prisoner, no matter what his status, would be shot or allowed to be shot under any circumstances. That in case of a prisoner escaping every possible means should be used to recapture before resorting to firing upon, and further, that if a prisoner was shot, no matter what the cause, a full report would be made to the headquarters of the gendarmerie. I found this order in the files of his office and found this order, which the accused

...v, but that he thought the order simply prevented him from out of a prison and shooting them, that he did not consider plied to prisoners taken on the trail. He told me that he out this policy since the order had been issued."

order, as framed and intended and issued by you, was not interpreted as Capt. Hamilton stated to Col. Hooker, but was to all cases, was it not, Colonel?

It was intended to apply to all cases.

Turning now to your testimony of the other day concerning the of the gendarmerie officers toward the native population, in substance that they showed the greatest friendliness and natives, and identified themselves with every measure for the districts and the general welfare, do you think that the succeeded in gaining the good will, generally speaking, of tion?

Almost without exception, the gendarmerie officers, senior and the confidence and the liking of the natives.

Would you make the same answer regarding the enlisted personnel?

Generally, the enlisted personnel mixed freely and in a with the class from which it had been drawn. In certain insioned officers in charge of small posts conducted themselves as to be disliked. The gendarmerie represented to the Haitian extent the old gendarmerie military, and the gendarme had tive, before he made his friendship, that he was not operatwhich the old Haitian soldier followed.

In your testimony before Col. Lay, referring to that again, you that the difficulty of getting men in the later stages of the operation caused the gendarmes to resort to methods that were quite consistent with their training under Haitian officials.
element of their relations, is it?

It is a fair statement of their relations in that particular gendarme duties, but I must explain that the gendarmerie performing training generally under Haitian officials. It is possible gendarmes had served in the old army, but probably a small

...w would that use of brutal methods, then, be consistent with Haitian officials?

That statement, as quoted, did not express my thought. What was that this brutality was in line with that which the army had learned under Haitian officials. The precedents perhaps an inheritance from the slave days of the eighteenth

The reflexes of slavery were relatively few and did not themselves in any important fashion. The only relic of This, I always believed, was due to the fact that the code groes from carrying a stick greater than a certain diameter.

Gen. Catlin's statement before Col. Lay, taken about the ber 31, 1919, in speaking of the corvee as it existed in the Hinche district, he says: "All the inhabitants of a certain rounded up and brought into Hinche, and that all the gar-outside of the towns had been abandoned, and the inhabitants many probably having joined the bandits," and Gen. Catlin at the priests stated this was largely on account of the fear of the corvee; and further, that the appearance of a gen-was sufficient for the peasant to take to the brush and hide.
whether that conforms with your own personal experience interrelations of the gendarmes and the population?

In part I am in agreement, that central Haiti was largely

...what time?

During the period of the bandit activities.

18 and 1919?

Col. WILLIAMS. 1918. This was due to the fact that the natives were afraid of the bandit gang or else be killed, so those who did not join the towns.

In regard to the peasants taking flight on the appearance of the bandit gang, I do not think that was generally true unless the bandit gang was in the immediate vicinity. The natives, I may say, abandoned their farms, did sneak out to them and made some attempt to save their crops. If bandit gangs were in the neighborhood and gendarmes came along, it is highly probable that they took to flight, because they feared to be identified or mistreated. Generally, throughout Haiti this condition did not obtain. I have ridden over nearly all the roads in Haiti on horseback or by mule, and I remember a native running away, and that was in a country where corvee had never operated.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it your impression that the natives take to flight or otherwise make themselves scarce, because of the fear of being taken into the corvee gang?

Col. WILLIAMS. In central Haiti, no; because at the time I was there I suspected it is my belief that there was no corvee there.

Mr. ANGELL. Prior then, to the time that Gen. Catlin inspected the roads, he believed that the natives disappeared or took to the brush to avoid being pressed into the corvee?

Col. WILLIAMS. No; because my personal experience tells me that there have been over that road between St. Michel, Maisserie, and Port-au-Prince, a number of times, once alone, and I never saw anyone run.

Mr. ANGELL. Why, then, did it become more and more difficult to obtain labor for the corvee as time went on?

Col. WILLIAMS. The reluctance of the natives to work on the roads.

Mr. ANGELL. If it was the practice of the gendarmes to beat the natives for forced labor, how would their reluctance make any substantial difference in the ability to obtain labor unless their reluctance caused the presence of the gendarmes?

Col. WILLIAMS. All gendarmes were not bad. Many of them were properly instructed in the corvee conducted themselves in a perfectly proper manner. If the natives failed to come in when ordered, or broke away from the corvee, I had gathered them, that gendarme would bring in no recruits. It was a question of finding labor so much as it was a question of finding labor. If the recruits of labor did not want to come in, in very many instances the properly conducted gendarme was unable to bring them in. The personnel of the gendarmerie in the condemnatory way in which they were not be understood at all that all gendarmes were badly conducted. Many were, within the limits of their intelligence and training, native police.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it your understanding that the gendarmes used intimidation to gather in workers for the corvee gangs as well as to get men at work, once they were there?

Col. WILLIAMS. I have no doubt at all but that in many instances intimidation, and brutal methods were used by the gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. To get the men to the roads as well as to keep them there?

Col. WILLIAMS. To get the men to the road; yes. I had a number of these reports, but rarely found sufficient evidence to bring to the trial of a gendarme. In some instances, if my memory serves me, they were punished.

Mr. ANGELL. From what class of the Haitian population were the gendarmes generally drawn?

Col. WILLIAMS. From the lower class almost entirely. They had enjoyed such a reputation that anyone who joined it was considered a criminal. This made it very difficult for us to recruit the necessary educated material which we had to develop noncommissioned officers, who must know how to lead men.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that the reluctance of the natives to take service in the gendarmerie was based to any considerable extent on opposition to the intervention and presence of the United States?

Col. WILLIAMS. Absolutely not. One of the things which I think the fact that the Haitians realized that the American gendarmerie would be an excellent thing, and there was no objection to the part of the higher class to come in as officers, that is we had no end of applicants. The feeling generally of the gendarmerie was a friendly one. They realized, of course, that we were making mistakes. Some of us did not know the language, and some knew the laws, others were tactless, but, as the President himself has said, the mistakes of the gendarmerie have been well-intentioned mistakes, and not against them.

To what extent were the native Haitians sworn into the gendarmerie as commissioned officers?

When the gendarmerie first came into being, in virtue of the agreement, an annex to the Haitian-American treaty, it was desirable that Haitian officers be included in the personnel. In my mind, a number, I think about 20, young Haitians of good education were put in a training school, but the scheme did not work. The training of these young officers naturally was conducted in a way that which we give our own, and the first requirement, that of a physical examination, was objected to so strenuously that we were unable to carry it out from semiengagement. The next difficulty concerned the instruction. A gendarmerie officer, an American, qualified to instruct Haitians, in which the Haitians are notably deficient, gave them a demonstration of the methods, and then told one of them to groom the horse. He refused. They all refused. So that school stopped almost immediately.

When you say a practical demonstration there, do you mean that the officer groomed the horse himself?

The instructing officer groomed the horse himself, rubbing the horse the way it lay, and not rubbing against it, and turning it in, making all the practical work of grooming.

However, four or five Haitians commissioned with an acting commission by Gen. Butler. Only one of these four or five lasted long. The first one to go out was detailed as subdistrict commander at Marie, and acting in that capacity he borrowed the communal funds of the magistrate in whose charge they were that he needed them to pay his gendarmes. I caused him to resign.

He was having had an ordinary police report made against him, which was against me, and which I in turn sent out to have investigated, as we were promptly brought suit in the civil courts against the man for damages, for, I think, 20,000 gourdes damages. I got rid of him.

Who was in charge of Fort Nationale, a little fort that overlooks the city? Prince, I found had diverted the water supply of the fort for irrigating his garden, which was down on the side of the fort. I got rid of him.

Having been reported for debt by almost everyone who would touch him, I had to get rid of him.

One, a perfectly splendid young Haitian, who did very remarkably well against the bandits, but his value was limited to that, because as he was put in a position where he was brought in contact with the bandits, a riot came about, and we could not remove him because the bandits liked him, and we could not keep him there because he could not be trusted by the officials, so we put him in the field. I think that was all the Haitians whom I inherited, and of those I got rid of all but one.

Was there any further attempt, Colonel, to obtain the services of Haitians as officers in the gendarmerie?

Not during my time. I believed then as I believe now that it would be good only to the extent to which it is driven by the fact that there is not good material in Haiti, but the material is not good naturally, and with the Haitian's way of looking at things, it is impossible to bring about a condition of police efficiency such as we sought. Do you think that a reasonable degree of police efficiency is possible with an exclusively American personnel of all commissions?

Judging from the administrative history of Haiti in the past,

Do you think, then, there is no reasonable possibility of the gendarmerie being as efficient officers, even junior officers, of a gendarmerie as we say, be officered in its higher ranks entirely by Americans?

I do not believe—I will not say that it is not a possibility. It is possible. But I doubt very much if an efficient military police can be maintained in Haiti with the commissioned Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether any of these young Haitians have applications for commissions in the gendarmerie, and you to a good many of them, if I remember correctly, were graduates of the military academy of St. Cyr?

Col. WILLIAMS. I have a vague recollection of one man—who was a young man—who had attended St. Cyr. I would not be sure that he was not he was an applicant.

Mr. HOWE. Could you say whether or not he was a graduate of St. Cyr?

Col. WILLIAMS. I can not say that. I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there actually any examinations conducted in the direction of a board to be selected by the senior American officers as stabulary for native Haitians as commissioned officers?

Col. WILLIAMS. No; you refer now to that treaty?

Mr. ANGELL. I am referring to the treaty, to Article X of the treaty of September 10, 1915, and to Articles II and V of the subsequent convention of the following year—I have not the exact date.

Is it proper, Colonel, to refer to the operations of our forces against the cacos as being divided into two periods; first, the early days of the occupation as one of preliminary pacification, and second, from 1918 to 1920, as one of a second period of operations by our forces against the cacos, the two periods of operations and the operations by our forces against them being separated by a period of comparative quiet and calm in 1916 and 1917?

Col. WILLIAMS. The early operations conducted by our forces were brought to a close by the native leaders agreeing to cease hostilities, way, because there was no surrender.

Mr. ANGELL. And that was about what time?

Col. WILLIAMS. Those operations took place in 1915, and continued into 1916, not very long. I do not just remember. If they continued it must have been for a short time. The operations conducted by our forces against the bandits in central Haiti, and latterly by our forces and marines, constituted a distinct phase.

Mr. ANGELL. This affects the days of 1918 to 1920?

Col. WILLIAMS. 1918 and 1919. What happened in 1920 I do not know.

Mr. HOWE. Have you been using the term "Caco" and "Caco" interchangeably?

Col. WILLIAMS. I have not. I have very much not used the term. They connote two entirely different things.

Mr. ANGELL. Gen. Cole, in his report to the Secretary of War of September 23, 1920, which appears, as I believe, as Exhibit 1, is a record of the Mayo court of inquiry, and which I should like to see in record, or refer to now—

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, as to the record of the Mayo court of inquiry, I hope that may be introduced in the record in connection with the report of Maj. Dyer, who was the judge advocate of that court, and I hope the record, in full, and some of it summarized for the printed report, can be no objection at the present time, in view of the certainty that it will be in the record—

Senator ODDIE. There is no objection to the witness referring to it.

Mr. HOWE. No, sir. It will be entirely proper, and no objection to it, with sufficient explanation as to what part he is referring to.

Senator ODDIE. There is no objection to that.

Mr. ANGELL. Continuing my question, then, and referring to paragraph 26 of the report, which is dated September 23, 1920—

"When the undersigned relieved Maj. Gen. (then Brig. Gen.) Cole as brigade commander on November 22, 1916, conditions throughout the public of Haiti were generally peaceful, there being no armed forces of the United States forces or to the Gendarmerie d' Haiti, though at increasingly rare intervals, reports would be received of the robbing of market women by armed robbers, almost invariably in the vicinity of the border between Haiti and Santo Domingo."

Does that conform, Colonel, with your own recollection of the latter part of 1916?

Col. WILLIAMS. I can not place the date, but after the operations in north Haiti had ceased there was a condition of general peace.

between Haiti and Santo Domingo. There cattle lifting, of that sort were reported from time to time. It was up in the central and north central region, near the

The east central.

How long did that general condition of relative peace and quiet last in the latter part of 1916?

Something under two years, I should say. It is difficult to say when the peace became general disturbance. One condition merged into another for a period of approximately two years relative peace and

Was that situation, then, was not changed until some time, well,

It did not develop in an important way until some time in that, in your opinion, Colonel, were the reasons for the change in the recrudescence of the caco or bandit activity, or our Cacos or bandits?

It is necessary in order to answer that question to go back a little between Haiti and Santo Domingo has never been defined, agreed upon by the representatives of the two republics. The area a great part of its length it was a true no-man's land. The country is settled; it's generally very mountainous, and very heavily wooded. In time immemorial has been the resort of the Haitian and the French. I believe that the growth of the bandit movement was the result of several of these bands, and also to a great extent the popularity of one Haitian named Charlemagne Perolite. He was an influential and very large family, which lived generally in the north. He was a very large man, which carries a strong appeal to the people; he was well educated. I believe he was inspired by race hatred; men in plenty available for his purposes in no-man's land, recruitment, which I described the other day, enabled him to organize important forces.

I interrupt to ask what you mean by race hatred?

Black against white. He was able to point out a number of things and defend themselves very logically to base his claim, which was that the French were conquering Haiti; and the bases of his statements were down to most of the people in that region.

He made his claim, as far as you know, to speak for the population generally or of that portion of Haiti where he had his activity? I believe he did.

He purport to have a cabinet and attempt to enter into diplomatic relations with foreign governments?

He sent a letter to the British chargé requesting that Great Britain liberate Haiti. I think he generally signed himself as the patriot army.

His request for assistance and the liberation of Haiti meant coming from the Americans.

Assistance to him as leader of the native patriotic Haitian army against the French?

Yes. I believe that the offer included a proposition by which Great Britain against the Germans.

Do you believe that race hatred specifically—his opposition as a Haitian, to the presence of the white man, the American in Haiti, is the motive of the organization and continuation of his resistance and the occupation there?

I believe that he was inspired to a great extent by race hatred. His objection is that he invariably referred to us not as the Americans, but as the Yankees, which is rather unusual in the case of a Haitian. He came across a copy of a play written by Charlemagne Perolite, in which he was pictured lying on a divan with a woman fanning his feet and another beautiful white girl, described as a slave, fanning his head.

Col. WILLIAMS. My recollection of the text is that it provided

Mr. ANGELL. Not specifically for the building of new roads?

Col. WILLIAMS. I think it provided for repairs. That is what I remember it.

Mr. ANGELL. You testified, Colonel, if I remember rightly, that you were opposed at the outset to the institution or reapplication of the corvée. Were you opposed, and what efforts did you make or what did you express?

Col. WILLIAMS. I was opposed because I did not believe that was the way or the economical way of getting the work done. I was not in favor of it. I did not like the idea of a corvée. It seemed to me rather a waste of money. I made no effort to have it stopped, because I was not in a position to do so.

Mr. HOWE. You were a subordinate?

Col. WILLIAMS. I was a subordinate officer.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was, then, responsible for its institution in Haiti?

Col. WILLIAMS. The Haitian Government and the American Government. (Whereupon the committee adjourned until Tuesday, November 11 o'clock a. m.)

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. You had that designation?

Gen. WALLER. That was my brigade. It was sent down, so the command I had—the First Brigade.

Mr. HOWE. And after a while the bluejackets were withdrawn.

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Then, your command consisted entirely of marines.

Gen. WALLER. After the completion of the campaign we had then it was entirely marines.

Mr. HOWE. You were succeeded by what officer in command?

Gen. WALLER. Col. E. K. Cole.

Mr. HOWE. How long before you landed was President Dartiguenave?

Gen. WALLER. Two days, I think.

Mr. HOWE. Maj. McClellan, when was he elected?

Maj. McCLELLAN. He was elected on August 12.

Mr. HOWE. That would be three days?

Gen. WALLER. Three days.

Mr. HOWE. What was the situation there when you landed with reference to peace and order?

Gen. WALLER. Conditions were very bad, and the town of Port au Prince was being controlled by the landing party that had landed first. I arrived, and also the regiment that Col. Cole had brought down with me.

Mr. HOWE. You landed at Port au Prince, did you not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. What shape did the disturbing conditions take?

Gen. WALLER. Gatherings of mobs, threatening disturbances, and a general aganda.

Mr. HOWE. American propaganda?

Gen. WALLER. Not as much so as against the Haitian Government.

Mr. HOWE. You are referring to conditions in town in Port au Prince?

Gen. WALLER. In town in Port au Prince. The country was more or less quiet in the central part.

Mr. HOWE. What was the condition in the north?

Gen. WALLER. Dr. Bobo had been made President by the army, and he claimed him as their President, and refused to have anything to do with the Dartiguenave government. Dr. Bobo came to Port au Prince probably 10 days, and then, at his own request, was permitted to leave. He was never in any danger there at any time, but could go and come as he saw fit. He had some fear of violence, and I saw that he was nervous on board the steamer, with the British chargé.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know if before the time you landed there were any armed conflicts in which the seamen or marines took part?

Gen. WALLER. I think there was one in which two of our men were killed. That occurred the night of the original landing.

Mr. HOWE. At Port au Prince?

Gen. WALLER. At Port au Prince.

Mr. HOWE. After you landed how soon was there any armed conflict?

Gen. WALLER. There was a little trouble at Gonaïves early in September. Then, on the 26th of September they ambushed two of my men. One of them at Haut de Cap and one a little south of that. I have no name for this place.

Mr. HOWE. Before the 26th of September had you gone out to look for so-called Caco leaders?

Gen. WALLER. I did. I went to Cape Haitien and got in contact with them, and they said they would permit me and two other officers to go to the Quartier Morin and interview them. They absolutely refused to let us go, because they said it was only a trap to catch them.

Mr. HOWE. Let us go back to your reasons for that interview. First of all, was there any request on the part of the Haitian Government for President Dartiguenave?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; from President Dartiguenave.

you or some one else to make an arrangement with the Cacos

He had authorized me.

President Dartiguenave?

President Dartiguenave; to conclude any treaty I could make to the extent of purchasing their arms from them. My recollection limited the price of the arms, or the negotiations, anyhow, to as to my mind perfectly absurd.

much?

Entirely.

What need was there for reaching any agreement with the Cacos? Well, they were the king makers of Haiti.

Do you mean that under the conditions which prevailed at that time Government existed during the pleasure of these Caco leaders? That had been the case before we landed. What I mean is that political power, a man who wanted to be President, would go to make an agreement with these Caco leaders, and for a certain sum the Haitian treasury after he was successful; also the privilege of the towns on the way down. They would descend from the President in power.

What extent were these Caco bands at this time a menace to Government?

They had been for a hundred years a menace to it.

At the time you landed were they a menace to the then Govern-

Unquestionably, because they were back of the man, Dr. Bobo, and they had appointed president. They had not marched upon the town because they had not done so because our people had landed.

Were they doing any actual damage at the moment?

They were stopping all food going to Cape Haitien; they cut off the communication of Gonaves, and were levying taxes on all the market people, and of the country without any authority and treating them as if they were permitted to come into the market places to sell their produce and take their money from them when they returned to the town. I understand that you would have to understand that the market places were rather peculiar. For instance, the population in Port-au-Prince would probably be increased by something like 20,000 people had marched from the interior, some of them for three days bringing their produce into the market places. The different towns had their own portion and the northern portion had other market days, and proceeded from one to the other. Almost all this work was done and the existence of these Caco bands tended to paralyze the Government in the interior, in the northern part?

Yes.

What was the immediate effect of that was felt in the towns in the interior?

It was felt in the towns in the shortage of food. It did not affect our own provisions.

Would you describe your trip out and what transpired when you met the officers?

The officers were bitterly opposed to my going out, because they thought I would be killed; but I took Col. Cole and an interpreter and proceeded to the town, I think it is about 8 miles from Cape Haitien.

Without any further escort?

No. What is the name of that place?

Quartier Morin.

What was about 8 miles from where?

About 8 miles from Cape Haitien, as I recollect it. They met me at this place and escorted me in. Their delegation consisted of How many privates?

Not many privates. Any one who had command of five or six privates was a brigadier; if he had 15 or 20 men he was a major general, so there was a number of generals there.

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask you, sir, did these generals who met you in turn travel a considerable distance to the meeting place?

Gen. WALLER. Some had. Some had come down from Grand Anse, others from farther south.

Mr. HOWE. How was the time and place of meeting announced to you?

Gen. WALLER. They had gathered there prior to my arrival.

Mr. HOWE. You knew of that gathering there?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How did you find out? Who informed you?

Gen. WALLER. Col. Cole had informed me that Cape Haitien and the conditions were very bad, and our orders were to take anything that happened must come from them first. I went to the people and explained to them our purpose in coming to Haiti, and their minds a very fixed idea that we were going to seize navigation, them being Mole St. Nicholas. They referred to that many times in consultation. I explained to them that Mole St. Nicholas was as much less as a naval base, and we never contemplated it for a moment. Our purpose was to take one foot of territory from Haiti; that if, in the course of the occupation, it became necessary for us to take build the Government buildings, that we would pay a reasonable price for them, and we did.

Mr. HOWE. To the owners?

Gen. WALLER. To the owners; yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you did so?

Gen. WALLER. We did so always.

Mr. HOWE. What else did you say to them and they to you?

Gen. WALLER. They told me that Bobo was their president, and not have any other. Dartignenave had failed—well, I suppose that was really on the party. They wanted Bobo and no one else. They informed that I had him imprisoned. I had great difficulty in getting out of the fact that he had left Haiti at his own request, without any sort, and, as far as I was concerned, he could return; that was all. I told him as a menace in Haiti. They refused to have any dealings with him. I told them that I was very sorry; that I would give them a day to think the matter over, and the next day I proposed to open the train to Cape Haitien to Grande Riviere, and I would be very glad to have any of them on the train with me. They became very indignant that we held Cape Haitien, but that they held the north count down, and not be allowed to go. But the train left and we went on to the south, and, except for some menacing attitude on their part, there was nothing. Probably three or four hundred of their men had gathered under the train and made menaces, but there was not a shot fired at all. They agreed to come into Cape Haitien and have a further talk.

Mr. HOWE. General, what date was this first conference you had, and how long before the written agreement?

Gen. WALLER. About a week.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand that you had a second conference, and the railroad had been opened?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; they came into Cape Haitien. That was the second conference was held, and at that time they were joined by Zamor, and the agreement was made.

Mr. HOWE. Was the agreement formulated in writing at that time, or in a second interview?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; that is, the English of it, and it was translated into French for them.

Mr. HOWE. I have here a copy of that agreement, which, I understand, is short, and I would like to read it aloud.

Senator ODDIE. Very well.

Mr. HOWE. General, is this the text of the agreement, which you read:

“CAPE HAITIEN, HAITI, Sept. 1, 1915.”

Yes; but the French of this was not signed at that time.

It was signed subsequently at Quartier Morin.

How long after?

It was after the 26th, because they had ambushed the American 5th of September, but I found that these men were not con-

Mr. HOWE. Not concerned in the ambush?

Gen. WALLER. Not as far as I know, and they have, even to their agreement.

Mr. HOWE. The signers of this agreement?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. During the campaign in the north I con- with Baptiste Petion, or Petion Jean Baptiste, just as you like either way.

Mr. HOWE. Did Morancy and Baptiste represent these Cacos?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; they practically had vice regal powers.

Mr. HOWE. You were convinced they were the individuals who sent the Cacos?

Gen. WALLER. They were so acknowledged by all of them.

Mr. HOWE. To what extent and for how long was this agreement the Cacos?

Gen. WALLER. A number of them broke it on the 26th of September, ambushed my patrols.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I notice this agreement here is dated September.

Gen. WALLER. Yes; that would be the date of the actual French.

Mr. HOWE. Of the French version?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How long before that ambush on the 26th had you the English version?

Gen. WALLER. The date of the last meeting in Cape Haitien.

Mr. HOWE. How long before the ambush was that, do you believe?

Gen. WALLER. I think that was about five or six days.

Mr. HOWE. And that ambush was on the 26th?

Gen. WALLER. On the 26th.

Mr. HOWE. Of September?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. It is positively fixed in my mind, because that day, and I thought it was a nice present to receive.

Mr. HOWE. The English version was signed before the ambush?

Gen. WALLER. That was signed in pencil. I think the original copy one of them, may possibly be in the hands of our consul in Cape. He was present at the time.

Mr. HOWE. Have you any means of knowing how far the news of the English version was spread among the Cacos?

Gen. WALLER. Considering the time between the actual signing have been at that time at least 500 of them in Cape Haitien besides.

Mr. HOWE. And did they all know about this agreement?

Gen. WALLER. They all knew of it. It was very rapidly spread in the country, carried by the market people.

Mr. HOWE. Did they begin to comply with any of the requirements the 29th?

Gen. WALLER. They claimed that they had.

Mr. HOWE. Had they turned in any arms?

Gen. WALLER. They claimed that some arms in the immediate Cape Haitien had been turned in, and, of course, arms were turned in at Port au Prince. I can hardly say they were turned in. More properly they were collected.

Mr. HOWE. But, as the result of this agreement, I mean, were they before the 26th, before the ambush?

Gen. WALLER. Very few. They hesitated for a long time, I mean about turning in their arms, because they claimed they were not at any moment, and should be allowed to have these arms; and they were their own people.

Mr. HOWE. Aside from this ambush, were there any breaches of the agreement?

Gen. WALLER. At Gonaïves.

Mr. HOWE. When.

Gen. WALLER. That was, I should say, two days after this.

Mr. HOWE. After the English version of the agreement?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. What was that occurrence?

Gen. WALLER. They had cut off the water supply of Gonaïves, practically surrounded the town. When I left Cape Haitien I went to Port au Prince, now Gen. Butler, with me to Port au Prince. Stopping at Gonaïves.

Gen. WALLER. Yes; because as soon as the reports came in to Cape Haitien with the plan of campaign that I had arranged.

Mr. HOWE. Why d'd you order that long reconnaissance by?

Gen. WALLER. For the purpose of finding the exact location and finding the exact location of these bands who would come down the plains and go back into the mountains.

Mr. HOWE. The continuance of these depredations by themselves a violation of this agreement, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. Absolutely.

Mr. HOWE. Did the American and the Haitian Government violate of the agreement?

Gen. WALLER. To the letter.

Mr. HOWE. Did the campaign of November, 1915, start with the reconnaissance of Maj. Butler?

Gen. WALLER. No; the plan was not made until after his reconnaissance. It was necessary for me to get this information to make this plan. I wanted to get them into the mountains, establish these different bases in the mountains, and operate from these bases each day, with rapid moving columns, small columns. I had more than 40 men in a column, but as they moved in different directions kept the other people guessing as to our actual intent and was I do not think the campaign lasted more than three weeks.

Mr. HOWE. That was a campaign, then, to keep the cacos from running the run?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Moving from place to place?

Gen. WALLER. Moving from place to place. In the meantime I contacted with Jean Baptiste Petion, and told him that he must control these people and say that it was our intention as soon as we were able to see that work was started on the roads, and work would be done on the roads, and that these men would have employment at the place. I know that he did so communicate with them, because I captured letters from him to these other alleged generals.

Mr. HOWE. With the substance of that offer incorporated in the agreement?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. The reason you began this campaign was on account of the depredations?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. To put a stop to them?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How many killed did the Haitians suffer, do you estimate in three weeks' campaign?

Gen. WALLER. Officially, I think I reported about 182. I do not see more than 60. They attacked me at my base the day they arrived.

Mr. HOWE. That was at Le Trou?

Gen. WALLER. That was at Le Trou. They made a mistake. I had moved in there with only 18 men. It was true that I was there when I had moved in from the base, and they had sniped me on the way to La Trou, but it did not even halt the march. But they were in the morning with a large force, but unfortunately they did not have machine companies and five machine guns had arrived the night before. The movement was of very short duration.

Mr. HOWE. How many dead did you count after that?

Gen. WALLER. Thirty.

Mr. HOWE. Thirty dead Haitians?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Was this 182 total the actual counted number or an estimated number?

Gen. WALLER. Well, I suppose it was the actual count. I do not depend on the reports of my subordinates in the mountains. They counted them, because they reported so many dead and so many.

Mr. HOWE. And first to last that campaign was carried out by the men laid down by you, namely, patrolling columns based on several bases?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And constantly patrolling?

I have here the plan of campaign, with the original orders. Do you have the authority of President Dartiguenave for your agreement with the cacos?

Yes; and not only his authority, but he requested me to take finally. He made the original request that I take charge of and a telegraphic dispatch from him conveying the thanks of Government for the services which were performed in the north with this agreement, and subsequently the thanks, publicly exalting the Haitian Government for the successful campaign in the north of these people of the terror that had existed for so many years. General, these letters from the President of Haiti to which you appear in a compilation of orders, etc., which compilation is in the record of this committee, and so we have before us a record of which you have referred. They appear on page 57 of that you spoke of having your campaign orders there.

Yes.

It directed the constant patrolling from designated points?

Yes.

In field order No. 9. In order to complete this summary, I will give 1 and 2:

1. The territory inclosed between Le Trou, Ste. Suzanne, Grande Riviere, and the coast, Le Trou is infested with outlaws and bandits; they extend to the west of the Grande Riviere and to the south of the strongholds in the mountains south of Ste. Suzanne and a distance of 10 miles eastward of the trail Le Trou, Ste. Suzanne; one fort, Grande Riviere, is reported to have stone parapets and is situated near Ste. Suzanne. Strength of the hostile forces is not known, but probably about 1,000. Gen. Pinede Pierre is to occupy La Valliere with support of our troops in that vicinity. U. S. S. Connecticut to be Haitien.

2. We will occupy positions in readiness to clear the above district of movement being started Monday morning, November 1, 1915; in their possession are bandits and are to be treated as such. No money will be paid to the capture or destruction of the chiefs." Paragraph 2 of your orders described the mission of your forces,

Yes.

These orders also contain a letter of instructions which had provided the details as to distinguishing marks of the soldiers?

For the safety of our own people in night work.

Provision for water and water facilities, the care of animals, and all other matters of an unusual country?

Yes.

Is this a fairly correct summary of those orders. Is it not, sir?

I think so.

Chairman, I suggest that these orders, dated at Cape Haitien by order of Col. Waller, Field Order No. 9 of the same date, together with the instructions accompanying the field order, as well as Field Order No. 10 from Col. Waller to Col. Cole, dated October 31, 1915, be put in the record, and be kept in the records of this committee, but that they be not put in the record, as that seems to be unnecessary.

It will be so ordered.

Was the successful campaign that three weeks' campaign in obtaining it Entirely so. At the end of that time they had given up.

Yes, and we gave them work immediately.

Did the arms turned in in large numbers?

Gen. WALLER. Arms came in rather rapidly at first, but the peasants held on for a little while, and they were coming in month afterwards.

Mr. HOWE. A month?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. About how many rifles were turned in, can you e

Gen. WALLER. I do not remember exactly. I do not remember the price we paid for those rifles, for each one. It was according to the gun.

Mr. HOWE. So the total amount paid would give no indication of the number of arms?

Gen. WALLER. No; because we certainly got quite a large number.

Mr. HOWE. Perhaps it would be more interesting to know you how many firearms were left in the country after this turning in.

Gen. WALLER. It was pretty difficult to say, but there were none from the north. At the same time, it was a very easy matter to move from Santo Domingo into Hinche, across the Santo Dominican way.

Mr. HOWE. After the end of this campaign, were there any conflicts for some time?

Gen. WALLER. Nothing for some time. There was an attempt at a revolution in Port au Prince.

Mr. HOWE. But that was started later?

Gen. WALLER. That was next year.

Mr. HOWE. Then there was a period of quiet?

Gen. WALLER. Entirely so.

Mr. HOWE. And with the exception of this abortive revolution, have there been any other revolutions? How long did that period of quiet last?

Gen. WALLER. As long as I was there.

Mr. HOWE. At least, then, until December, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. Over a year.

Mr. HOWE. When you speak of the revolution do you speak of the one called the Pierre Paul revolution?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Where was the center of that?

Gen. WALLER. In Port au Prince.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any intimation in advance that it was coming?

Gen. WALLER. I had. I knew it was coming and the President was actively informed. He was reporting something about it every day. I was very anxious for me to arrest the people before any overt acts.

Mr. HOWE. What course did you take?

Gen. WALLER. I told him I was inclined not to do it. I was waiting for the revolution to start. I said, "I am going to let them begin show and finish it."

Mr. HOWE. What was your purpose in adopting that plan?

Gen. WALLER. I wished to find out exactly who the leaders were, the people who were financing this thing and who were behind it.

Mr. HOWE. Did you gain any information on those points?

Gen. WALLER. I captured two letters. I know that some of the people were financing it, and, also, when Pierre Paul escaped the night before, he was assisted in his escape by a German, and I have no doubt that he was taken into the German Legation for awhile. Of course, I did not violate that. I should have unhesitatingly arrested any one outside, but the legation was sacred.

Mr. HOWE. The legation was sacred?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; the Haitians did not regard it so in the French Legation when they killed the President.

Mr. HOWE. But you had to regard it as sacred?

Gen. WALLER. I did; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did you capture any of the leaders of this outbreak?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; we captured the commanding general in Port au Prince. In Port au Prince he escaped from prison.

Mr. HOWE. Who? Pierre Paul did?

Gen. WALLER. No; Codio did—the commanding general. We captured another general by the name of Metallus, who was probably a very desperate character on the face of the earth. He was a was captured?

He was captured.

Is he alive or dead?

He is dead, and so is Codio.

Were there any other important prisoners captured there?

When they broke out of prison after the revolution, and probably, some of them political and others criminal prisoners, of the political prisoners simply hid and gave themselves up and hid because they were afraid they would be shot.

Codio taken in that way?

Codio was recaptured just as he was making his way to the order with Gen. Metallus and another man. I have forgotten now. He was not of very great importance. He was a local disturber. And there were some pirates who had been the marines?

American riflemen were something like the Haitians. The rebels were killed.

Yes. They were attempting to escape?

Yes. What account for the end of all your principal captures in the revolution?

except Pierre Paul himself.

What happened to Pierre Paul himself?

He got away, and subsequently communicated with me, probably five months, and asked for terms of surrender, which I refused word to him that he would have to throw himself on my mercy and surrender unconditionally. He complained that his wife and we were withholding the rent for a building that we were up at Ouanaminthe, so the rent was paid to Madame Paul.

building was owned by Pierre Paul?

The rent was regularly paid to her. He came in and I told him to pardon him, as far as the occupation was concerned, but I tried to have action on the part of the Haitian Government; might lie against him at any time.

He was pardoned by the Haitian Government?

I took him over to the President, and the President pardoned him immediately. He was not in confinement an hour; he was sent at all; he was in my office, or in the President's office, and he returned he was not in confinement?

What happened to him after that, when he was turned loose?

He was politically dead. Our action in not regarding him as a criminal had a wonderful effect, as we knew it would.

There was no more trouble from Pierre Paul?

Not at all. There was an alleged political trouble. The information came to me by the President. Mr. Pradel, who was one of the advisers and a very intelligent man, the President kept in communication with people who were opposed to the Government. Particularly in the salon of one of the Haitian ladies who was a

I had no reason to believe that he was in any way connected. They were so insistent in their reports that finally I said, "I will search and see what there is." So the house was searched and did find some arms that were not allowed. I think there were rifles, but they were found in the stable which opened. Pradel was brought to my office and stated he knew absolutely nothing about it, and I am quite convinced that he did not have a plot on the part of his political enemies.

Mr. HOWE. Did that trouble incident to the Pierre Paul revolution constitute the only instance of that kind, the only disturbing incident?

Gen. WALLER. That is all.

Mr. HOWE. During the rest of your tour there?

Gen. WALLER. That is all.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any active part in the negotiations with the Haïtian Government?

Gen. WALLER. Simply to carry out the instructions of the Government that were given to me through Admiral Caperton.

Mr. HOWE. The customhouses were seized?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Before the negotiations for the treaty, before the treaty was signed, in the negotiations for the treaty became effective; is that correct?

Gen. WALLER. I knew that would be agreed upon, that they would agree to the customs.

Mr. HOWE. You knew that the Haitians would agree to the customs?

Gen. WALLER. That was understood.

Mr. HOWE. Was that agreement reached before the customs were taken over?

Gen. WALLER. The verbal agreement?

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. The treaty later on provided for the taking over of the administration of the customs; is that right?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; and the appointment of a receiver general and a customs adviser.

Mr. HOWE. General, these negotiations in which you took part, during a considerable period of time, did they not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. The treaty was signed in September, 1916, I believe?

Gen. WALLER. I think so.

Mr. HOWE. On behalf of Haïti?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How soon after your arrival in August, 1915, did the negotiations begin?

Gen. WALLER. They were going on when I got there, two or three months before President was elected.

Mr. HOWE. During that time did you observe any compulsion being used to bear on the Dartiguenave government, forcible or otherwise, to get the treaty?

Gen. WALLER. None whatever.

Mr. HOWE. There were, however, prolonged negotiations, or long talks of the treaty?

Gen. WALLER. One paragraph of the treaty would take up one or two days, arguing pro and con.

Mr. HOWE. Who took part in those discussions?

Gen. WALLER. The Haitian Government, our minister, our communications from the State Department.

Mr. HOWE. Where did you come in, sir?

Gen. WALLER. I came in the Naval Establishment there.

Mr. HOWE. Were you and the admiral present, both of you, in the negotiations frequently?

Gen. WALLER. Frequently; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did you sometimes take the place of the admiral in the negotiations?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; occasionally.

Mr. HOWE. Under his instructions?

Gen. WALLER. Oh, of course, in a case of that kind I represent the Government afterwards what was done.

Mr. HOWE. Were you present at most of the negotiations, or at a considerable number of the meetings?

Gen. WALLER. No; because a great many of these were held in the north.

I have not, then, from your own knowledge, any complete knowledge of the negotiations of the treaty?

No; I have not—only what I would read over and hear discussed; from my own knowledge, nothing.

Want to ask you now, sir, about the administration of affairs from the time you got there, and I mean by that the collection of the administration of justice under martial law, and any other government performed by Americans, or in which Americans participated. When were the customhouses seized, do you know?

I do not remember whether it was the latter part of August or September.

Yes, according to your recollection, correct—that the seizure of the customhouses went on in the last 10 days of August and on the first one of September, 1915?

Yes, sir; according to the distances of the places.

According to the distances of the customhouses from Port au Prince.

Yes. It was very difficult to reach some of those in the south. We had no cruiser available, we would have to send people overland, and the roads were in wretched condition.

Understand that martial law was put into effect on September 1, 1915?

Yes.

The seizure of the customhouses was practically completed by September 1, 1915. Law went into effect?

Yes.

Were the officers of the Pay Corps the agents of this seizure?

Yes, the officers of the Pay Corps of the United States Navy.

Were they under the orders of some one officer in the Pay Corps?

The receiver general.

The receiver general was in the Pay Corps?

Yes.

Were the different customhouses administered by other pay officers?

Yes, under his instructions, and he received his instructions from the receiver general.

What did they do when they seized the customhouses? What did they do?

They collected the export and import customs.

Of them?

Yes.

What did they do with the money they collected?

That was turned in to the Haitian bank, the National Bank of Haiti, the repository of the Haitian Government. You see, there is no bank in Haiti. The bank of Haiti is in Port au Prince.

As you say, then, General, that the funds were put in the best available place for safe-keeping, but I was more interested to know how the funds were disposed of.

The funds were disbursed in this way. At first the Haitian Government paid a lump sum, and they were supposed to do the disbursing.

Over and above the lump sum, was there any money left?

There was never any money left.

After the lump sum was paid over to the Haitian Government, was there any money left, any balance?

Yes; there was a balance left. That was used for educational purposes, for the hospital, for the external debt, and for sanitary purposes, keeping the towns absolutely clean.

What was the lump sum turned over to the Haitian Government for?

All the salaries of the Haitian officials, from the President down to the lowest official, his salary and his allowance. His salary, as I recollect, was $3,000 gourdes for his table.

How long did the arrangement last by which the receiver general paid the lump sum to the Haitian Government?

Four or five months, I think.

When was that arrangement changed?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. In what respect?

Gen. WALLER. We paid all the bills.

Mr. HOWE. Instead of handing the money over to the I sum?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; we took their pay rolls, audited them,

Mr. HOWE. Without the money passing through the ha Government?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Why was that necessary, if it was necessary?

Gen. WALLER. Because we were convinced, as well as the also convinced, that there had been not a proper administr the Haitian Government.

Mr. HOWE. Was there reason to doubt that the money t aries did not reach those who were entitled to the salaries i Gen. WALLER. Very strong reason, because many of the cl in the Government offices were simply given a certificate chit for a month's salary, and those would be held back.

Mr. HOWE. The payment of those would be held back?

Gen. WALLER. The payment of those would be held back, notice that there was a sort of exchange in the different quoting prices for the value of these chits according to th they were issued. These were bought up by the capitalists 30 to 40 cents on the dollar, and then the secretary of stat would decide* that such and such months would be paid, and be sent in.

Some of them had been bought up, I think, by the presle who was a large investor.

Mr. HOWE. In these chits?

Gen. WALLER. Yes, of course; the secretary of the treasur suppose.

Mr. HOWE. Did this practice which you have described pr four or five months during which the lump sum was paid ov

Gen. WALLER. It was not a new practice.

Mr. HOWE. But it continued on?

Gen. WALLER. Simply continued on.

Mr. HOWE. Therefore, in addition to the salaried officers salaries, this condition did not tend to keep political conditi right?

Gen. WALLER. That is right.

Mr. HOWE. It was a disturbing factor?

Gen. WALLER. Always. There were many little things little things. I did not consider that a very small item, but, the concession to the ice plant, which was a German conce required them to furnish 300 pounds of ice a day to the h Prince. I sent our medical officers into the hospital to take c were probably 10 or 12 patients. Some of the sisters of ti were acting as nurses in a way, with no provision for food made for the preservation of such food as they might hav this, the proprietor of the ice plant informed me of the fact th of ice that was supposed to be delivered at the hospital wa palace and to the administrative officers—to the houses of state, interior, finance, justice, etc. I ordered him to stop it would come down on him and put him out of business.

Mr. HOWE. Who was this—the ice-plant manager?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; I told him I would seize his ice plant cessity and administer the thing myself. After that the and promptly delivered to the hospital. That is just one of Another little incident was in the formation of the ge appointed Maj. Butler as acting commandant of them unt could be approved here, and he came to me on one occasion like to have about 2 pounds of scratch paper; that he had official storehouse, which is under the department of the in that he could have it, but that, of course, he would have usual official channels, but I would write to the secretary c ask him if he would not permit him to take 2 pounds of paper

Two pounds of paper?

Two pounds of paper for use with the gendarmerie for printing.

About a week later the paymaster, Conard, called me up and was in his office at that time, and stated that I had authorized $1,000 for stationery. I had forgotten this incident at the time he put him out. There was not anything else to be done. I said, "That must be what he is talking about." He came back again and was arranged between us that I had agreed that the secretary of the gendarmerie, and he was to purchase all of the supplies for the gendarmerie, and he was to begin to purchase stationery.

Who was this you are talking about—the secretary of the gendarmerie; yes. He was the gentleman who was afterwards.

These paymasters were succeeded in their duties by civilians. Was the adoption of the treaty or before?

Yes; that was after the formal adoption of the treaty.

And thereafter the so-called treaty officials came in?

They came in at that time.

And the treaty was formally promulgated after your departure; is that correct?

Yes; I think at that time. There was a great deal of delay in the organization of the gendarmerie. There were different delays from time to time.

I want to ask you, General, about the beginning of martial law in Haiti, 1915. To what extent was martial law imposed at that time?

The proclamation was issued, and all police had been abolished, the military had been abolished, and it was absolutely necessary that some force should be employed for the protection of the Government and the people of our own men.

And for preserving peace?

And for preserving peace.

Is it correct to say, and please correct me if it is not, that the martial law at that time took over the administration of criminal justice and the administration of civil justice alone?

Left it alone, although we were besieged by the people, to make jurisdiction in that also.

But it is so that it was an assumption of the administration of justice?

Yes.

The administration of all criminal matters in the courts but of civil matters?

No civil matters. There were some instances in the north. I have heard much about executions that took place but I never heard of any sentence of execution except one that was pronounced by the Haitian court itself, in the north, and when it was brought to my attention by the officer in that district—the offense was really a minor offense, and I wrote to the President and told him that it would be in this judgment of execution was permitted to take place.

Was this an execution ordered by a Haitian court?

By a Haitian court.

During the time martial law was in existence?

When martial law was in existence, but it had not taken cognizance of it. It was something like petit theft, petit larceny, or a little was the action of that court then set aside?

It was set aside by the President.

By the President of Haiti?

By the President of Haiti.

But, with a few sporadic exceptions like that, martial law took cognizance of the criminal law?

Yes.

Why was that necessary?

It was necessary largely for the protection of our own men and the protection of the Government itself.

Mr. HOWE. Was there not a system of criminal courts prior to the Haitian law?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; I suppose there was.

Mr. HOWE. Prior to September 3, 1916, had those Haitian courts been functioning in the administration of the criminal law?

Gen. WALLER. They had existed, but they were not functioning.

Mr. HOWE. To any extent?

Gen. WALLER. They were not interfered with by us.

Mr. HOWE. Were they functioning to a sufficient extent for the maintenance of law and order and of the Government?

Gen. WALLER. No.

Mr. HOWE. And for the safety of our marines?

Gen. WALLER. Not at all.

Mr. HOWE. Was that failure to function demonstrated by any facts?

Gen. WALLER. Every day.

Mr. HOWE. The proclamation of martial law to which you refer appears on page 67 of the printed record of this committee, and the provost courts administered the martial law?

Gen. WALLER. The provost courts.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any higher court?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; there was, but I never found it necessary to convene a higher one.

Mr. HOWE. What would the higher one have been called?

Gen. WALLER. The military commission.

Mr. HOWE. The military commission is provided for by law, but at that time none was convened?

Gen. WALLER. It was not convened. I had the power to do so, but it was only to be convened in capital cases.

Mr. HOWE. So the provost courts were sufficient for the purpose?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. The action of the provost judge, of course, was approved by me.

Mr. HOWE. In all cases?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Of punishment?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Or of acquittal?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. Acquittal goes without saying. It was approved by me.

Mr. HOWE. In other words, all the cases were submitted to you for approval?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And your approval was necessary to sentence or to acquit?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; the execution of the sentence.

Mr. HOWE. Who were the officers or the people who conducted the provost courts?

Gen. WALLER. In Port au Prince, Col. Williams.

Mr. HOWE. I did not mean their names, but were they military officers?

Gen. WALLER. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOWE. In every case?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How many such provost courts were instituted?

Gen. WALLER. One at the headquarters of each district.

Mr. HOWE. How many districts?

Gen. WALLER. Or each post, really.

Mr. HOWE. How many provost courts were there?

Gen. WALLER. Roughly, about 20.

Mr. HOWE. In your opinion, was the operation of the provost courts satisfactory and effective?

Gen. WALLER. I am very sure it was very effective, and I have no objection to my opinion of the fact that martial law, humanely administered, was the best form of government I know for the country.

Mr. HOWE. Was it humanely administered in Haiti?

Gen. WALLER. Absolutely; I mean as far as I know.

Mr. HOWE. On April 6, 1916, the Legislature of Haiti, consisting of the Chamber of Deputies, was prorogued, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. By whose order?

was done at the order and upon the strong personal request did not the prorogation require some formal, legal order?

Usually the proclamation of the President of Haiti.

President of Haiti issued the proclamation?

you know why the President issued the decree?

He told me that it was on account of the tremendous opposition meeting from members of the legislature in the organization of the council of state.

the council of state was necessary for what purpose?

for the adoption of the new constitution.

you believe that was his real reason?

It may have been. There may have been something in it, but my impression was, and it was my own also at the time, that that was not the reason. In fact, he said so on one occasion.

May I ask you this question, sir. Did that desire to prorogue originate with the President of Haiti or was it inspired by the the President of Haiti and his secretaries, but was bitterly opposed to it.

what means was the President's decree carried out?

by the locking of the door—the gates of the inclosure.

you recollect who locked the doors and the gates?

I do not know, personally, who did it. I gave the order myself to carry out and he probably sent some marines to preserve the letter here from the President requesting that it be done.

is asking a slightly narrower question than that, as to who, did the doors and at whose orders?

at that time there was a lieutenant by the name of Daumet with the gendarmerie, who was acting as aid to the President.

he was the one who did the actual locking.

at whose orders, do you know?

Maj. Butler's, but if he was aid to the President, it would be the President's orders?

Maj. Butler also received the notice from the President, through me.

it was that notice from the President to Maj. Butler, through

Mr. HOWE. Was there any disorder?

Gen. WALLER. None whatever. The marines were not in

Mr. HOWE. Do you know if at any time any of the force used any force against the members of the legislature?

Gen. WALLER. No; it was not necessary at that time.

Mr. HOWE. Were marines or gendarmerie employed to keep inclosure?

Gen. WALLER. The gendarmerie were at the gate, and could not go in the doors, that is the members of the legislature.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether any gendarmes or marines of the legislature out?

Gen. WALLER. I do not think so. I should certainly have been I was in very close connection both with members of the deputies at that time.

Mr. HOWE. Did the Senate or Chamber of Deputies at elsewhere?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Many times, or more than once?

Gen. WALLER. Four or five times. They stopped it at my

Mr. HOWE. Who stopped it at your request?

Gen. WALLER. Both the deputies and the senators.

Mr. HOWE. You requested them to stop meeting?

Gen. WALLER. I requested them to stop meeting until the could be made. I was confident we could get over this and Mr. HOWE. I see; your idea was that they should be established?

Gen. WALLER. That is what I thought.

Mr. HOWE. And you used your influence with them to meetings until some conclusion could be reached along those

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any disorder that you know of in attempted meetings?

Gen. WALLER. Not at all. The senators would come from the and the deputies also, and tell what had happened. I had them if they would take up only matters concerning the instance, and they agreed that they would take up nothing, agreed, and I am sure the senators did. I have a letter from Leon, the speaker of the House, in which he agrees to do of these meetings, but to take up only certain questions until ment could be made, but Mr. Borno, the secretary of state, was so bitterly opposed to it that finally all measures failed.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have anything to do with the preparation of January, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. I wrote the orders.

Mr. HOWE. What orders?

Gen. WALLER. For the conduct of the election.

Mr. HOWE. Who called the election; who decided that election?

Gen. WALLER. The Haitian Government—President Dartigues.

Mr. HOWE. How did you come to be charged with the duty election?

Gen. WALLER. Because, in addition to the occupation, I of the gendarmerie, not as a Haitian officer, but all the instructions from me.

Mr. HOWE. What provisions did you arrange for the conduct

Gen. WALLER. I have it here.

Mr. HOWE. You have what there, sir?

Gen. WALLER. I have this proclamation, or my order.

Mr. HOWE. That is in French, is it not?

Gen. WALLER. In French.

Mr. HOWE. That proclamation to which you refer appeared in Le Nouvelliste, dated Wednesday, the 15th of November. The proclamation is dated November 10, 1916, at Port au Prince. In the record, Mr. Chairman, and will furnish a translation for the in the record.

The distinction is due to the fact that it was impossible to

Gen. WALLER. The occupation.

Mr. HOWE. What do you mean by the occupation?

Gen. WALLER. I mean an officer of noncommissioned officers, States marines. I will have to explain the real reason for so graphs, perhaps. In Port au Prince alone it took 25 days to I mean before the establishment of these rules it took 25 days.

Mr. HOWE. In previous elections?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; such as they had.. I think at Cape H or six days, but the result of it all was that the rival cand ing up their following to such a pitch that before the elec place there were quite a number of casualties, and always ances going on. So I changed the number of polling places, made districts of Port au Prince, in other words, wards, fro would vote, and a resident in a certain ward would vote in t where else. That is accounted for.

The only difficulty we had at any time during the elect and I have every reason to believe it is true, was from the p who came down from the mountains to vote, and insisted marines for deputies. I know that is the attitude they had when I went through the country after this trouble was over a very lovable people and very happy if they are properly course, they have been under this tremendous misrule for so suspicious of everything.

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant recess.

Mr. HOWE. General, the employment of the law corvee v time down there, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you were in command down there at the ti

Gen. WALLER. It continued during my whole stay.

Mr. HOWE. In order to save time, may I repeat my unders of corvee to be that before the American occupation there, t ance a Haitian law by which the inhabitants of a district to work for a limited time in the repair of roads in their dis pensation to themselves?

Gen. WALLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. My further understanding, derived from the ceding witnesses, is that the general use of the word "co parlance down there applied to any work on roads, whether or not; that is correct, is it not, sir?

Gen. WALLER. That is correct.

Mr. HOWE. But when you answered my first question, wh corvee, you meant, did you not, the work under this old l compensation?

Gen. WALLER. Yes, sir. While we employed other men, a of their own districts to work, those were the men who had ex and they were regularly paid and went perfectly willingly. corvee, because they were paid and went willingly.

Mr. HOWE. In your opinion, was it necessary to employ th

Gen. WALLER. Not only necessary, but greatly desired by t selves.

Mr. HOWE. It was for the purpose of building roads?

Gen. WALLER. Rebuilding roads.

Mr. HOWE. There had been, as the committee has learned fr here, quite an elaborate system of roads built under the Fren

Mr. HOWE. Which had been neglected to the point of almo

Gen. WALLER. Impassable, practically.

Mr. HOWE. What was the need for roads down there?

Gen. WALLER. Intercommunication with the towns for t themselves, bringing their produce into the markets, and also ment of troops and gendarmes.

Was there immediate need for the quick movement of troops and

Not at that time, because they were very generally distributed throughout the island. The gendarmes, after they were thoroughly distributed in small detachments through the island, so that they were far apart, and the patrols would meet.

How about the supply of those detachments?

That was done by pack animals.

How could they be supplied on the existing paths or roads?

You could not use a wagon on those roads at that time; it was impossible.

How soon after you got there was the corvee revived or employed again?

I think we began it early in 1916.

And as I recollect your earlier testimony, that was a period of what?

Yes.

Did the employment of that system proceed uninterruptedly from that time down there?

Yes, sir.

Did you hear of its leading to any dissatisfaction among the Haitians?

On the contrary, they volunteered in such numbers that I could not employ them. The only difficulty was that it was impossible to furnish material, as evidenced, for instance, in the correction of the irrigation ditch had been built by the French in the Cul-de-Sac, one of the canals of Haiti. This system had been neglected, and large landowners deprived the small landholders, the peasants, of the use of this ditch. I gave it off on to their own places, so that probably 8,000 varas of land were left a desert and produced nothing. It became necessary to dig it out with these, and the Haitian engineer estimated that the cost of this work was $60,000 gold. As that alleged engineer was an architect, I was not prepared to accept his estimate, and I sent out my own engineer for an estimate. He came back again and said that the native had told him that he could furnish 1,000 or 2,000 men, or just as many men as we could furnish, to do this work, and the work was completed and the land re-imbursed of $800 in material.

Did you use the aid of that native labor?

Yes. We could not get the tools to employ all. They were permitted to do it.

Did this oversupply of labor for the roads continue during the time there, or did it become difficult later on to obtain the necessary labor?

It continued all the time. I have seen hundreds of men applying for work.

How did you apply for it?

Applying for it at the public works' office, that is my public

What is uncompensated?

Yes; uncompensated. You know, that sounds a little peculiar to me to tell you.

Would you like to hear your explanation of that?

Frequently, with the Haitian prisoners who were working on the roads, we would take out 15 or 20 of them, and it seldom happened that they would turn in less than 18 or 22. They would simply fall in and go

Why?

Well, they got something to eat and they could not get it out-

What about the employment, what is the connection between that and the roads, and your supply of labor on the roads?

The willingness of these people to do the work.

Did you supply them with food while they were working on the

Not those that were paid.

Did you have an oversupply of volunteers for the unpaid corvee?

Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And what was the inducement to them to do nothing?

Gen. WALLER. The improvement of the road itself, for the country.

Mr. HOWE. The unpaid corvée worker—did you give him his wages?

Gen. WALLER. No; we did not. Under their law it is not required that they should be paid. They know, they subsist largely on mangoes, bananas, and that sort of thing, which are plentiful everywhere; also sugar cane, a little rice, and other things. They eat very little meat. They eat very little meat.

Mr. HOWE. While at work on the roads were the corvée workers paid otherwise?

Gen. WALLER. If you could judge by the singing, I should say they were thoroughly contented.

Mr. HOWE. Were attempts made to escape from the work by any large numbers?

Gen. WALLER. Nobody escaped. I never heard of an instance of escaping.

Mr. HOWE. Or trying to get away?

Gen. WALLER. No.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know of any negotiations or discussions with regard to the constitution of Haiti?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; I had a great deal to do with that—writing the articles.

Mr. HOWE. With whom did you consult?

Gen. WALLER. With President Dartiguenave and members of the cabinet, with the senators and deputies, and also with what they call the press, who correspond to our bar association.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any conferences with other American officers on the subject?

Gen. WALLER. Only from time to time, when, sometimes they would come and I would talk matters over with him; but during the time that the constitutional change was taking place he was in Santo Domingo. He was also ordered to command the troops in Santo Domingo, and the department informed me that my presence was required, so I could not go to Santo Domingo.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any particular difficulties encountered in the consideration of this proposed constitution with President Dartiguenave?

Gen. WALLER. I do not recall any, except the question of the right of foreigners to acquire property, and there we had considerable difficulty. I was willing to put in this article, but I objected to the phraseology, for the simple reason that it threw everything into the hands of the Americans and cut out all of the other nations.

Mr. HOWE. How would that have been brought about by the article?

Gen. WALLER. Because the article they wished to adopt provided for the acquisition of real property after a residence of five years. What was in, and what was finally put in, was after a residence of five years, the enactment of this article.

Mr. HOWE. Did you have any instructions from the United States Government as to what it wanted in the constitution?

Gen. WALLER. A general outline, and communications were sent to the Haitian Government, through their minister here in Washington, through our minister.

Mr. HOWE. Through what channels did you get this outline? Did you speak?

Gen. WALLER. From the State Department, through the Navy Department, and also through the minister. Sometimes a dispatch would come from the State Department telling me to confer with him on the subject.

Mr. HOWE. Did you take up these discussions of the new constitution independently of our diplomatic representative?

Gen. WALLER. We were all together.

Mr. HOWE. In what capacity, General, were you in those discussions?

Gen. WALLER. I was in the capacity of commander of the occupation forces, the expeditionary forces. It was rather difficult to say exactly what the minister's position was.

Mr. HOWE. You spoke about this one clause in the constitution, drafted, being advantageous to the Germans?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

I think that everything that was against us was inspired by

We originally started in with a house-to-house inspection to incinerators in many parts of the town, and we compelled them

When we first got there, of course, they had not yet removed the prison where they had a massacre of 150 people in their know?

Gen. WALLER. It was very much the same as the other about as sanitary as the old-fashioned pigsty.

Mr. HOWE. Was that sanitary condition in the prisons run under the occupation?

Gen. WALLER. The prisons were made models.

Mr. HOWE. What about the prison records, I mean as to the people who remain in prison, and the records of prisoners the Haitians?

Gen. WALLER. They were kept in each prison.

Mr. HOWE. Under the Haitians, I mean.

Gen. WALLER. I do not think there was any. I never heard of any.

Mr. HOWE. Were such records instituted under the occupation?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; very complete records, and the same in the hospitals.

Mr. HOWE. There was an improvement in the hospitals, was there, for the Americans?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Or attempt to improve them?

Gen. WALLER. We took over the hospitals, for instance, I think there were 20 or 30 people in there. When I learned that there had been two or three hundred who were coming there for tropical surgical operations, etc. They were carried on by American funds.

Mr. HOWE. What funds were made available for the hospitals?

Gen. WALLER. Haitian funds for the Haitian hospital. The American hospitals were financed out of our own funds from the Navy.

Mr. HOWE. Were native Haitians treated in the Navy hospitals out of United States funds?

Gen. WALLER. That was not allowed, except in an emergency. If an accident happened and a man was brought in, near a hospital, we would give him first aid there, and he would be transported by ambulance to the hospital.

Mr. HOWE. Did the Navy personnel do anything in the way of caring for the sick of the natives?

Gen. WALLER. In the native hospitals?

Mr. HOWE. In the native hospitals.

Gen. WALLER. Yes; they had hospital apprentices, stewards, and medical officers. There was an American medical officer in each hospital, of course; the native doctor practiced there also.

Mr. HOWE. Did the gendarmerie have anything to do with the sick, or hospital assistance, or anything of that sort?

Gen. WALLER. Only in bringing them in. They had no authority outside, except in the country, where they had a medical authority. Then they looked out for them.

Mr. HOWE. The gendarmerie did?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Looked out for the sick Haitians?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. We had a great deal of difficulty at first getting them into the hospitals. The voodoo practice had been very general. They told these people that our idea was to get them into the hospitals, and do all sorts of things, so that even in the case of the wounded, those that they could not hide away from us, they would go to the hospitals, but we had a great deal more trouble getting them into the hospitals afterwards.

Mr. HOWE. Did the practice of voodoo have any influence on the events down there during the occupation, or was it a thing that went on with?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; it had a wonderful effect over the peasantry, the lower class of the people, and had some over the higher classes. Under the Haitian law, this practice, but they never enforced the law. They broke up all their meetings, seized all of their drums, etc. If a voodoo drum was heard we immediately got on the trail and broke it up, as far as we could.

Mr. HOWE. What was the voodoo drum used for, in connection with the dances?

Gen. WALLER. In calling them to these meetings, in the first place, and in the dances that they had. They used three or four or five of the drums were 5 feet high, and as big around. It is a wicker drum, with a cowhide over the top.

What is voodoo?

It is very difficult to say exactly what it is. It comes really out of Africa originally.

What does it consist of?

There it consists in the belief that human sacrifice was a part of it, but I do not think that human sacrifice had been resorted to in many years, but they do sacrifice the goat and sheep, and they do it in a peculiar way.

General, with respect to the material side of life down there, what was the effect of the American occupation?

Uplifting in every direction. That was our attitude toward it.

What was your aim?

Absolutely so. I am sorry that I have not a copy of an address made to them there when I came away to show you exactly what we had toward them was. Home influence in Haiti is unique in the same mode of expression that the French did, they have family units as the families, and as long as there is peace in the communities, but I am sorry to say that the peace in the communities, but I am sorry to say that the men down there, even the educated men, paid comparatively little for the family.

Did I understand you correctly this morning, General, to say that when he was made president by the Cacos?

They called him president.

What was simply their declaration of an entirely informal election?

It had been the usual form they adopted.

Did you not mean that remark to be understood that there had been no election under the Haitian constitution of Bobo as President?

No.

You spoke of the conditions when you arrived and first landed in August, 1915, as being those of threatening disturbances. How many casualties during these disturbances were there ever any persons killed or molested, to your knowledge?

No; only Haitians.

At the very beginning of your testimony, when you were giving your tour in Haiti, you spoke of coming back to the United States in 1913, and having had a conference with the State Department?

Yes.

Can you tell us briefly what those conferences were and what was made, and what officials you saw?

The official was the one who is in charge of the Latin American Division.

Mr. Sumner Wells?

No; Wright. He is now the secretary of the embassy in Washington.

Mr. Wright?

Yes; Butler Wright. He had charge of that department of the Navy, but the consultation was largely at that time in connection with the organization of the gendarmerie.

Did you consult with Mr. Lansing?

No; only through Wright.

With President Wilson?

No.

Did you discuss the affairs of Haiti with Mr. Daniels?

Yes; to some extent. I do not recall what, though, because of the jurisdiction over those affairs, over the State Department had been ordered up here by the Navy Department for this consultation with the State Department.

And the consultation was chiefly regarding the gendarmerie?

They were regarding the gendarmerie, yes.

Coming now to the operations in the fall of 1915 against the rebellion which was conducted, do you know whether Admiral Schervillat, on or about the 20th of November, 1915, an order or message was received by the Navy informing him that the Navy Department was impressed with the number of Haitians killed, and felt that a severe lesson had been taught the Cacos, and believed that could be maintained to preserve order and protect innocent further offensive operations, this appearing on page 78 of the

Gen. WALLER. Did I know of that message?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir.

Gen. WALLER. Yes; my own radio picked that up.

Mr. ANGELL. Was that message then communicated to Caperton?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; but I picked it up before he did.

Mr. ANGELL. It was communicated to you, however, through Caperton?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; but we appealed from that because the been completed. I wanted to finish it successfully and cap which I stated could be done, I thought, without firing a shot was that I was to cease all hostile operations. The town dered. Mr. ANGELL. Of those how many were killed?

Gen. WALLER. I do not recall exactly; probably 10 or 12 ki afterwards. Others would have died but for our medical ca

Mr. ANGELL. What was Bobo's attitude toward the pres States forces in Haiti, if you know?

Mr. ANGELL. You say when he was elected?

Gen. WALLER. When Dartiguenave was elected.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Bobo ever express to you opposition to United States forces in Haiti?

Gen. WALLER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether he was publically or to our presence there?

Mr. ANGELL. Did you receive, on or about the end of Marc 1916, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which appear port, attached as an exhibit to the report of the Secretary No. 2, one paragraph of which, No. 2, reads as follows: "During the operations of October and November in north Haiti, a large force of marines and seamen from the squadron, effected resistance to the American occupation and the Haitian Government maintained peace and order in all parts of the country." I did not receive this, but I did receive a letter from the Secretary of commendation and congratulation. This is a letter by Gen. Barnett to the Secretary. The letter the Secretary received is much shorter, the letter of commendation and congratulation is shorter, and I think you have the speech of the President, President of the Haitian Government.

There are one or two points I want to ask you about in connection with campaign orders which have been presented to the committee. In paragraph 1 of your letter of October 29, 1915, to Col. Cole, in the campaign order, I take it, the Cacos are referred to as follows:

"Disposition of troops is directed preparatory to the movements in the vicinity of Fort Capois, and the forces indicated in the campaign order are as follows: The Cacos are referred to as follows: The Cacos as rebels, both against the Haitian Government and the American occupation?"

They were so designated by the President in communications with the rebels. President Dartiguenave?

Yes. The purpose of my question was to find out whether or not you regarded them as rebels both against the Haitian Government and the American occupation?"

I regarded them as violating the agreement of the Caco general. I regarded them more or less as bandits, and I stated they would be regarded by you or did you not regard them as rebels both against the Haitian Government and the American occupation?"

They were absolutely opposed to the American occupation. They were what the Dartiguenave government was using.

Do you remember the letter of instructions for the campaign which seems to be attached to these so-called campaign orders drawn up by you, or under your direction?"

Under my direction; written by my adjutant general. It formed a part of the instructions and orders which went to the front. On page 2 of this letter of instructions, as so headed, under the heading "Medical arrangements," I find this language:

"Stretchers will be prepared to care for wounded on firing line, at all points. They will be carried via Grande Riviere or Caracol routes to the U. S. S. Stretchers will be prepared and will be carried by natives, who will be paid if possible to hire."

Attention of giving such an order? Was it, as the language indicates, that they were to be compelled to carry stretchers if they would not see to do so?

They certainly were. I would give them an opportunity to do so. If we were there to protect them I was going to make them do so themselves.

Do you know, General, whether or not it was necessary to imploy stretcher bearers? Yes; we had a number of volunteers when the occasion arose. I had to use stretcher bearers to carry the wounded back. In the mountains the wounded men were carried on horseback.

Coming now to the treaty negotiations, the negotiations which preceded the treaty on September 16, 1915, you said this. I understood you correctly, that there was a verbal agreement prior to the treaty for the taking over of the customs?

Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know who made such an agreement where?

Gen. WALLER. President Dartiguenave and the minister and Mr. ANGELL. The American minister?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. President Dartiguenave agreed to the taking

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. That was after his election as President?

Gen. WALLER. Oh, yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you present at the meeting when that was it just a meeting between the admiral, the minister, and

Gen. WALLER. I do not know that I was present at the one I was present one time when it was clearly understood, at a

Mr. ANGELL. And the President consented?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. He subsequently wrote a communication it was a dreadful thing for us to do.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember his proclamation, as published in the early days of September, 1915, protesting the taking over of the customs at Port au Prince?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. That was published, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. That was published; yes. We also knew that was at that time. You will find the same attitude, as far as concerned.

Mr. ANGELL. I am glad you mentioned that point, General. On the stand, testified that President Dartiguenave had either consented in advance to the declaration of martial law. H. Caperton, was unable to remember the circumstances under which consent was given. Do you remember those circumstances?

Gen. WALLER. Very distinctly, because the request was made

Mr. ANGELL. Was it made to you, or, if not, to whom?

Gen. WALLER. It was made in my presence; it was made. Admiral Caperton did not wish to proclaim martial law.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember when it was made?

Gen. WALLER. When this request was made?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.

Gen. WALLER. At different times, from 10 days to 2 weeks, information was actually issued.

Mr. ANGELL. In the President's palace, or where?

Gen. WALLER. In the palace; that is the one he was occupying the temporary palace.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it held that the customs constituted practically the exclusive source of national funds?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. They have very little internal taxation from the export and import duties.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the great proportion of the internal taxes come from the communes?

Gen. WALLER. They were supposed to go there.

Mr. ANGELL. It did not come to the National Government?

Gen. WALLER. No; it was not paid at any time to our representatives.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it a fair statement to say, for example, that most of the national revenues came from the customs receipts?

Gen. WALLER. I do not know exactly. I have no means of knowing. Their receipts were for licenses, and things of that sort, and other little taxes of that kind, but there was no tax on the charges for water and that sort of thing were practically all that the aristocrats paid any bills at all we found when we took over.

Mr. ANGELL. Is it substantially true, however, that the national funds came from the customs?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you say, in your testimony this morning, that there was no compulsion on the Dartiguenave Government to enter into the treaty which was signed in September, and subsequently in October and November by the two chambers?

Gen. WALLER. I never heard of any. I never dreamed of anything going on. I knew the trouble we were having in diffiwish to offer in evidence also that message of Admiral following day, September 15, to the Secretary of the Navy, ed the Secretary that if definite assurances can be given Haitian Government, that work on national railroad will continue after ratification of treaty, such assurances will aid materialization.

I wish to offer also specifically certain messages appearing on page 54 of this compilation, particularly one from Admiral Caperton of the Navy, of October 3, in which he refers to a message from the chargé d'affaires, saying, "I approve request and consider Haitian Government should have immediate financial assistance."

(The message referred to is here printed in full, as follows.)

"Chargé consulted with me before sending his telegram. In view of all the facts as they appear here I approve request and consider Haitian Government should have immediate financial assistance. I will fully to-morrow and submit estimates of receipts and expenditures."

Mr. ANGELL. I also wish to offer a long message on page 55 of this compilation, from Mr. Davis, the chargé d'affaires, presumably through Admiral Caperton, Navy Department.

Gen. WALLER. That, I think, went direct to the State Department.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it customary to radio up direct to the State Department?

Gen. WALLER. They sometimes sent a radio in the State Department.

Mr. ANGELL. Without reading all of this, I simply wish to refer to the message of the committee here to one or two paragraphs in the message. I told the President, that, as before stated, funds would be available upon ratification of the treaty.

"The President seemed utterly discouraged and pointed out that the delay was not due to any lack of effort by himself or his cabinet, but that withholding of funds only gave another weapon to the opposition. The United States Government persists on withholding all funds, and it becomes so difficult that he and his cabinet will resign rather than fight in the Senate under this handicap."

Also a further paragraph, in which Mr. Davis says:

"It is most important that the present administration remain in power. It is not believed that one more favorable to the United States could be found. In view of all the facts as they appear here that a more favorable administration would probably have to be established should this Government be removed."

(The message referred to is here printed in full, as follows.)

"Confidential, urgent, October 3, 5 p. m. This morning I received a receipt of your October 2, 5 p. m., I had an interview with the chargé d'affaires personally at his request. He stated that he had asked for this to ascertain what steps he could take under existing conditions. The Haitian Government following its plan to pay back salaries, would strengthen its position before the people and relieve suffering. He stated that he was entirely without funds, and inquired as to the disposition of the United States Government to assist them in this financial crisis. He expected instructions as to the matter and would advise him immediately."

"After receiving your October 2, 5 p. m., I told the President that funds would be immediately available upon ratification of the treaty. The President seemed utterly discouraged and pointed out that the delay was not due to any lack of effort by himself or his cabinet, but that withholding of funds only gave another weapon to the opposition. The United States Government persists on withholding all funds, and it becomes so difficult that he and his cabinet will resign rather than fight in the Senate under this handicap."

"I fear that I have failed in my previous reports to make clear the existing situation, which is as follows: The vote of the Senate and its deputies will take place probably to-morrow, the committee has favorably recommended ratification. Under the mode of procedure by congressmen the treaty goes before the Senate and then to a senate committee who, after considering, submit a report. The treaty is printed and distributed and three days allowed for consideration before discussion on the floor of the Senate begins. Therefore ratification is expected before the latter part of next week."

"The President and cabinet are using every possible effort to secure ratification and seem confident of securing the same if not embargoed. The Haitian Government realizes that such ratification is a necessary step for the welfare of Haiti. Opposition in the Senate is strong."

ers are unscrupulous politicians or fanatics and wish either United States by nonratification or to overthrow the present hoping to secure possible personal gain thereby. also wish to offer the following message from Secretary Daniels Caperton, dated October 5, appearing on page 55 of this compilation: has been sent this date to Charde with full instructions. You furnish Haitian Government weekly amount necessary to meet Use funds collected Haitian customs. "DANIELS."

Do you know, General, whether the back salaries act after the ratification of the treaty? Just to refresh your memory, the treaty was ratified in December.

Gen. WALLER. I do not think they were. I recall an individual who came to my office to see about the back salary for his brother.

Mr. ANGELL. Vincent was president of the Senate?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; and also the secretary of the interior, I think, had been the minister to Belgium. He thought it that he should be over there without any money, and I told him when the Haitian Government had dismissed him, to take up the question; that is, we declined to pay it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether, as a matter of fact, were paid until after the ratification of the treaty?

Gen. WALLER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. You do not know?

Gen. WALLER. No. The salaries we paid were the salaries were working after we took it up.

Mr. ANGELL. I also wish to call attention on the record paragraph on page 63 of this compilation, which seems to be a message from the Secretary of the Navy, reading here as follows:

"On October 13, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy authorized Caperton to establish a weekly allowance of $23,000 for the committee."

On that same page the further paraphrase, saying:

"On the same date (referring to October 19) the Secretary advised by Rear Admiral Caperton that he had authorized salaries from customs funds to senators and deputies for the committee."

I wish at this time also, with the consent of the committee, to record the messages appearing on page 65 of this compilation, Secretary Daniels dated November 10, 1915, being number 23109, apparently. I should say the treaty was ratified November 11, Armistice Day, 1915. This message from Admiral Caperton is dated November 10, the day before.

"23109. Arrange with President Dartigney that he be present before the session of senate which will pass upon ratification of the treaty. I request that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to President and to members of cabinet. On your part, the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform you of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally of public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that I have a demand from all classes for immediate ratification, and that the treaty was ratified Thursday.'

"I am sure that you gentlemen will understand the importance of this matter and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification, the Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until it is accomplished and that it will forthwith proceed to the control of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to the country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving population. Meanwhile the present Government will be so employed. secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, and opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits."

"The United States Government is particularly anxious for the ratification by the present senate of this treaty, which will be the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible under the provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date."

"Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife. However, should they prove true, those who accept of such bribes will be vigorously prosecuted."

"Confidential. It is expected that you will be able to make it clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification of the treaty." 22010.

There follows in this compilation a message from Admiral Caperton, dated November 11, presumably to the Secretary of the Navy, in which he says:

Mr. ANGELL. Coming now, sir, to this proroguing, or dissolution in 1916, do you know whether or not, under the Haitian constitution, provided that the President could dissolve the legislature if he did it by the decree of April 5, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. I do not think so.

Mr. ANGELL. You do not believe that the constitution gave power?

Gen. WALLER. That was one of the reasons why I opposed it. It has been necessary for it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether or not that decree made the subject of court action in the native courts of that time?

Gen. WALLER. It was made the subject of discussion by lawyers, and the President wrote me on the subject, opposing him in every way, and wished me to take action, but I interviewed them, and they assured me that they would assist in their power.

Mr. ANGELL. So far as you know or remember, then, that the civil court of Port au Prince, about April 15, authorized senators to open the gates of the legislative building, on the unconstitutionality of this decree?

Gen. WALLER. I do not remember it, but even if it had been made, it would have been paid to it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember two lawyers, Luxembourg and Lespinasse, coming to you about this decree and the question of the constitutionality of the decree?

Gen. WALLER. I remember a number of interviews with Lespinasse, Bailly, and others, but this was after the legislature was dissolved.

Mr. ANGELL. That is some time subsequent to May?

Gen. WALLER. It followed almost immediately afterwards.

Mr. HOWE. The legislature was closed on April 6, was it?

Mr. ANGELL. The decree was on April 6.

Gen. WALLER. It closed on that day, I think. I have a decree to the deputies, by which I can fix that absolutely. That meeting was on the 8th—two days afterwards.

Mr. ANGELL. What meeting, sir?

Gen. WALLER. With Chauvin, the first meeting I had with the deputies.

Mr. ANGELL. On the 8th or 18th? The decree, I believe, was on April 6.

Gen. WALLER. It was two or three days after the dissolution of the legislature.

Mr. ANGELL. After the President's decree?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Then, it would have been April 8?

Gen. WALLER. April 8 it would be.

Mr. ANGELL. The decree of the President was that of April 5?

Gen. WALLER. It is in here somewhere—a placard for the deputies.

Mr. ANGELL. I just suggest, General, it is not of sufficient importance to fix the date of this thing exactly. Perhaps we can proceed.

Mr. HOWE. What fact are you trying to fix? Perhaps the fact that the legislature was dissolved.

Mr. ANGELL. I am just trying to find out what representation was made to the General by these Haitian lawyers about the unconstitutionality of the decree.

Mr. HOWE. Can we not fix that by bringing up the question of how long after the decree was passed these representatives met?

Mr. ANGELL. There seems to be confusion somewhere. The General has it in mind that he had this interview with Lespinasse—three days after the President's decree, was it? April 8. In the Haitian memoir the statement is made that the civil court authorizing the opening of the legislative chamber met on the 15th of April, 10 days after the President's decree. The lawyers went to the General with this decree.

Gen. WALLER. They came to me at that time, too; but, I had interviews with them on the subject.

the witness has testified that he knows nothing of the decree

I do not know anything of the decree having been issued at and told them I had received instructions.

Instructions from the President?

From the President.

And you would have carried those out, do I understand you there had been a court decree as to the unconstitutionality of order, or otherwise?

Yes; as long as martial law existed.

Appearing on page 24 of the printed record, there are two would just like to ask you to look at, General, one of them being printed here, from you to Mr. Laroche, dated April 27, and another from him to you, dated April 28. I will ask you, for the purification, whether you sent and received those two letters. I am whether that is substantially correct.

That is substantially correct.

Those two letters?

I have not read Laroche's yet, but we were having a good deal on at that time.

Just want to identify these two letters, to show they were sent and being no formal proof on that subject at all thus far.

Yes; that is correct.

Then may I consider that these two letters, as identified by the text by him to be substantially correct, as having been sent to him, are offered in the record as so identified. They are in the printed record, but have never been identified or proved. They were sent, and as the Government feared impeachment, that I made there, that they were to consider those matters

Now, the specific order for the closing of the legislative chamber, as I understand it, by you from the President, and transmitted to Maj. Butler?

Yes.

How far was it customary, General, for you to receive and from the President of Haiti?

They were not orders; they were always considered as requests discussed them beforehand. This was not discussed at this of his signing of this proclamation, because he knew I op-

He transmitted it to you, with the request that it be enforced?

He transmitted it in a letter, in which he states that he relies entire support in the preservation of order, inclosing at the of the proclamation.

That is not in the record already, I suggest that it be put in proclamation of April 5, dissolving the legislature.

It is not in the record, I think it should be, and also the letter accompanying the proclamation.

Referred to is here printed in full as follows, the proclamation produced as a part of Admiral Caperton's testimony.)

PRIVATE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT OF HAITI,
Port au Prince, April 5, 1916.

W. T. WALLER,

City.

GENERAL: For the good of the Haitian people, the Government indispensable aid of the occupation, to resolutely carry out the mission (uplifting) that it has begun. But, from the very outset have witnessed, it has met with obstacles that have been thrown in the way who see in the new order of things the destruction of the things which had served their selfish and personal ends. Measures demanded by this state of things, I have decided, in the name of the Government, to publish in to-day's official executive orders (decrees) of which I have inclosed a copy. I expose setting forth the determining reasons which explain and justify said two orders. I must not let you ignore the mention had been made to Admiral Caperton and to Mr. Bailly-Latour.

After taking into consideration all possible contingencies, I rely entirely upon all your help to assure public order and security. Needs be, the evil actions of those who might wish to create a disturbance for their own personal advantage which they set above the interests of the country.

In the meantime, I send you, my dear colonel, the remembrance of my very cordial consideration.

Mr. ANGELL. Are we to understand, General, from your corvée law, that the natives flocked in to work upon the motive of their desire to see the roads improved?

Gen. WALLER. I presume so.

Mr. ANGELL. And that it was not the food and it was not the money that were after?

Gen. WALLER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. They were not paid and they were not fed?

Gen. WALLER. Some of them were paid, and a number of them have thought that there was the hope of advancement later.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you any idea, sir, how long these men were to work in this manner without pay and without food?

Gen. WALLACE. When the repairs went through a district in that district.

Mr. ANGELL. Which would have been several weeks, upon the average?

Gen. WALLER. It depended largely upon the weather. Sometimes, they had torrential downpours, and sometimes considerable rain. It might be washed away that had been done during the day, if the work was not completed.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the work continue in any given district for a period of several weeks?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Sometimes several months, perhaps?

Gen. WALLACE. Yes. In the district of Port au Prince, for instance, they were working on both sides at the same time.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, sir, in reference to the new constitution, I refer to the proposal for the acquisition of the right of citizenship for foreigners, that they were willing to put it in?

Gen. WALLER. I mean the Government.

Mr. ANGELL. The executive branch of the Government?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did that apply to the constituent assembly?

Gen. WALLER. That had not met.

Mr. ANGELL. That had not met at the time you speak of?

Gen. WALLER. The Government, the plans they were to put before the constituent assembly.

Mr. ANGELL. So the individuals who were willing to put up with the Dartiguenave government?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. That is the President and his cabinet?

Gen. WALLER. The President and his cabinet. There were, for instance, Camille Leon, the chairman of the deputies, and others of it.

Mr. ANGELL. Had the conseil d'état been organized at the time of the meeting?

Gen. WALLER. During the discussion?

Mr. ANGELL. At the time of the discussion of the proposed constitution?

Gen. WALLER. Partially so; yes. He requested them to send a delegation.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there any authorization for such a body to be organized? If you know, any authorization for the body of the conseil d'état?

Gen. WALLER. I think so; either in that or the prior constitution.

Mr. ANGELL. The constitution which was then in force was the constitution of 1889, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes. I say either that or the one before that, which of the two; but they had ample authority for it, it seems to me.

Mr. ANGELL. After the treaty went into effect in June, 1900, this treaty by the United States Senate, was there any single tary, head in Haiti or was it a responsibility divided among a ry and civilian representatives?

Financial affairs were controlled by the financial adviser, who nder the treaty.

o whom did he report in this country?

The State Department, I presume.

o whom did the receiver general of customs report?

Yes; there were two engineers provided for. One of them was my own engineer.

o you know what accounting was made to the Haitien Govern-men national funds by our civil and military representatives in f course, up to the time that you left?

Yes. The military, strictly speaking, had absolutely nothing to pt to disburse the funds, except at the request of the financial receiver general.

he military made no report or accounting to the Haitian Gov-as not their function?

It was not their function.

LITTLE

I want to ask you, in this connection, if you remember the date when the treaty was officially notified of the ratification by the United States Government. The treaty is dated September 16, 1915?

Gen. WALLER. No; I do not recall the date.

Mr. ANGELL. You had not been notified at this time, on the date that the treaty had been ratified by the Senate on May 3, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. No; on the date of that letter I did not know that the United States had ratified the treaty.

Mr. ANGELL. So that, so far as you, the brigade commander, the treaty was not yet formally in effect?

Gen. WALLER. The Haitian Government had claimed from the date that the treaty had been in effect for months when it had not been ratified by the Government.

Mr. HOWE. When did the treaty become formally in effect? Was it by ratification or ratification?

Mr. ANGELL. It was ratified on May 3, and I believe it was not until the 3d of June.

Mr. HOWE. That is when it became effective, is it not?

Mr. ANGELL. That is a question of constitutional law. The treaty came into effect at that time. Prior to that time there had been no modus operandi?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Which was soon after or immediately following the signature of the original treaty in September?

Gen. WALLER. Frequently they had stated to me that the treaty was in operation before our ratifying it.

Mr. ANGELL. The modus operandi was, however, in the treaty, was it not, or substantially so?

Gen. WALLER. Not entirely so, because we had charge of the public works at that time. It was after this that they made this claim. When I was written it was because they had sent an architect up to look at the supply of a suburb of Port au Prince, and he had driven to the public works officer, and I had sent an officer up to him and appointed him. He had communicated with the Government. They then wrote me and he wrote me on the subject, and I replied in that way because of that.

Mr. ANGELL. When were the public works taken over by the Government?

Gen. WALLER. We took them over at first.

Mr. ANGELL. In the early days of the occupation?

Gen. WALLER. In the fall of 1915. We took them over after we had taken over the customs.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the occupation requested by the Department to take over the public works, or was that done as a necessity?

Gen. WALLER. It was done for military reasons, but it was done with the approval of the Dartiguenave government. Many suggestions were made.

Mr. ANGELL. And the administration of public works was taken over by officers of the military occupation until the engineer proposed by the treaty was nominated and sent down to Haiti?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And was that prior, do you remember, to the departure of the American forces in November, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. He came down just before I left, but he was not in the office exactly. I think he was there probably a month or so before I left.

Mr. ANGELL. So at the time you left in November, 1916?

Gen. WALLER. It had not been taken over.

Mr. ANGELL. The military officers of the occupation were in charge of the public works?

 ding the proposal to place under the control of the gene lighthouse service was always ours. The postal service and h was the principal thing.

 e us, General, in brief, that story, will you please?
 he proposition was made and accepted by President Darti-overnment. It was made because we would save the Govern-sum of money, and we would give efficient service. We had men who had operated everything in Vera Cruz for nine y hitch, or anything of that sort, and we were prepared to the lines all the way through Haiti, so that communication carried on. We also wished to stop the graft in the post messenger, but he had it coded and sent down, and it was his promise.

Mr. ANGELL. It was in code, was it?

Gen. WALLER. It was in code.

Mr. ANGELL. How could we tell it was exactly the reverse? Gen. WALLER. Because it is our business to decipher a message frequently it does not take them but a very few minutes to get the intricate code, either in the air or on the wire.

Mr. ANGELL. You were saying the message was exactly the promised?

Gen. WALLER. Yes; exactly the reverse; and when I went said that there had been an error in coding it, but I told him been no error and that I would be obliged to say to my Government that his Government was insincere in its question of removing martial law had arisen, and I said, "done?" He said, "No; under no circumstances."

Mr. ANGELL. This all happened during the summer of 191

Mr. ANGELL. Early in August, was it not?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it finally agreed that these various services were under control of the gendarmerie?

Gen. WALLER. Not at that time; no.

Mr. ANGELL. Subsequently it was agreed in the final agenda

Gen. WALLER. That was a long time after.

Mr. ANGELL. After your departure?

Gen. WALLER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. So that you have no particular knowledge of accomplishment?

Gen. WALLER. I have no knowledge of that. In fact, I think it has not been done. I mean the postal service. It was not done at that time, they had not been turned over to the gendarmerie. I believe the agreement it was agreed to, but I do not think it had yet been carried out.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Mr. Augustus Scholle, the chargé d'affaires conference in early August, do you remember?

Gen. WALLER. He was present at the first one. He was final one. There were several interviews that took place about

OF BRIG. GEN. ALBERTUS W. CATLIN, UNITED STATES
MARINE CORPS, RETIRED, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Gen. Catlin, will you give your name, rank, and present station?
Albertus W. Catlin, brigadier general, United States Marine 101 Webster Street NW., Washington, D. C.

How long ago did you retire, General?

I retired in December, 1919.

How long before that had you become a member of the Marine

I was appointed in the Marine Corps on the 1st of July, 1892.

Did you see active service overseas, did you not, during the war?

I was over there for about eight months.

What was your command in France?

I had command of the Sixth Regiment of Marines.

Were you wounded?

Until I was wounded.

When you returned to this country?

I spent about six weeks in the hospital in Paris, and then re-

Where was it that you were wounded?

I was in the first attack on Belleau Wood, June 6, 1918.

How was after your return from France that you were sent to Haiti;

I was; I was sent to Haiti in November, 1918, after returning

What was your assignment down in Haiti?

I was assigned as brigade commander of the marines in Haiti.

Which officer did you succeed?

Col. John H. Russell.

What was Col. Russell's first tour down there?

He was.

How long did you remain brigade commander?

I remained from the 1st of December, 1918, to the 15th of July,

May on leave on the 15th of July, 1919.

When were you relieved, and when?

I was relieved in September.

Throughout, however, returning to Haiti?

Without returning to Haiti.

Were you succeeded by?

By Col. Russell, whom I had succeeded.

What was the state of Haitian affairs when you got down there?

There was trouble in the field?

Gen. CATLIN. Affairs in Port au Prince were very quiet. Shortly before I arrived in the Hinche district, or in the Hinche, and about the date of my arrival, I think it was, there had been an attack upon the town of Hinche by band extra gendarmes, had been sent up from Port au Prince to Mr. HOWE. Lieut. Col. Williams was the commander of that time?

Gen. CATLIN. He was during my whole tour.

Mr. HOWE. What did you estimate the situation to be at whether it was possible for the gendarmerie to control it?

Gen. CATLIN. Well, of course, my estimate at that time upon information I received from the officers who had been knew nothing of the country myself, and Col. Williams a could control it.

Mr. HOWE. Did you later on send a detachment or company Hinche?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; in February, the latter part of February who was in command of the northern district and the region Cape Haitien, sent a company of marines on a hike to Hinche making a report to me of conditions he had found up there recommendations which I afterwards approved, and they were k marines finally took over operations themselves.

Mr. HOWE. When was it that the marines took over operations?

Gen. CATLIN. Active operations were started about the 1st marines were sent in there during March.

Mr. HOWE. When did you first visit the Hinche district?

Gen. CATLIN. I do not know the exact date, but it was so second week in March.

Mr. HOWE. What were conditions up there when you went?

Gen. CATLIN. I found conditions were very bad. I found outside of the town was practically depopulated. All of the were empty, and the occupants had disappeared.

Mr. HOWE. What had brought that about?

Gen. CATLIN. As far as I could gather from this information about by two reasons: One was the bandits, the fear of the been recruiting throughout the district, forcing the people the other one, I came to the conclusion, was fear of the gend

Mr. HOWE. Please say a little more about that second reason of the gendarmes.

Gen. CATLIN. Well, the gendarmes were scattered all over detachments, generally with one white officer, who was a necessary, of course, to send out patrols through the district under a sergeant, corporal, etc., and I found that the native prone to use his position against other natives; if he was g at all he was very prone to exceed it, and that the patrol people, and a number of cases were reported where natives and robbed, and women carried off, and shot, and things like was the reason I said I came to the conclusion that one reason gendarmes. Many of them had disappeared, having either bandits or gone into the towns for protection.

Mr. HOWE. If a native in or near his own house saw another armed, what was his guess as to whether it was a bandit or

Gen. CATLIN. I do not think he stopped to guess; he goes to the woods.

Mr. HOWE. And if a peaceful native was seen taking to a gendarme, with no white officer present, what would the general at that time in that place?

Gen. CATLIN. At that time, with bandits in the field, the general shot at him, because it was found that the bandits had all over the country and had their own men scattered around have them out three or four hills ahead of the bands; so that that if you saw a man running he was one of their men running notice. That was the general supposition whenever a man was

Mr. HOWE. Was the overbearing attitude of a gendarme the immediate control of a white officer sufficient in itself to drive the inhabitants away; I mean at that time and under those conditions?

I do not know that it was; but there were other things, of as the corvee, too, which probably had an effect on that, too.
March, 1919?

Well, in March, 1919, there was a modified corvee working in and that contributed also to the unsettled conditions?

Undoubtedly.

I understand that it was on account of those unsettled conditrust of the gendarmerie that you sent the marines in there for

Yes; I sent the marines in there on account of that; and my that they were simply to go in and take station in the town, not the field in any manner whatever, leaving that entirely to the

Did you take any other steps to restore confidence there?
in March?

Yes. When we took over the operations the first thing we out a notice or proclamation by means of the priests, market means we had all over the island, or that district of the island, tives to come in and give themselves up and they would receive we issued a sort of a pass to them which guaranteed protection, ere were something over 3,000, as I remember it, who came in se passes.

How many of those that came in were armed?

None of them brought arms at that time. Later men came in received passes. That was a period of about two weeks which to come in.

And that was in March?

That was in March.

You spoke of taking over operations. From whom did you take

From the gendarmerie. Up to that time Col. Williams had he could handle the situation, and it was a gendarmerie job, p, but the bandits increased to such an extent that he found, Andrew troops from Port au Prince, and sent about 500 addiup there, that he could not handle it, and about the middle little later than that, he informed me that he could not handle when I sent the rest of the marines in and took over operations

How long did those operations remain active?

Until some time after I left; I do not know the exact date, on when I left.

What form did the operations of the marines take?

Well, the operations were not strictly military, in a military ines were stationed at all the different towns in the district, divided up. For instance, the Fifty-fourth Company, with Hinche, had detachments at Maissade, St. Michel, and later aces. Another company which came from Ouanaminthe, was au and Thomasique, and three or four towns in there, and a n it spread down toward the south, companies were sent to as Cohobas. These companies there were divided into differ-and patrols were sent out from these towns. There were no e sent out by the trails over the mountains. At first they went the bandits, but it was found that it was impossible to find them e used native guides, and the farmers wherever we could get ally became necessary to locate a camp, and then march at ols would do their marching at night and jump the camp at was the only way we could get in touch with them.
ut was the effect of this patrolling and these morning sur-

The effect was that the small bands joined in with other bands.
men came in and gave themselves up. A lot of them claimed ed by the bandits and forced to serve with them. But it had fect on the bands themselves. Charlemagne, who was in com-t, and entitled himself commander in chief of the forces fighting against the Americans, sent over the island trying to re-number of letters that he had sent, one to the magistrate of is up near Cape Hatien, and to Gen. Aspelly, telling him time for all good Haitians to join in, stating he had 30,000

Mr. HOWE. Did he have 30,000 men in the field?

Gen. CATLIN. No; it was impossible to tell how many he had at that time that there were about 5,000 bandits in the field and of those probably not over one-quarter, or less than that.

Mr. HOWE. How many marines were there in the field then?

Gen. CATLIN. There were less than 2,000 in the island. I exact number, but I imagine probably 500 or 600 in the interior.

Mr. HOWE. Actively engaged in the interior?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Were the gendarmes cooperating at that time?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; to a certain extent. I had stopped all district by the gendarmes, for the reason which I gave before.
districts farther to the west, toward Gonaïves, I still allowed them there; it was outside of the district where the conditions had

Mr. HOWE. What was the area of these operations?

Gen. CATLIN. I imagine from St. Michel to the border was or 60 miles, and it was probably 15 miles across the hills other way, so I should say, roughly, that it was about 50 miles, something like that.

Mr. HOWE. That region might be described as being in the

Gen. CATLIN. Yes. It belongs to the northern district, but in the center of Haiti, I should say.

Mr. HOWE. Had Charlemagne been captured or killed before?

Gen. CATLIN. No. Before I left I had a letter from the Haitien, requesting that I allow Charlemagne and Norde, the leaders there, to escape from the island.

Mr. HOWE. You spoke of the bands of natives getting large small bands joining up together?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. On their part, what did the bandits do?

Gen. CATLIN. Well, the bandits—most of their activities, they were fighting against the Americans, were against the
They would jump a little town and burn the houses, take could gather with them as recruits, and all the provisions and which they could get.

Mr. HOWE. Did they commit any brutalities on the women?

Gen. CATLIN. Not that I know of; I know of nothing of number of cases where there were small gendarme posts and gendarme posts to get the arms and ammunition, principally the uniforms which they captured. There were a number where gendarme uniforms were seen with the bandits.

Mr. HOWE. You spoke of them jumping small towns. I gendarme posts were in those towns?

Gen. CATLIN. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. HOWE. Sometimes with posts in the towns and sometimes

Gen. CATLIN. Yes. It would not necessarily be a town. I community, like, for instance, near Ennery. They went there, which is on the road from Ennery to St. Michel—the road up to Cape Haitien—went through one night and burned in the district for about 3 miles, destroyed the growing crops everybody off.

Mr. HOWE. Then, from March until the time you left, did characteristics mark the operations in the fighting up there?

Gen. CATLIN. Practically.

Mr. HOWE. In Port au Prince what were the conditions?

Gen. CATLIN. Conditions were apparently comparatively Prince. There were, of course, the usual rumors always there was going to be an attack on Port au Prince, but it never and there were in Port au Prince undoubtedly a lot of people ing the bandits in a way, both with money and with information.

Mr. HOWE. There were no outstanding political occurrences at that time; that was, not during your tour?

nothing at all; and there was absolutely nothing political in the bandits in the field.

Can you explain that a little further, please?

What I mean is that there was nothing against the Government really. The bandit uprising was started by Charlemagne, a Caco leader before he had been imprisoned in Cape Haitien, in September, 1918, and took to the woods and gathered a group around him, and most of the leaders of the bandits were Cacos.

Did he describe his operations as being against the Americans?

He did that for recruiting purposes, principally, as far as I can tell. What do you think started this trouble, aside from the escape of Charlemagne? I doubt if there would have been any trouble if Charlemagne had not

I think he started the whole thing.

Was there any feeling existed among the people whom he recruited which would induce them to take up arms and operate against the Americans?

Well, that I do not know. As I say, he was one of the old

I have been told that there was a feeling among the natives to follow their old leaders. A lot of the ignorant natives and

What would you say that the operation of the corvee had anything to do with the growing of discontent which would have made this outbreak possible?

I think the operation of the corvee possibly aggravated the situation. I do not think the corvee had anything to do with the original outbreak. I think the operation of the corvee undoubtedly sent a number of bandits. Were you personally during the greater part of the tour in Haiti?

Yes, Port au Prince.

Under whose direct immediate control were the operations in the district? Lieut. Col. Richard Hooker.

Did you make, however, General, an inspection trip?

Yes, I made several inspection trips.

Were you referring particularly to one up to Hinche and the Hinche district? I went to Hinche about four times.

Did you make an inspection trip in which you were principally interested in finding out whether the corvee was going on?

Yes, sir. When did that trip start?

That trip took place about the middle of March; I do not remember the exact date. Would you please tell us what led up to your taking that inspection trip? Rumors had reached me that conditions were unsatisfactory in the district. I stated that it was not; he had issued an order in October to stop the corvee; but I believe it was worded so that it covered certain districts intended to cover the road to Hinche, and he had discovered that the

Gen. CATLIN. That is the report of the investigation.

Mr. HOWE. And on which you invited the comment of Col. Wells?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I think this report should be on record. I offer this report of Col. Hooker's for the record, and #### Personal.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I left for Hinche Tuesday last, arriving I inspected the whole district south of San Michel. I am accompanied by special messenger, as I consider immediate action most important. The fourth Company will leave here for the Hinche district Tuesday on a hike, arriving in Hinche next Friday or Saturday. I have time to approve or modify my recommendations given later.

I found the following conditions existing: The corvee is still in effect, either accidentally or otherwise by the payment of more than one gourde forty per week per man. Men are kept a long time on this work, and in order to escape the draft they are joining the so-called Cacos. The magistrate of Malsade is a weak man, and is to be removed, being back of the corvee and using about 50 men. This can be taken up later. It was very hard for me to find the gendarmes themselves, as the entire district was expected to be under the control of the natives I could get to come to me, and together with the priests I am certain that the corvee is a great whole trouble, as it was in 1917 when Hinche was attacked. The other cause, which is equally as important as the corvee, is the criminal strong-arm work being pulled off. A great many men are suffering; and those who are outside the towns, not necessarily, are remaining in the bush through fear of the gendarmes, who are helped in their methods by officers of the gendarmerie who have intelligence or experience to act in executive capacities. I am sure to state that I got the impression that the officers higher up are using these methods.

I ran into a horrible condition in San Michel. On Wednesday I had a talk with Lieut. Haug. He was in a frightful mental state, on the verge of a nervous breakdown. He volunteered and told me which I corroborated by the magistrat, his interpreter, that on the 4th of February he ordered some prisoners to work on the road for 15 or 20 minutes had passed and the prisoners had not a chance to leave. A corporal was standing in front of them and when questioned, refused point blank to either let them work or to obey any order from Haug. Haug then told him to take the key to the prison, and when he reached to take the key the corporal caught him by the throat, and assisted by two other men held him against the wall. Haug tried to pull his gun and the gendarmes had secured their rifles and had them pointed at him to shoot. Haug is over 50, and he is in horrible physical condition. He is not strong, and he does not yet realize the enormity of what he has done. The next day, while I was out of San Michel, Capt. Gibbons, came to make an investigation. Gibbons was supposed to have made it much sooner, as he knew at least seven days previously that similar conditions existed at San Michel. He claims that he was the cause of the assault. When I arrived in the evening I found that his investigation by informing Haug that he was going to discharge him out of the gendarmerie and other like remarks. The orderly, Susse, was present. He conducted the investigation of the gendarme in separately, excluding Haug, and making him confidential. The interpreter told me later that the gendarmes were pleased because they had put their officer in a bad hole and that they wanted an officer, which they wanted. I, unfortunately, was too late to prevent the investigation started and to prevent Haug from being taken into the hands of the accused. I took charge later to the extent of ordering to Gonaives, with instructions to return with sufficient men to take charge of the place with reliable men. Haug knows of it, and if the gendarmerie does not act immediately it will take charge. The news of the affair has spread rapidly and is very serious, although at present I do not believe so if action is aj. Wells stated that he had just been through the district, f he was satisfied that there was no corvée. He stated posi-

 ; that he had seen the men paid off by the gendarme officer,

Lieut. Williams, at Maissade, and stated that there were no men on the pay roll or working—no; I am wrong there. It was not as he stated that. He stated he did not know how the men were paid, but was satisfied there was no corvée. I then sent Williams out to find out who paid the men, as there was some talk of the money being paid to the magistrate to pay them, and to investigate on his part which he did.

Mr. HOWE. Wells, you mean?

Gen. CATLIN. Wells.

Mr. HOWE. You sent him back?

Gen. CATLIN. I sent him back for his side, for the general. That report was made verbally, not in writing, and when Col. Hooker and Col. Williams were also present at the time, in the manner in which the men were paid, and that he found that many were working, or they were all on the pay roll, and not on corvée.

Mr. HOWE. Was this verbal report made at Port au Prince?

Gen. CATLIN. At Port au Prince; yes. The two reports were opposite that I decided to go up into the district myself and see what the conditions actually were. So that, I think in the middle of March that I took Col. Williams with me and went up.

Mr. HOWE. Your investigations there, as I have heard, were of the corvée, and incidentally to that you heard reports of men being paid and made investigations along that line?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; my object in going was to investigate the conditions. As I was practically new to the country and found I had reports a very good idea, I went up to satisfy myself what the conditions were, and to satisfy myself in regard to the corvée.

Mr. HOWE. Was that your first visit to the Hinche district?

Gen. CATLIN. My first visit; yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. General, will you please describe your inspection and how you went about it and what you found out?

Gen. CATLIN. Well, I went up to St. Michel, and was joined by Wells and Col. Hooker, and then proceeded to Maissada first. On arriving at Maissada I found a gang of about 45 men working in the fields, gendarmes sentries over them, and I stopped, and, through questioning the most intelligent looking members of the gang, I stated that they were not there of their own free will but that they had been ordered there. Several of them stated that they had been brought by the chief of section. There was no chief of section but he had been changed to the chief of agriculture. The chief of section in Haiti used to have a great deal of authority in his section.

Mr. HOWE. He was a civil Haitian officer?

Gen. CATLIN. He was a civil Haitian officer, and most of the time they had to do whatever the chief of section told them to do. They had been directed to report to the point there for work, and had been ordered to do so, but did not dare not to come. A number of them stated they had been ordered to go to the gardens, and had been ordered out to come, and had gone to the bad because they had not been able to work there.

Mr. HOWE. Let me interrupt you there. Did you gather that they had been ordered by the chief of section or the chief of agriculture?

Gen. CATLIN. Most of them; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Did you find or did some of them tell you that they had been ordered there by the gendarmes?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; in one or two cases the men had been ordered by the gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. That is what they said?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; they said gendarmes had come out and ordered them to go to work and they had come along. I asked them if they had been ordered to use force, and they said no; they did not have to use force, because what the gendarmes said was enough for them.

Mr. HOWE. According to the answers you got, what proportion of the men were ordered to come by the gendarmes and what proportion were directed by the officers?

Gen. CATLIN. I can not remember that, but there were some men directed by gendarmes, as I remember it.

the rest?

The rest were mostly ordered by the chief of section. There claimed that they had been told to come into a meeting or some-Maissade, and when they got in there they were locked up for

After questioning a number of these men, I then asked all who

Gen. CATLIN. Williams.

Mr. HOWE. Col. Williams?

Gen. CATLIN. No; Lieut. Williams.

Mr. HOWE. Dorcas Williams?

Gen. CATLIN. Dorcas Williams.

Mr. HOWE. What conclusion did you reach on that, Gen. there to protect the gang or to prevent the gang from running Gen. CATLIN. Well, my idea at the time was that they were gang from running away.

Mr. HOWE. What led you to that conclusion?

Gen. CATLIN. Simply the fact that the men were there that there was as I say, one man who apparently was a self, that had been captured near the foothills, running off believe, and he would probably take to the woods when he got

Mr. HOWE. Was Col. Williams present at this time?

Gen. CATLIN. Col. Williams was standing beside me; yes.

Mr. HOWE. What, if any, comment did he make on the

Gen. CATLIN. None whatever at that time.

Mr. HOWE. Did he offer any explanation of the apparent between the facts as you found them and his report?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes. A little later he stated that his idea had made the statements to me because they thought that was that that was the Haitien custom.

Mr. HOWE. Did you regard that incident of that gang violation of the orders stopping the corvee?

Gen. CATLIN. I did; yes.

Mr. HOWE. And you still so regard it?

Gen. CATLIN. I do.

Mr. HOWE. In the course of that inspection trip, or otherwise did you come across other states of affairs which you regarded of that order against the corvee?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; I found in Hinche that same day that the gendarmerie had been building a prison and bar believe they were very short of money, and the gendarme of all the inhabitants of a certain district called Zebguinea and Hinche and presumably for protection. Zebguinea being claiming that it was a bad district and that no one but bar anyway and these men were either bandits or in favor of these men had all been worked on these barracks to build a prison, and paid nothing, but were fed.

Mr. HOWE. Were these men prisoners?

Gen. CATLIN. They were not prisoners, but they were there. They had all been released or let go before my arrival.

Mr. HOWE. Were they detained in the compound against

Gen. CATLIN. I assumed so. They had no other place. The town was full of people. They were detained in the not allowed to leave the town.

Mr. HOWE. How many days' work did they work there, was the extent of that job?

Gen. CATLIN. I do not know that. It was quite a build there.

Mr. HOWE. Masonry?

Gen. CATLIN. Masonry.

Mr. HOWE. What part did they take in the construction you hear; what kind of labor?

Gen. CATLIN. Well, the stone all had to be carried from distance.

Mr. HOWE. What did you find out about the magistrate Hooker said was using 50 men for his own garden?

Gen. CATLIN. I was unable to get any information on the who would mention it at all was the priest of Maissade, afraid of his life and would not go into the town. I saw He claimed the magistrate had two men hired to kill him to the town. I think he was crazy, because his statements was unable to get any information, because there was no one who had been there, they left before I arrived.

Aside from these instances, were there any further violations of the corvee?

Not that I know of—not that I heard of.

Do you believe these instances marked the end of the corvee in Haiti?

I think so.

General, in your investigation there did you learn how this road was built and who paid them?

Yes; the road gang was paid personally by the gendarme.

And, in your opinion, was there any chance for the chief of section to come in on the pay of these men in any way?

No; when I say they were paid in that way, I mean they were paid when I got there, but how long before they started that I do not know.

Did you form any idea as to why these chiefs of section were paid for the road gang?

I did not go into that, because I was satisfied myself that the road gang was on, and my main object was simply to stop it, but my idea was that they were probably acting under the orders of the magistrate of the district.

Was there anything in it for the magistrate?

No; except it was a very nice thing to get a good road put in for communication in that country. I would like to say here that this corvee it covered only a very small section of Haiti; that is, this one locality, not in any other part of Haiti.

What is the breach of the orders?

Yes.

What leaves me to ask how much of Haiti the corvee system extended in it was at its height?

Well, I was not there at that time, but, as far as I know, it was on the road from Port au Prince to Cape Haitien. The road was in putting through that road. As far as I know, the corvee was in the southern part of the island.

Do you want to go back again and ask you about the chiefs of section, did you learn which would lead you to believe that before the road was built and inspected any money had been paid to the chiefs of section for the corvee gangs?

No; I had no reason to believe it had been.

Is there anything more that you might add about your investigation at that time?

Nothing.

What other subjects did you investigate?

Well, I called for the magistrate, the judge de paix, and the principal of the town to come before me, and questioned them on conditions, and the judge de paix said everything was all right and there were some complaints, of course, against the magistrate, those were things which I did not take up. It was the business of the officer, not mine.

Did you hear reports of the killing of prisoners?

At Malissade I questioned a lot of gendarme privates. In fact, they came before me; and they came and at least two stated that they had killed, Lieut. Doras Williams, had killed a native named Garnier, and, of course, a local lawyer or something like that there.

When you say a local lawyer, would he be described down there as a lawyer?

A notary, yes; and these two men, two privates, stated that this man had been sent for on the day after the attack by the bandits on Malissade, brought to the office, and had been beaten to death with a cane, the sergeant denied it, and Lieut. William denied it, and the magistrate and so did others. I found out upon further investigation that the man who made the original report had both had a grudge against the sergeant for treatment which they had received from him. One of them, the sergeant, found asleep on a post, and he had been kicked up because he was found asleep, and the other man something else; so I decided that there was probably nothing in it, as those two men were the only ones who said anything about it. The others although Williams admitted that the man had died in his first sergeant both claimed that he had been shot. He was which was between the gendarmes and the bandits on the had been shot in the stomach, and when he came over he was a towel, and he died from the effects of the wound.

Mr. HOWE. Therefore, in this Garnier case, where the accusation against Lieut. Williams, you took no action because you had no accusation?

Gen. CATLIN. I took no action because I could get no testimony from two men who had a grudge against the lieutenant—two gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. You mentioned talking to other witnesses, they testified in a way contrary to the statement of the two gendarmes.

Gen. CATLIN. Including the first sergeant of the detachment of the town and the judge de paix.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether this case of the killing of Lieut. Williams was one of the subjects of the Mayo court of inquiry?

Gen. CATLIN. I have been told so. I do not know it personally.

Mr. HOWE. Maj. McClellan, is it your recollection of the court of inquiry record, which we are going to put in the record as an opportunity to call Maj. Dyer, that Lieut. Williams was charged with the charge of killing Garnier?

Maj. McCLELLAN. Yes; to such an extent that there is a copy of a Haitian document which was in the Mayo court, I believe, a copy of a Haitian document which was not known how he met his death; in other words, it was a document which they do not know whether it was a caco bullet or an American bullet which killed him in this scrap around there. It is very definitely a death is not attributable to Lieut. Williams.

Mr. ANGELL. What is that Haitian document, do you know?

Mr. HOWE. It is in the record here.

Mr. Chairman, I asked Maj. McClellan that question at the time it seemed to me that there should be some mention of the court of inquiry in the record in connection with this testimony of Gen. Williams. In other words, in justice to Lieut. Williams, after investigation, it would be better for it to be put in the record at this time.

I will read from page 205 of the record of the Mayo court of inquiry, which, it is there testified, was written by the judge de paix in 1919, to the commissary government of the city of Gonaïves.

"COMMISSARY: I am in haste to inform you that the bandits yesterday noon. During the fight the notary, Garnier Jean, and whose house was between two fires, was wounded. No bullet was fired by the gendarmes or by the cacos.

"After the battle he was sent for to come to the office where he died a short time after. During this time his body was put under seal. The bandits were repulsed.

"I salute you, commissary, with respect."

General, in addition to this accusation against Lieut. Williams, were there any other accusations against other officers of the gendarmerie for the same offenses?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; upon my arrival at Hinche I sent for the judge de paix, and several other natives and questioned them separately in regard to conditions and their knowledge. The priest rather wild. The priest stated that over 50 persons had been killed but he had not seen any of the killings; he only heard it from the magistrat, as I remember, stated that a number had been killed but he did not state how many, but other people placed the number any. After talking with all of these people, I went into the house outside on the porch. I went in the house and questioned the priest who had been in command of the gendarmes at Hinche. At first he said there had been no killings, but when I informed him of what I had heard from the magistrate and the priest, he said there had been six persons killed. He stated that they were bandits and had been captured in the hills; they had since tried to escape several times, and caught.

Not entirely. The statements made by the other witnesses and a number of statements made were, on the face of them, not consider that the'r statements amounted to anything, one r, as far as corroboration went.

I think he was queer, and without orroboration, I would hesitate to believe that they had been the thing over very carefully with Gen. Well, in the first place, I did not believe that it could be proved Undoubtedly if he had been brought to trial he would have ility, and I did not believe that any court would accept the ese witnesses that I had heard. I considered that if the man trial and acquitted it would have a very bad effect with the arly, who would say that we had whitewashed the man, and I better not to try him. I considered that their services were no longer of any use in at they were simply harmful, and I directed Col. Williams to once, and ordered them to Port au Prince, and to take steps to have them removed from the gendarmerie, because I were proper officers for the gendarmerie.

Mr. HOWE. How soon afterwards, do you know, did the gendarmerie?

Gen. CATLIN. They did get out, but I do not remember now took some little time. It had to be done in the States; or the States.

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; but they were taken to Port au Prince and were kept in Port au Prince under the colonel's eye all the time.

Mr. HOWE. When they finally were relieved of duty with the 101st Airborne Division, they reverted to duty as members of the enlisted forces of the Army.

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know anything of the subsequent history of Williams or Capt. Layole?

Mr. HOWE. Did you, on that inspection trip, hear of any killing of natives?

Gen. CATLIN. No.

Mr. HOWE. Subsequent to that inspection trip, did you have any knowledge of the killing of native prisoners?

Gen. CATLIN. The case I heard of was the case at Croix de la Chapelle, near Port au Prince, where a man was taken out, a man was taken out, and executed that night.

Mr. HOWE. Under whose order?

Gen. CATLIN. Lieut. Brokaw.

Mr. HOWE. That was the incident which was the subject of the courts-martial of Privates Johnson and McQuilkin?

Gen. CATLIN. It was.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any other cases of alleged killings during that time there?

Gen. CATLIN. There was a case of a gendarme killing someone, I believe, one or two being Santo Dominicans, which took place before my arrival but for which I ordered a military commission of one man, and he was acquitted by the military commission.

Mr. HOWE. That military commission met at?

Mr. HOWE. The military commission is the only body which can sentence to death?

Gen. CATLIN. A court-martial could sentence to death, but not people, people under their jurisdiction, not for civilians.

Mr. HOWE. Not for civilians?

Gen. CATLIN. No.

Mr. HOWE. Could a gendarme have been tried—a gendarme court-martial?

Gen. CATLIN. He could have been tried by a gendarmier or by a marine court-martial.

Mr. HOWE. Why was it that this gendarme, accused of was tried before a military commission?

Gen. CATLIN. Because—well, it was directed by Admiralty, and the probability is it was because one or two of the people sup-

Maj. McCLELLAN. This man referred to was a gendarmier.

Mr. HOWE. Was Hill a gendarmerie officer?

Gen. CATLIN. Hill was a gendarmerie officer, but I had him on temporary duty and had put him in command of that district.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether Maj. Jacob M. Pearce Mirebalais in the absence of Maj. Hill?

Gen. CATLIN. No; I do not know. I imagine, though, I have said it a number of times.

Mr. HOWE. Is there anybody else there who could have been in command of May or the early part of June, 1919, acting in command?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; any officer who might have been left in command of the company would have been sent out at different times. Capt. E. was sent out with the company to Las Cohobas, and then to his company or a part of it, and some officer would be in Mirebalais. Now, during that time, whenever Col. Hill was sent to go to a different part of the country—Las Cohobas, or a different part of the country, or to the mountains, the officer left would be in command temporarily of the town.

Mr. ANGELL. You testified, General, that to the best of corvee had actually been in operation only on the Port au road. Was that just your understanding of it, or are you of that?

Gen. CATLIN. That is my understanding. I know nothing but it is only from hearsay, what I heard in regard to it.

Mr. ANGELL. Are you able to give us any estimate of who had been engaged at any one time in forced work on corvée?

Gen. CATLIN. No; absolutely. As I say, all my informants have heard of camps of 2,000 men, etc., but that is all. As to the number of men, I have not any idea. Gen. Butler would be the only man to give the actual number, probably.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see any of those camps yourself, them, when you came there?

Gen. CATLIN. I saw places which were said to have been

Did you ever hear whether or not those camps were surrounded and closures? You never heard of any such rumor?

Not barbed wire; no. I heard they had inclosed camps, and not in them.

And kept in them by armed guards?

Yes.

Were those guards, so far as you heard, always gendarmes, or mes marines?

Always gendarmes. All the corvee was worked by the gendarmes as I know.

Were these camps, so far as you know, in charge of white gendarme officers?

Yes. As I say, my information is all hearsay on the corvee, and I took place before I went down there.

Do you know of your own personal knowledge of the corvee and went out on this inspection tour at Maissade and Hinche?

Yes.

What is your understanding of the meaning of the word

The meaning of the word "corvee" in the corvee law of Haiti could be taken to work in their district upon the roads for a certain time each year, and upon the completion of that time they were released; that they had so worked and completed their work.

Do you remember what that period of time was?

I do not remember; roughly, I should say, two weeks, but I do not know. As I said, the corvee did not interest me, the corvee itself. The question of stopping the corvee that interested me.

Was it your understanding that the corvee administered prior to 1919 in conformity with the old Haitian law or custom?

As I understood it, the corvee, as first started, was in compliance with the law, and that later, in building the road to Cape Haitien, it was through a district where very few people lived, that there was no need to do the work, according to the law, and that natives were not taken from other districts.

And was it your understanding that these natives were kept in the statutory period of service?

I have heard so. These statements I have made in regard to the corvee are absolutely from hearsay evidence, not from any knowledge on my part.

Can you tell, General, from your conversations with Haitians and American officers in Haiti, particularly from any conversation with Col. Butler, our marine officer, that there had been the policy in the corvee of taking men and making them work in districts beyond their own and keeping them beyond the statutory period of time, etc.? No; I do not know who did that. All I ever heard was that the corvee was under Gen. Butler's régime, and presumably carried on during the administration of the gendarmes officer.

What do you believe that Charlemagne and the other Caco leaders who were active in the operations were conducted in 1919 intended and hoped to obtain some operations or activities out there in the hills?

It is impossible for me to state what they believed; I have not heard, they were outlaws. They could not come in themselves and be imprisoned.

How are they outlaws; in what sense?

Well, Charlemagne was an outlaw, because he was serving as an outlaw, and escaped at the time. Norde was an outlaw, for the same reason?

Norde had not escaped. Norde had always been an outlaw, as far as I could gather.

He never had been brought to trial?

No, to my knowledge he never had been.

Was that generally true of the other Caco leaders?

Of the principal ones, I think. Some of them were new. One of the ones down on the southern side of Mirebalais was a young man named Charlemagne, by the way, been tried and imprisoned by

Gen. CATLIN. By the provost court.

Mr. ANGELL. For some violation of the criminal law?

Gen. CATLIN. No; banditry, in 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. For being in armed opposition to the Haitian the American occupation?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And sentenced to imprisonment?

Gen. CATLIN. For a certain period; I do not remember the

Mr. ANGELL. From which sentence he had escaped?

Gen. CATLIN. He had escaped from the gendarme sentry, on the road, and disappeared.

Mr. ANGELL. To what extent do you believe the opposition of the American military forces in Haiti contributed to the opposition under the lead or inspiration of Charlemagne's followers?

Gen. CATLIN. None.

Mr. ANGELL. You believe, then, that the sole motive of these irregulars, the Cacos out in the hills, was criminal banditry?

Gen. CATLIN. The sole motive at first was that, and their and their fighting against the Americans, was to protect the hills.

Mr. ANGELL. Protect themselves from what?

Gen. CATLIN. From the Americans who were trying to chase them.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever hear, General, that Charlemagne was by a very strong feeling of racial hatred against the whites?

Gen. CATLIN. I never did.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever hear his forces referred to as bandits?

Gen. CATLIN. No. He called himself the commander in chief, operating against the Americans in several letters which I have seen.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he attempt to get into diplomatic communication with the British chargé d'affaires down there?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; and with different people, and he wrote to public officials, asking them to come out.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he purport to have a cabinet?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; a cabinet.

Mr. ANGELL. Is there any distinction, in your mind, between "Cacos" and the English word "bandits"?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; a Caco is not the proper term for the bandits.

Mr. ANGELL. For which people?

Gen. CATLIN. For the people who were out in the field in 1918 and 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were Cacos?

Gen. CATLIN. They were improperly called Cacos. They stand it, were the old leaders of bands which were not regular. They were really simply separate bands who lived by the sword. The people who were in the field in 1918 and 1919 were bandits, in the English idea of a bandit.

Mr. HOWE. The English-language idea, you mean?

Gen. CATLIN. The English-language idea.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring, General, to the case which was mentioned in the question put to you by Mr. Howe regarding Lieut. Spear's execution of one man, under orders of Capt. Edwards, can you, from your own personal knowledge of the sentences of courts-martial, commissions, either immediately prior to the time when you were in Haiti or during the time when you were in command, that the execution as was mentioned by Mr. Howe in his question, assuming it to be true, could not have been lawful?

Gen. CATLIN. I can not, as no military commission or court-martial had been ordered except by me.

Mr. ANGELL. So that if, then, such a killing, in fact, did take place?

Gen. CATLIN. It was unwarranted.

Mr. ANGELL. It was unwarranted?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. General, do you remember the sworn statement made before Lieut. Col. Lay. I believe, in Washington, at the end of 1919?

Gen. CATLIN. Before Col. Lay; no.

Can you find that, Major?

AN. Yes; it is here.

That was a statement I made to the Secretary of the Navy.

AN. Yes; he put it under oath afterwards.

I remember making a statement to the Secretary of the Navy. There are two reports or statements. I just want to identify

AN. Did the general make two of them?

Yes; he made a statement to Gen. Lay, which it attached to the Turner investigation, on December 31, 1919 and he also at the request of the Secretary of the Navy, dated September 1, 1920, a statement having made such a statement?

Yes; I remember now.

Could you have written a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, dated, about September 20, 1920?

Yes.

I wonder if you can and will possibly in the intermission just two, of which there are copies here, and then just state on the testimony there given or the statements there made are correct as you now recollect.

That is correct—the testimony I gave there.

I want to ask you a few questions, further, General about the Hinche and the alleged Lavoie incident there. In your statement you said: "I consider Maj. Wells principally responsible for the conditions found. He stated he made frequent inspections of all posts, and it is probable that he should not have known something of the conditions, as you now recollect it, an accurate statement of your contentment?"

Yes; although this statement was made, of course, after I came and my idea in regard to the responsibility of Maj. Wells was that he was at the time of the inspection at Hinche. Things came up which caused me to change my idea in regard to Maj. Wells and to consider him more responsible than I did at that time.

When you say "at that time," you mean at the time of the inspection at Hinche?

Yes.

And later, if I understand you, you became convinced that there was a degree of responsibility attached to Maj. Wells?

Yes.

Do you mean by that answer to refer to the causes or to the conditions, which?

No; I mean the general conditions and the lack of supervision which I found Maj. Wells had.

Maj. Wells was a major of marines and colonel in the gendarmerie?

Yes; he was colonel in the gendarmerie and had charge of the 1st Brigade, which took in Hinche at that time.

Did you, as brigade commander in Haiti, consider that the gendarmerie, and ultimately the marine officers not of the gendarmerie, were responsible for conditions as they existed?

No; I could not say that.

To what extent, then, would you say that the gendarmerie officers, were responsible for general conditions?

I would not say the gendarmerie officers were responsible for the conditions. I say that I consider Maj. Wells principally responsible for his part in the conditions.

Was that district?

In that district. I think the conditions in the rest of the island were very good.

That was on the other side, then, to the credit, to your mind, of the marine officers, and ultimately the marine direction?

It might have been; it might not. It may have been that the conditions were better in the gendarmerie. I do not know whether the conditions were better or not.

Did you regard the conditions in the gendarmerie and the general conditions of the island to be the ultimate responsibility of the gendarmerie officers?

cers and, in a military sense, the final responsibility of the marine occupation?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; the conditions in the gendarmerie was the gendarmerie officers, undoubtedly.

Mr. ANGELL. And the gendarmerie was, in the last analysis, and generally directed by the marine officers of the occupation?

Gen. CATLIN. The marine officers were in command of the gendarmerie. The upper officers of the gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the ultimate responsibility that of the gendarmerie, or of the marine occupation?

Gen. CATLIN. Really, the marine occupation had nothing to do with the gendarmerie—that is, with their actual work in the field. Theoretically under the brigade commander—that is, the gendarmerie—but the brigade commander had nothing to do with the field or with the under officers except through the head of the brigade.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the brigade commander confer with the gendarmerie as to matters of gendarmerie policy and discipline?

Gen. CATLIN. No; that was entirely a Haitian matter.

Mr. ANGELL. How was it, then, that, for example, you, Gen. CATLIN, correctly, had Lieut. Doras Williams and Capt. Lavoie in the Hinche district to Port au Prince?

Gen. CATLIN. I did that because I was going into a district to take command and considered that they were not the proper officers and the officers of the gendarmerie are still attached to the constabulary detachment of the brigade. They are under the brigade commander for disciplinary purposes only, not for the exercise of command.

Mr. ANGELL. What effect do you think the change of American constitution, the article which prohibited the ownership of land had in the general feeling of the population toward the United States? American occupation in Haiti?

Gen. CATLIN. I am unable to state. My personal idea is that it had effect in a way.

Mr. ANGELL. The change?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; I think not so much in the feeling of the people as in the feeling which was engendered by certain leaders.

Mr. ANGELL. I do not understand the difference.

Gen. CATLIN. What I mean to say is that the people do not really think, cared very much, the majority of the people.

Mr. ANGELL. You spoke of the feeling engendered?

Gen. CATLIN. Yes; engendered by the leaders.

Mr. ANGELL. Engendered among the Haitian people?

Gen. CATLIN. Among some of the Haitian people. Some of the feeling was issued by Charlemagne was along that line.

Mr. ANGELL. Was that feeling very strong?

Gen. CATLIN. Well, I am unable to state, because I was not in touch with the Haitian people, and I could not say.

Mr. ANGELL. You were not in touch with the Haitian people?

Gen. CATLIN. No. I, of course, had certain dealings with the people at Port au Prince, but outside of that I was not in touch.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, it has been the intention all along to put on the record of the Mayo court of inquiry and exhibits on that has not been formally put on the record because it was put in in connection with the testimony of Maj. Dyer, who was called of that court of inquiry, and we are having difficulty finding Maj. Dyer here as a witness. I, therefore, suggest that the testimony be admitted in evidence now, with the understanding that it be left out as may be a duplication of other matter which has already been admitted. It may be left out from the printing or the record, and that is all right. The gist or digest of the testimony there may be printed in lieu of the testimony, but my present proposition is to admit it in evidence and be referred to now as one of the exhibits.

Senator ODDIE. If there is no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. ANGELL. You testified, General, that you did not believe in the event that Capt. Lavoie had been court-martialed for these matters very much?

Yes.

Why?

Well, I do not know that I can give any particular reason, except would be expected in case of a man being guilty in the service, convicted you would naturally suppose that everything is carried right, while if a man is acquitted there are always a lot of willing to say that it was a whitewash.

Do you not feel, though, that a conviction, if a man had been a guilty, would have had or might have had a beneficial effect of the natives toward the gendarmes in that district?

I did not consider it so. If I had considered his conviction as undoubtedly have ordered the court-martial.

In this large compilation of the Mayo court of inquiry records, as Exhibit 5, is an official report from Gen. Lejeune and Gen. investigation in 1920 into conditions in Haiti, and as a part of the report, Exhibit 5, there is attached a résumé of testimony of officers wherein, at page 5, I find the résumé of the testimony of Col. Richard S. Hooker. Col. Hooker at that time was not of the gendarmerie?

No. You mean at the time of this?

At the time you were brigade commander in Haiti?

No; he was in command of a regiment of marines stationed at the north of Haiti.

He was later assistant chief of the gendarmerie?

He was assistant chief after I left.

I want to read from one paragraph of this report and ask you is Col. Hooker's testimony, or a résumé of his testimony, in the investigation which he made upon your order, he says, a note on a Corona typewriter to Gen. Catlin, setting forth the investigation; that he kept no copy of his notes; and that no record and in the files of the brigade headquarters at Port au Prince, presumably, is the typewritten letter which you have introduced? That is the letter which has been introduced to-day.

Col. Hooker further states that Gen. Catlin, before leaving him (Col. Hooker) in substance as follows: 'I suppose you never did anything about the Hinche matter.' Hooker said, 'Whereupon Gen. Catlin further stated in substance: 'That he being because it was during the period of the consideration of the case; and that he did not wish to embarrass our President by the cruelty appear about our own soldiers when we were taking the side of humanity,' or words to that effect."

Whether or not you did make such a statement to Col.

I do not remember making any such statement.

Could you say that you did not make such a statement?

To the best of my knowledge and belief I did not, because I can state that my statement had any influence on my action in regard to the investigation of my knowledge and belief no such statement was made.

I would just like to ask you one question. I want to ask what opinion of the value of Haitian testimony?

I do not think it has any value, sir. My idea, from seven years here, is that a Haitian, as a rule, will testify to whatever he thinks best interests.

Were you called before the Mayo court?

I was not.

Do you remember where you were on duty in the fall of 1920?

I was living in Washington at that time.

Were you retired at that time, and were living in Washington?

I have been in Washington since I retired in December, 1919; I am out of the city.

Why did you retire, General?

I was retired by a medical board as being not fit for active duty on account of wounds received in France.

Mr. HOWE. General, will you give your name, rank and position?

Gen. COLE. I was in command of the Second Regiment.

Mr. Howe. When did you land in Haiti?

Gen. COLE. On the 4th of August.

Mr. HOWE. Were you at that time the senior marine officer

Gen. COLE. Yes; until August 15, when Col. Waller arrived.

Mr. HOWE. And then he was senior to you?

Gen. COLE. He was senior to me. I had taken down Waller had followed on the Tennessee with another regiment he took command of the brigade, which was then formed, and transferred to Cape Haitien and took command of the Second and acted as military governor of northern Haiti and conducted northern Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. You remained with that assignment until what

Gen. COLE. Yes; a little over a year; very little.

Mr. HOWE. What was the situation in Haiti at the time of the Prince?

Gen. COLE. In Port au Prince?

Mr. HOWE. Yes.

Gen. COLE. The landing force of the Washington was on around there. Conditions were quiet but unsettled in the

Mr. HOWE. There was no President of Haiti at the time

Gen. COLE. There was no President of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. The last President of Haiti had just before he not?

Gen. COLE. Yes; he had taken refuge, I think, on the morning of the 28th in the French legation, which was near the palace, and had been wounded, as a matter of fact, that morning of the 29th a mob of about 60 Haitians, under the Zamor, had entered the legation—I might go back a little, the mob had gone in the legation, but the French minister with the possible assistance later of Mr. Cohn, the Br ré, had protected the President. The next morning, the 29th, the same 60 people, actually invaded the légation, pushing aside demoiselles Gireau, the daughters of the French minister, and the bedrooms and bathrooms they found him I think under a taken out and cut to pieces and his body dragged through the cutting into pieces, as far as I know, was done actually outside compound.

How long after that occurrence did you learn that the Washington?

Well, I was in the United States, and the first I knew of it was on the 30th.

Where is what I am getting at. How long had the Washington's been on shore when you got there?

The Washington's landing party—I think I have the date, or I can get it. I got there about five days later, approximately; it was four or five days. I got there on the 4th.

Was there active disorder going on at the time you landed?

The city was quite quiet, although there was a decidedly tense atmosphere, and during the time I was there there were disorders. There was nothing at our people, but after the landing there was very little of it. That, if any, Haitian was in authority or control in the city?

The only control was the revolutionary committee, called the Committee of Safety, of which I think Mr. Polynice and Gen. Zamor were members. Mr. Polynice was a merchant but not, so far as I know, of the revolutionary forces.

Under whose direct orders were you after you landed?

Admiral Caperton's.

You spoke of revolutionary troops being in the vicinity of the city. Where were they and what were they?

I never saw many of them. They were around outside of the city, mostly outside of the city, except on one or possibly two occasions. I sent Capt. Fay some 12 or 15 miles outside of Port au Prince, to the Cul de Sac, to hunt up a bandit by the name of Desgantes, who had about 15 or 20 followers and who was pillaging and robbing on the coast. Capt. Fay captured him and a lot of his followers. They were

Were there any other troops other than the United States forces?

There were Government troops in the city, and Government troops on the plain, and particularly around St. Marc and

What was farther north?

What was farther north.

Was there any fort or garrison in the city of Port au Prince?

There was Fort Nationale, which was on a commanding eminence in the city and which was occupied by the Haitian forces.

How distinguished from the revolutionary forces?

It was distinguished from the revolutionary forces. I landed on the 5th we took Fort Nationale. There we found 14 cannon, 450,000 rounds of ammunition. We tried to do everything we could to get the city to surrender without armed resistance, and I got hold of one of the leading men in Port au Prince, and after considerable discussion and a great deal of persuasion on his part, and a promise to do it, and a backing out, and to do it—and we in the meantime were making preparations in case it became necessary, because it dominated the city, and with its guns, etc., there, it would do untold harm—he agreed to surrender. The lieutenant of the Navy, who had command of two of the companies of the Washington, was detailed as the officer to receive the surrender, and the general entered the fort by the drawbridge, and the surrender was made. However, quite a good many of the people jumped over the parapets, but we did nothing in regard to them, because what we were doing was to get the city to surrender, so that there would be no fighting.

As a matter of fact, what disposition was made of such of the city as stayed to surrender?

Those that surrendered, as I remember it, were placed for a short time in the barracks, the Dessalines Barracks. On the 6th we disarmed without adequate food, and some were actually starving to death. The roads had ceased to exist, being impassable for vehicles at all seasons, and only donkeys could go over the trails, and then only with great danger of being drowned in mudholes.

Telephones and telegraphs were practically destroyed. The postal service was dishonest and inefficient and the mails unsafe, and the employment of employees and to the operation of revolutionary bands. The prisons were pestholes and filled with prisoners whose only sources of support were their families and relatives and whose only offenses were enmity of officials. The means of support were nonexistent or absolutely lacking in means of support for treatment to the sick.

No sanitary measures were taken by the Haitian officials, and the contributions funds collected were used for benefit of officials and for all male persons were under arms (forced levies) or in

The system was entirely a political affair, and, with the exception of the church, there were practically no educational institutions for the poorer classes, and these in a few localities only; probably 95 per cent illiterate.

As there were politico-military in their character and the interests of their chiefs.

The judiciary was venal and generally only responsive to political favor and who could pay for decisions.

The spoils, including customs, were spoils of political success.

Corruption was rampant.

The fact that a great war was raging in Europe, there seems to be no doubt, but what a European country would have attempted control over Haiti unless we took control ourselves. German influence was dominant, and unless conditions set forth above were checked we had an aggressive enemy at our doorstep or have given way to the decadent ills of such a procedure or backdown."

As that paragraph 3 you just read?

Paragraph 2.

Will you read paragraph 3?

Paragraph 3 is a question as to how the situation has changed

You need not go into that.

Did not think you wanted to go into that at this particular time. At 3 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 4 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The assembly reassembled at 4 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of

Did you think you had asked me a question as to my opinion of the situation, and I think I had stated that there had been this mass killing, President had been killed, and that there was no government.

Did you give a number of items as to the—

As to the general condition of the country.

Which, as I take it, would demonstrate a lack of systematic gov-

There was no government at all. The courts had practically ceased to function, and it was a state of each man for himself so far as he was concerned. Foreign lives had never been troubled by the Haitians. They were careful in regard to that. Foreign property was generally—

Please let me interrupt there. Do you think if there had been mention there that foreign lives would have been taken?

Not at that time; but it was a case of disorder piling on disorder, and things were getting worse and worse, and the longer anarchy and where that sort exists the worse it is going to become, and it probably was a question of time only before there would have been destruction of lives and, without any question, destruction of foreign property. The past history of Haiti had been that they had been very careful of revolutionary activities not to direct them against the property of foreigners against the lives of foreigners. They had milked the foreigner whenever they could in their courts and in their demands—told—in demands for contributions, etc., in the way of payment but they had been very careful in regard to property. I do not think this had to do with it—this is simply one of my opinions—was on, and the condition of anarchy existing in a country on the front door, in the first place, made an intolerable condition of affairs, and, in the second place, the German influence in Haiti proved to be greater than our own influence and it was beyond the French. The French were the owners of practically all of the Haitian property. The marine campaign was getting along about that time, and the justification of it would be that we could not have our coast guarded by submarines from submarine bases in the West Indies. Of course, that is a personal opinion.

Mr. HOWE. That was, of course, before our entry into the war.

Gen. COLE. That was before our entry into the war, but since then, knowing that trouble was going to come sooner or later. We have a general conglomeration of intolerable conditions, a civilization absolutely to ruin.

Mr. HOWE. In your opinion, was some intervention necessary?

Gen. COLE. Absolutely, unless you wanted to allow what is the richest part of the globe to become an African jungle. The French the whole country had been the richest and best-cultivated world. It had financed one or two of the French wars. The land was cultivated, and the French had mile after mile of fine roads. They had landed the whole thing was a jungle. As I say, the roads were desolate. The men had either become soldiers or were Cacos. The roads were desolate. The people had moved back into the mountains. The Government or revolutionary forces going along the roads. Men were never seen in the towns, except those who were women did all the marketing and things of that sort. On the road to Liberté and Ouanaminthe, about 15 or 16 miles, on the trip there we did not see one single habitation, we did not see yet it was said that that stretch of the road on either side of the road a population of about 3,000, and before I left Haiti and the people had come back into the area surrounding Ouanaminthe.

Mr. HOWE. Were there any other foreign Governments involved directly in that state of affairs in Haiti?

Gen. COLE. The French were materially. They were the owners of Germany. As I said, the French were the owners of the Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. After you landed there what did you learn about Bobo?

Gen. COLE. Bobo had been in the north of Haiti, around Cap-Haïtien, under arrangements made by Admiral Caperton he was commander of it, on the Jason, some time about the 3d or 4th of July he arrived in Port au Prince on the 5th.

Mr. HOWE. Who was Bobo?

Gen. COLE. Dr. Bobo was a Haitian physician, a man who was of considerable ability, inordinately, I understand, vain, and away above the majority of the Haitians in intellect.

Mr. HOWE. Was he a presidential candidate at that time?

Gen. COLE. He was a presidential candidate at that time. He considered himself the possessor of the executive power. I have found him used for it, but he had declared himself in that position; and then, if we had not landed in Port au Prince I think Bobo would have been President of Haiti and that he would have brought his revolution to Port au Prince; and, as always was the case, the national assembly elected him as President. The successful revolutionary leader considered himself the possessor of the executive power, and then, when he arrived at Port au Prince, the national assembly gave legality to him as President. They had to do it.

Mr. HOWE. Had the town and the fort been disarmed by the time he arrived?

Gen. COLE. The town was disarmed, I think, the day after he arrived. The fort was taken the day he arrived. That is my recollection.

Mr. HOWE. What relations did Bobo establish with you or the Government?

Gen. COLE. Personally, there was practically no relation between him and myself. I gave him protection and gave him a guard.

courts were functioning.

Col. Waller told us that an agreement was signed with the Cacos there, or about that time. Will you tell us what you know about

Col. Waller came up about the middle of September—the 18th, I think, and he and I, and I think one or two orderlies, met the Caco chiefs at Carrefour, a mile and a half or 2 miles outside of Cape Haitien. I think, was instrumental in bringing about that meeting. At recollection is that Col. Waller stated it was necessary that the and the other people that had been given prior to the election be let out, Bobo having given instructions that his followers in the arms, disband, and go to their homes. They had and Col. Waller informed them that that would have to be done, posed to start patrolling; that it was necessary for foodstuff to Haitien. After that conference he decided to open up the rail- go to Grande Riviere, which, as I remember it, was about 18 miles from Cape Haitien. We started out with some three squads of men, I think, across-roads at Carrefour, near Quartier Morin, where we were construction placed on the track, and we were met by the Cacos that we could not go on. Col. Waller said we were going on, and they promptly derailed us, they having drawn the spikes of the track. I put the men out at once alongside of the track, and these squads crossed the road at Carrefour, behind the hedges, etc., but there and we got our train back on the track after a while, and they told us that we were going to Grande Riviere. But we went back to find out and it was decided that the situation was sufficiently charged that we better have more than three squads, so we took about four squads, a machine gun, put sand bags on a flat car and built up a parapet, and we went to Grande Riviere that night. It was one of the hardest rides I ever took.

The road had not been used for a period of five or six months, and it was going through a young forest. We never knew what was going on, and the time the engineer let her go lickity-split down grade, and we were going miles an hour on this road where you could not see the track in front of you. We got up to Grande Riviere at about 9 o'clock in the evening, and found a lot of obstructions on the track there. We were halted right where we found out later the Cacos had occupied with some cam- em trained on us, but fortunately Col. Waller induced the Cacos to propose our entry, and we went on into Grande Riviere. We spent the night and a part of the next day, loaded up all the produce that was waiting shipment, and took that back to the cape, mostly coffee. Col. Waller went back to Port au Prince and I had instructions not to go back until I got orders; along about the 23d, I think, or the 24th, I was ordered to start patrolling, and to notify the Caco leaders that we were going to start patrolling; that we did not intend any harm to them, but we were going to patrol; that we must have the food coming in, and that making these patrols we did not intend to open fire on them, but must not open fire on us; that if they did we would then certainly take action.

On the 1st of September I sent two patrols out, one to Haut de Cap about 10 miles from the town, in the morning. They went through some of the hills and they did not stop us. Our patrol went to Haut de Cap. On the way there was considerable shouting at one point, and apparently they were upon our men, so our troops just put their machine gun in position and the Cacos quieted down, and we came on in.

In the afternoon I took a patrol out to Petite Anse, and we rode by their camp. The matter of fact, their outpost was at the crossroads, Petite Anse and the main road. I took one company past their outpost, and the other went through Petite Anse and came back. This day they had evi- dently been surprised and their outpost commanders evidently did not know about these patrols.

On the 2d I sent out two patrols of about 40 men with a machine gun. One, I remember, was to go to Haut de Cap, and then on to the Plain du Nord. The other patrol was to go past Petite Anse and then on to the Plain du Nord, and eventually join with the other column at Haut de Cap from Plain du Nord. They had the same instructions as the others, and we sent interpreters with them so that there was no as to the thing being understood, that we were going to do that we did not intend to start offensive operations against them; must make the patrol; that if they attempted to stop us by force on us, we, of course, would return the fire.

About 9 o'clock I got word from Haut de Cap that the Cacos if we advanced they would fire on us, and was asked for the instructions were plain, to go ahead. And our men were fired on. Our men dropped alongside of the road, and their machine gun. The Cacos scattered through the town. There was considerable firing going on there. I sent out reinforcement, and shortly after that went out myself, going on all along out there, and up to three o'clock in the morning the firing was kept up, principally from across the river at the town. Considerable firing had been heard in the distance, from the column. The Cacos had attacked him, and had caught him in a place, and he had a number of his men wounded, but he had killed them. We do not know how much loss he inflicted. He inflicted some, without any question, because they gave up.

As soon as they got back to the Cape I had a conference with the officer present, Capt. Durell, and said that my proposition was to Quartier Morin the next morning with all our troops, with just a few to hold Cape Haitien; that I would like him to have companies to hold the Cape, my idea being that if the troops which was their headquarters, would stand, we would have them then and there; that if they would not stand, we would ride down on them and show them we would go anywhere we wanted to.

We started out the next morning. Quartier Morin was the headquarters. We went out there, and there was only one shot fired by Carrefour, about half or three-quarters of a mile from the town. We were met by a Gen. Fouche, a Haitien, who was surgeon general, that the war was over; that they wanted to be good, and to go to Quartier Morin. As we were going up toward Quartier Morin, a shot fired by a Caco at our column and one of our men took him who had fired and killed him.

We went to the town of Quartier Morin, and I asked for the officer in charge. He was told that he had business elsewhere and had left the town before, so there were none of their soldiers there. The town, such as it was, largely women, turned out to greet us, pleasant, and so on, and Dr. Fouche, the only officer who was left, that the war was over without any question; that they had learned the day before had been a very severe lesson to them, and that it would not pay to attack us again.

Gen. Waller, I think, came up about the 28th. I am not sure of the sequence of events there. I am inclined to think that he came to Cap Haitien, and a few days later Gen. Waller and I went to Quartier Morin, and Gen. Waller signed the convention with the chiefs for them to carry out their instructions to turn in their arms and go to their homes and take up peaceful pursuits, to the recollection of it.

Mr. HOWE. That, by the way, went into our record here. Gen. Waller was testifying. Did you have any negotiations with the Cacos at or about that time?

Gen. COLE. I do not think you could call them negotiations. They did not come into Cape Haitien for preliminary negotiations. I went to go out to their outpost with one orderly to meet them, and to meet them, but Gen. Morancy would not come in. He came in.

Mr. HOWE. Who did?

Gen. COLE. Gen. Petion, with a considerable number of his men, came into town, and they insisted that I should accompany them.

Mr. HOWE. You mean back into their own country; back to their posts?

Gen. COLE. Not only through the town, but back into their own country to their outpost. As a matter of fact, I accompanied them to their headquarters at Quartier Morin, which was about 8 or 9 miles from the town.

Mr. HOWE. What happened there?

l, they brought out some champagne, and had a band and a and I distributed some gourdes among the band, and they then they escorted me back to their outpost.

The arrangement was that they should be paid for their vere turned in, and possibly, in part, for the reason that they as turned in, some of the minor chiefs thought that their head g the money, and as they were not getting anything, they did arms. Some of them were opposed to the Americans. You see, volution after revolution in Haiti, and they had lost the habit d not want to work, they did not want peace, and some of the I could call them, took to the hills, more or less. They went hich lay between the Grande Riviere and the Dominican bor- rticularly up in and around what was called the Capois to meet them. I went up in that vicinity two or three times, promise, but they would not meet us; they attacked our forces ces; there was robbery going on all the time, and conditions rise in that area; so it became necessary to clean it up, and ematic campaign of running down these bands.

me interrupt right there. How would you characterize the u came into conflict at first there on the 26th of September? or bandits?

y were Cacos. They were what I would call mercenaries. I ut as good a definition of what a Caco is as anything I know eople who sold their arms, that is the use of their arms, mili- ary revolutionary candidate. They were, generically, people north of Haiti, and a certain type of peasant and his chief.

Mr. HOWE. Later on, up near the border, at the time when it was necessary to clear that country up on account of the band of Cacos any more that you were opposed to?

Gen. COLE. They had been Cacos, and they were Cacos in word that they belonged to that ilk. There were good Cacos and bad Cacos. Most of the Cacos that I ran across I rather liked better than the other Haitians. They were more sincere. As a politician I never had much use for, but I did have a good deal of use for the Caco chiefs.

Mr. HOWE. Then, were these people that you did have good ex-Cacos or bad ex-Cacos?

Gen. COLE. I would say they were bad ex-Cacos, most of them. I have been some of them who were actuated by patriotic motives. The principal leaders, Joseph, was very bitterly antiwhite, and the Americans had come there to enslave the country. He inspired the people, and got a good many together, a considerable number, in command of Fort Riviere. The day before our final attack on the fort he took some of his principal followers and certain minor followers with orders to defend it, and he went off to save his own skin, the sort of patriot he was. He left them there with orders to hold out to the last, and they did. They were not in the habit of showing mercy. They had no idea that mercy would be given them. That was the result of the warfare, and they fought to the very end in the fort.

Mr. HOWE. General, will you give us an outline of the operations from the time you got up at the border there and ending in the capture of Fort Capois?

Gen. COLE. Well, we sent troops up to Grande Riviere, and on to Bahon, which was 10 or 12 miles beyond Grande Riviere. We sent three squads—three squads, I think. They were fired on from the fort. They were at the railroad station there. Our troops retreated, but evidently did some damage, although they never knew how much. The next morning they examined the place and they found that the troops were withdrawn to Grande Riviere, and the report was received that the fort was attacked, and there were only about 20 men left. We sent a company to Grande Riviere, I think, that night. Along the trail the same conditions prevailed, and there was a good deal of fighting. That was cleared up, and Capt. Campbell at Grande Riviere was to operate through that country and find out what he could. Gen. Butler, then Maj. Butler, was directed to make a raid from Fort Liberte, by way of Terrier Rouge, Le Trou, St. Pierre, Grande Riviere, Bahon, to a place called Valliere, thence back to Fort Capois. There was some trouble around Terrier Rouge, as I remember, but we had some 50 rifles there. Butler's detachment was mounted, but the trails so bad that they could not get through, so the horses were left at Grande Riviere. I had information that the principal stronghold was at Fort Capois, but we could get no information as to its location. Gen. Butler, at St. Suzanne, was given information that he could be determined from the northern trail from Bahon to Fort Capois.

The informant said that there were probably three people in the fort. He was one, and he could not do it, and they could not, without any question. I changed Gen. Butler's route to Dipiti, with the idea of locating Capois. He was attacked in the night by what was estimated to be about 400 Cacos, but they were held off; held them off. I think we had a couple of wounded men. Gros Roches. In the meantime Col. Waller had come near the fort. Col. Waller and me at Cape Haitien, and as the result of the plan of action was drawn up to attack Fort Capois. The operation was divided into two parts, (a) cleaning up the country east of the fort, and (b) the cleaning up of the Fort Riviere district to the Grande Riviere. The country east of the Grande Riviere was cleared up, and the failure of a part of the troops to get to the fort at the time of its garrison escaped.

Mr. HOWE. The fort was occupied?

Gen. COLE. The fort was occupied. It was very well occupied. It has been held if they had gone about it properly, with the aid of the troops. Some of those people fled across the Grande Riviere. We could not advance very slow through that section, and it was a very wide area, and a considerable number got across and to the north.

at area was cleaned up of the bandits our troops refitted. I, in the meantime, had been getting a good deal of Fort Riviere; a plan was drawn up and the place was columns coming from widely different directions, but the that each column got to the place at the right time, and ade at daylight on a certain morning; the fort was occupied firing, and some of the people escaped but I do not know were about 50 dead counted in the fort and in the vicinity of was only one entrance. It was on a high mountain, and it fort, with embrasures and a moat, and places inside, cells could shoot in every direction, and they simply fought to the I not surrender.

It was the character of the fighting there?

I to hand, considerable.

Was entrance gained?

Report was—and I presume it is correct, there was no reason our assaulting troops got under the cover of the wall of this our and they had difficulty in getting in, so Pvt. Gross and ed in through a small sally port and held the entrance, fol- and the rest of his men.

Butler got a medal of honor for that, did he not?

Not think so. Iams did, and Gross.

Yes; he did.

There was a brief resistance then by the Haitians inside the fort? Presently, and then we blew up the fort, got dynamite from the the fort.

Was on November 17?

November 17.

That mark the end of the campaign?

It ended the campaign, but my plan had been, just as soon e refitted, to start a detachment to Hinche. That was Gen. and my plan was to send out other troops and to go all through the Grande Riviere and the Dominican border, not with the sive action, but with the idea that if any wandering bands a they would be disposed of, captured, dispersed or killed, be done, and to show the Haitians in that area, in the first ericans would go anywhere.

Government troops had never been in the Fort Riviere and Fort It was absolutely an unknown land to them. It was the Caco's ough there, and my idea was that by sending troops all try they would see, in the first place, that so long as there we would treat them kindly, and in the second place, that we e wanted to go. I do not think they had any doubt about it, one all through that country, but I thought a second going aceable sort of way would be a very good thing; but the de- that there had been enough lesson given to them. and that ld be good.

You abandoned that reconnaissance?

Sent troops to Hinche, but in very much smaller numbers, to ere which were to be turned in. They were not turned in, y manner or means. They kept a lot of them at Hinche. If away a column in there, I think we would have gotten more soon after was absolute quiet restored?

There was quiet from then on, except for bands of robbers, small re, or six, just here and there and anywhere between St. Limonade, and the border. They usually robbed the market s their best bet. They always avoided our patrols if they they did not.

To that extent there was unrest and trouble there?

That extent there was unrest, but it grew smaller and smaller, policy wherever a man who had been out would come in and d state that he would be good and would go to his place n touch with us, that unless there was some crime alleged tual crime, he would not be confined but given his liberty and o make a good citizen of himself. That was the general were practically no punishments, practically no imprisonments, on account of that. Joseph some time later was myself, in view of the cowardly way in which he left Riviere, he ought to have been hanged. He was given 10 years.

Mr. HOWE. By the provost court?

Gen. COLE. By the provost court.

Mr. HOWE. That brings you up to March, 1916?

Gen. COLE. That brings us up to March, 1916. There was a number of small outbreaks directed against the gendarmes, but they had, in the meantime, been established, and had been sent out from Port au Prince—that is, for some political reason. Port au Prince had been sent out to take over the policing of the country to a great extent as possible. They were not fit for it, they had no efficient training to do it, and it was not a good thing to have affected the political situation, of which I have no doubt. As the military proposition of this order was concerned, the thing to do, but it was done, and soon there was troops sent out, troops, a couple of white soldiers to each detachment, of that sort, and with the white man they were stiff—they were not the white man they were not apt to do it. I was afraid of the white man, and I sent from two to four to six to eight, depending on the post, but during the month of December, 1916, there were several skirmishes. On December 6, at Gros Roches, there was one, and on December 12, at Perche and Terrier Rouge, several. On December 21 one was killed at Perche in an attack there.

Mr. HOWE. General, as you look over your notes there, what was the number of engagements there then, in the first months of 1916?

Gen. COLE. Well, that was the end of 1916. During December, 1916.

Mr. HOWE. In the first months of 1916?

Gen. COLE. In 1916 I have notes showing 17 little attacks.

Mr. HOWE. Between what dates?

Gen. COLE. Between March 6 and April 11 St. Michel and the gendarmes fled.

Mr. HOWE. Did that end the disturbances?

Gen. COLE. On May 1 there was a serious attack on Haiti. All of these things, except St. Michel, amounted to very little. There was quite a serious repulse. I had this policy in regard to that sort: I believed that prevention was very much more important than cure; we could not keep troops in all parts of the country. As a matter of fact, they did not want it done, but I did have white troops at the considered strategic points, and whenever trouble showed up in a section, I immediately sent military detachments of white troops to the place they surrounded them and went right in.

Mr. HOWE. In order, if possible, to prevent the trouble from recurring.

Gen. COLE. Always before it did, because it did not become a habit. It stopped it. There were seven attacks in 10 days on different parts of the sent troops in from along the border towns and in from the interior.

Mr. HOWE. But the attack on Ouanaminthe ended thirty days ago, May?

Gen. COLE. Yes; that was in May.

Mr. HOWE. Had you by that time been able to begin building?

Gen. COLE. Oh, yes; it had been going on.

Senator Oddie.

Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, Mr. Ernest Angell, and Maj. Edwin N.

OF BRIG. GEN. ELI K. COLE, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS—Resumed.

General, yesterday, when the hearing closed I had just asked about what you were able to do in the way of internal im-restoring the various undertakings of government, such as the North?

think probably I can do that more quickly with my notes. You if you feel disposed to do so.

Will you go ahead, and let us have the heads of what you under-ere was no civilian administration whatsoever in Cape Haitien, things pertaining to a town administration were taken up and . The Hospice, in charge of the French Sisters, was in a very e, and without supplies or proper appliances, and even shelter were there for care. In the course of our stay in the north of he question of proper food was taken up and solved, and gen-ced in a very satisfactory and efficient condition.

e lines, the people of the rural districts of Haiti had absolutely ntion whatsoever, and in order to eliminate as much of this ad established, wherever we had American troops, small dishing the medicines for a long time from the United States sup-purchasing them in the United States, and had either medical tal Corps men detailed in charge of those dispensaries, where physical troubles could receive such examinations and treatited facilities would allow, medicines being dispensed, and in e people being sent to one of the large ports where they re-ospitalization care as we could give them. This was without t value to the people, and it did much to establish our influence ne people of Haiti.

Cape Haitien was a national affair, and was about as disstitution as it would be possible to find. The place was thor-r, rebuilt in many places, repaired, put in sanitary condition, s were prepared, the men incarcerated therein were taught were fed, the former procedure being that if the prisoner had tives to feed him, he was apt to die of starvation, and gen-was placed in a condition where one could see that it was itary a place as one could find anywhere.

The water works had been allowed to go entirely to ruin, possibly was available in some houses for a period of from a day. This water system was thoroughly overhauled, and was a sufficient amount of water to meet all the requirements for the immediate purposes of human life.

The streets had not been cleaned for years, and no street made. First the main streets, and then the secondary streets of Cape Haitien were overhauled and put into a good state of repair.

The roads outside of Cape Haitien, and, as a matter of fact, the towns, had been allowed to go utterly to ruin. In the dry season the donkeys, but not for vehicles, and in the wet season the donkeys would be drowned in mud holes. For mile after mile of road if you rode over it, you would have to pull your feet up to keep from getting mud, the mud rising up practically to the horses' belly. A large number of ex-Cacos and farm laborers on these roads, paid for a gourde a day, the idea being that they would get money to purchase seed, etc., to start planting, and that the men who would not engage in revolutions. Up to that time the Haitian laborers had practically never been paid, and we made it a rule, of course, that they should be paid not only the full amount of time every week. At first the people did not want to work, they would not be paid, but when they found they were getting paid many more applicants than we had funds to employ.

The road between Cape Haitien and the border was put in a few months after we arrived there, when an automobile road was made and eventually it was made into a well-graded and maintained road.

The national schools hardly existed. There were some in the towns, were so-called schools in a good many different places, but not functioning as schools. The school system was a political one, the teachers were very inadequately paid. They were generally the result of some friend being in power, and they were not paid normally to do any work in regard to teaching school. They lived in these buildings but rented them. I inspected a school in Limbe, on a tour of inspection I was making, and when I went inside I found that it was a wattle and daub building, were no windows, just one door, and a sow with a litter of piglets in the building, and it never could have been occupied in any way as a school building, yet the government was paying for it. An extreme case, but it is a sample of the conditions existing in rural Haiti.

One schoolhouse where there were supposed to be two, probably 12 by 8 feet. It had two rooms, the second room had windows about 3 by 8 feet. The reports of that school showed 100 pupils in daily attendance. I asked the teachers where they were like that number in the school, and they said they could not say. In fact, at the time I arrived there the school was not open and the teacher was not present until the following day. There had been a strike held there, at least for some time, the place being used as an office.

Mr. Howe. What were you able to do about the schools?

Gen. COLE. The only real schools, outside of some in the towns, were church schools, run either by the Catholic priests or by the Protestants. The fairly good schools in Cape Haitien and in nearly all the towns, the communes where there were priests they had schools, and they were good. They were far better than anything else in Haiti.

Mr. Howe. Who were those priests? Were they French?

Gen. COLE. They were Frenchmen, and the sisters were French, almost entirely. There were a few of other nationalities, but they had been for the church schools, in my opinion, Haiti would have been a barbarism. It was the one source, the one ray of light in the whole country. There can be no question about that. In the few of the larger towns, the public schools were absolutely nothing. There might be one here and there. We did find people who were trying to do with the things they had as best they could. We gave assistance to the church schools wherever we could, in making repairs. They were supposed to receive a and we investigated those as far as we could, and paid them, and the arrears, in order that the work of repair might be carried on. Generally, during my stay in Haiti, I had the utmost support of the priests and from the sisters, because wherever we went, we found that they had done so much, and that they were the points on which we could do something in regard to education, we gave them such assistance as we could, and they were very grateful. The bishop of northern Haiti, by the name of Kerquazan, made two extensive trips on the north of Haiti, in order to preach cooperation with the occupation in Haiti.

One of the experts from the United States has been given advice and assistance in regard to building up the school system. The Archbishop of Port au Prince rather opposed that proposition. The system of national schools, but entirely under the Catholic Church, was a little antagonism on the part of some toward the American. The pressure may have been brought to bear on officials to interfere with the expert we brought down to help build up the national in all the towns was entirely neglected. Refuse of every description on vacant lots. There were no sewers and no toilets. The town stunk to heaven. The yards were cleaned up, public health, drainage was instituted; areas where mosquitoes had been bred were drained or filled, as we could do it, and generally the place was in a state of good sanitation.

One thing we could do to get the peasant to return to the farm and to cultivating, and with the exception of a few, a very few of the rebels against us during October and November, they were all who came in to go to their farms and go to work. We told them we did not care for anything except their being good, honest citizens. As they behaved themselves we would not interfere with them. We must keep absolutely clear from any robberies or banditry, or any sort.

As we did nothing about, but, as a matter of curiosity, the same thing will which you see in picture books as being in use in ancient Egypt in Haiti at that time, and I presume are generally in use in Haiti, with the oxen tramping around the grinders.

Under orders from Admiral Caperton, the payment of Haitian soldiers by officers personally paid the officials the amounts due them, which had never been done before.

Nothing was done in regard to the postal system at that time. The telegraph and telephone lines were practically down and out of existence, entirely. Here and there there were some single wires. We had the lines in the north of Haiti, extending them into the interior border, very frequently without proper material. For many miles telegraph poles we used beer bottles and other bottles for the support.

There did not exist at the time we landed, and did not function for a long time thereafter. I had no authority over that, except under military rule. There were no judges, and practically nothing was done to that, though after a few months one of the higher courts was organized as soon as we could we had a judge de paix appointed, but the offenses against sanitation were punished in the provost court by a fine or a certain number of days work, and generally the first was taken before the provost court for first offenses. For a second offense after warning they were sometimes fined 2, 3, or 5 times the fine was waived. The military court was functional. Where robbers were captured they were brought before the military court and weighed heavily on any honest citizen in Haiti, and it did not take long enough very frequently on the dishonest citizen, because we had the good will of the people of Haiti in the north, because, in the south good will was absolutely necessary, if we were going to accomplish our mission.

Things were done to a greater or lesser extent in the towns of Cap-Haïtien, Le Trou, Limonade, Grande Riviere, Port de Paix, and other towns.

There were similar undertakings begun and carried on in the other towns and in the south of Haiti?

Gen. COLE. In the larger towns, to the best of my knowledge they were.

Mr. HOWE. And when you became brigade commander down similar undertakings in operation?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Under your command were these undertakings, schools, hospitals, prisons, etc., continued and maintained?

Gen. COLE. Yes; there was considerable done. You are speaking after I got to Port au Prince?

Mr. HOWE. Yes; in other words, was this general work that year during which you were brigade commander?

Gen. COLE. Yes; and in addition there were a good many in addition to what I have mentioned here.

Mr. HOWE. I would like to get to those, but let me ask counter, as brigade commander, any difficulties in carrying on

Gen. COLE. Yes; some, but the difficulties were hidden to a large extent. For instance, take the school proposition: The president, I think, was in favor of good schools. The minister of public instruction was not a politician; that is, except incidentally, as every ed- ucator is, and he promised to "beat the band" to do things to help the school system. I might preface this a little bit. I had caused a survey to be made of the actual conditions in the schools in Hamilton County, and I found that the children, the size of the schools, the buildings, the teachers, whether they went to the places or not, that conditions were simply intolerable.

As I said, there was no public-school system outside of In conversation with the president, on a number of occasions the school system was taken up, and, eventually, I was required to procure the services of a school expert, and I selected that he was to be a man who could speak French, and, if possible, knowledge of Creole, should be a Catholic, should have a family, should be a man of tact, and one who had handled a school system. We found a man by the name of Bourgeois, formerly had been county superintendent of schools, and spoke Creole. Mr. Bourgeois came to Haiti. Considerable difficulty was experienced in regard to the contract. It was finally agreed that he should receive a salary of $3,000 a year, and should be employed for a period of one year. I can remember it. They had wanted to employ him for a year, but because conditions were such that in one year the man could not have simply have started. It will take him six months to get familiar with the situation, and at the end of the year, if conditions are such that they are rid of him, he has no contract, and it is not fair to that man to keep him down here for one year with the expense of moving at that time. It was agreed to give him a contract for three years.

Mr. HOWE. Did Mr. Bourgeois run into any difficulties there?

Gen. COLE. Mr. Bourgeois had them all the time.

Mr. HOWE. Just in general, describe what kind of difficulties

Gen. COLE. Well, Mr. Bourgeois did not get there very early. He found inertia and objection to a white man working. While I was there he was able to make some headway in his work because he came to me when he had trouble, and I went to the president usually straightened it out.

Mr. HOWE. Who caused the trouble?

Gen. COLE. Subordinates in the office of the minister of and assistants to him. I think he (the minister) did himself. It is possible that the church may have had something to do with

Mr. HOWE. In other undertakings other than schools, like or hospitals, were you hindered in your efforts?

Gen. COLE. No; I can not say we were hindered, because and did the things. Generally they wanted the things done as anything was done they wanted Haitians to take it over in most of these cases was to have, as, say at the hospital which was built up into a really exceptionally good institution or two American surgeons and one or two Hospital Corps of that sort, but they wanted to put the Haitian in charge can work under the American and can do good work, and ceptionally good medical people down there along certain when you were in the north did you find that you had a freer you were later on in Port au Prince? In other words, I would rather your remoteness from Port au Prince in the center of the country made it easier for you or not to carry on these works of government.

I can not say it did make any difference. In the north of the country fortunate in having, apparently, the confidence of the people of Port au Prince, my recommendations were generally accepted and not interfered with; and in Port au Prince I was in charge of the occupation, as they called it, and I had no other time in which I did have interference was when the conventions were put into effect in regard to the civil engineer and the engineer and when the distribution of funds was placed entirely in the hands of the financial advisor. We had used the gendarmerie officers as advisors throughout the country. They were people that we could rely on; we had a Haitian. That was absolutely out of the question. Occasionally we rely upon one, but he is apt to go off at a tangent without being able to be honest, but we had in the white officers of the gendarmerie who were honest, people who would do what they were told, and we knew that they were doing a big piece of constructive work, putting their heart and soul and everything else into the work they were trying to build a fine system in Haiti, trying to benefit the country. There is no question about it. And they were allowed they were allowed for repairs and improvements do the work three, because they were eternally on the job all of the time day and night. There can be no question but what the subordinate higher officers of the gendarmerie in Haiti performed a great deal of work under exceptionally trying conditions.

General, you mentioned that when you went down to Port au Prince you observed other undertakings in addition to those you designed to be put into effect in the north.

We will take agriculture. We did something in the North to aid the people in anything we could do. In 1917, the United States having declared war on Germany, the campaign being extremely effective, all the French ships in the Caribbean having been sunk to the bottom, the question of foodstuffs in Haiti, became very important. This came up possibly before our eyes, but it was just about—well, the sinking of the three French ships, the Montreal, and the other one were sunk just about the time of the war, but the shipping conditions had been growing steadily worse since 1917, and it was early in 1917, though I do not remember the exact date, I had a survey made to find out what I could about agricultural conditions, what had been imported in the way of foodstuffs into Haiti, and what Haiti had been getting somewhere in the neighborhood of 100,000 tons of foodstuffs.

Yes; and that if steps were not taken to provide this, to take the foodstuffs, that we might have serious difficulty in feeding the people of Haiti. Through the assistance of some Haitian societies, the President, the Ministry of Agriculture, and the gendarmerie, we got started a campaign on the part of the idea of not only providing food for the people but also for the army as a reservoir for ourselves and for the Allies. This campaign was successful. In connection with it we established experimental stations in different parts of the country. We established an agricultural station outside of Port au Prince, and the result of this campaign was successful, and the question came up. "What are we going to do after it is raised? How are we going to get all of this foodstuffs to the coast?" And that started the intensive campaign to get the foodstuffs to the coast, because I felt that if these people, at our instigation, had cultivated a large quantity of land and obtained a large crop, and it had to rot, because there was no transportation, or any way of getting it to the towns, and there was nothing to be done with the stuff, that it was a worse condition than before, because they would say, "Here the Americans have promised, and see what they have done to us."

The Panama Canal Zone sent agents to look into the question in buying very heavily.

Mr. HOWE. Food?

Gen. COLE. Food. We were raising food and getting it. Haiti was exporting large quantities of foodstuffs by the summer end of 1917. The Panama Canal Zone along in the summer was bringing over $10,000 a month for food supplies in Haiti, and we were selling it to our allies and our own country in that way, and by shipping it through the Canal Zone it enabled a full ship to be brought to Port au Prince and this stuff would be put in the place of goods that we were otherwise they could not have gotten the stuff down there. The President was asked to get agricultural experts. This was a very important thing, as the result of conferences. The President was very anxious to do everything he could do to benefit Haiti. I was very anxious of building things up, and I do not know whether I suggested it—probably I did—but he accepted the suggestion that we get agricultural experts from our Department of Agriculture. We went into the question of preventing the importation of goods. We arranged with the Department of Agriculture for certificates and things of that sort in the United States.

Mr. HOWE. How about irrigation, General? Have you mentioned that?

Gen. COLE. I have not mentioned that. There was a dam there had been irrigation in the north, but it had collapsed. The plains of the cul-de-sac had quite an extensive irrigation system of the French, called the Grande Bassin, and that did give water to the entire plains of the cul-de-sac. I made a trip of the place and went over it very carefully, and in order to get of water so far as I could we started the system, under the existing canals open, of preventing the big landowner from closing gates and taking all the water himself, simply because he had the dam and we started plans for the repair of the dam at the Cul-de-sac, in my opinion, in danger of being carried away, and we were working on that project when the orders were received to turn it over to the civil engineer.

Mr. HOWE. One of the treaty officials?

Gen. COLE. Yes; and I thought that was one of the things that had been taken over, but when I left nothing had been done, and I think that has been done since. But the thing had been very thoroughly considered. A comprehensive plan had been drawn up to repair and rehabilitate the irrigation there, and to finish the urgent repairs in a month.

Mr. HOWE. General, did the work undertaken there tend to work generally, instead of making the women do the work before?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

There is one thing I would like to add in regard to Mr. Bourgeois. I stand that Mr. Bourgeois, upon leaving Haiti, made a report in regard to the school condition and the difficulties. I have never seen it, but I believe it will probably contain a great deal of information for the committee, as, in my opinion, it is very valuable. The United States take some active predominating part in the schools in the Republic of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. Where do you think we could find Mr. Bourgeois?

Gen. COLE. At a guess, the headquarters of the Marine Corps could possibly tell about that.

Maj. McCLELLAN. There are some papers in the papers to that report made by Mr. Bourgeois, and they are certainly in the committee, if they desire them.

Mr. HOWE. Will you be good enough to find out what they know, please?

Maj. McCLELLAN. Yes.

Gen. COLE. There is one thing I would like to bring in in connection with this proposition. I had plans drawn up. Gen. Butler and myself had plans for model schoolhouses for a climate like Haiti, with its particular conditions, sources, and I allotted funds to build four of these model schools. The sites selected being in locations where the largest possible number from all parts of the country would pass by these schools.

instance, one was placed at Croix des Missions. This place because it was at a crossroads outside of Port au Prince, over entering Port au Prince from the major part of the plains of and from the Artibonite district and Laguna district passed by Port au Prince. When we landed in Port au Prince no market going in. On the big market day before I left there anywhere at thousand donkeys loaded with produce would be brought in and.

and then all hands passing there saw the schoolhouse?

and hands passing there saw that schoolhouse.

Gen. Butler, as I recollect it, told us that the people in the immediate were much interested in the construction of these schoolhouses; and then I had minor plans drawn up for very extensions, and through the gendarmerie had the information sent out to provide the plans, some one to supervise the work, and such could not be obtained locally to any commune that would do the work themselves.

What offer taken up?

That offer was taken up, and Gen. Butler told me that approximately had accepted that proposition. My recollection was that some 36 or 38 started before I left.

Do the peasants down there want education for their children? I believe they do. You would have difficulty in enforcing attendance at the time, but I do believe that the peasant does want education.

It may be because they want to go to the "patent-leather" schools. I believe they want the education.

Is there any other feature of your time of command in the north that the committee should hear about?

I do not know of anything; I do not remember anything.

Gen. Butler, what was the date again, please, of your going to Port au Prince and becoming brigade commander?

I think it was the 22d of November is my recollection of it. 1916?

Yes. Now, of course, this latter discussion has gone a good deal further, you remember.

Yes; the latter part of it especially.

What of that latter part.

After you became brigade commander, what was the first event that came up?

The question of elections.

Let me ask you on that, the elections for what offices?

For the Chamber of Deputies.

And those elections were conducted under the supervision of the French? That correct?

Under the supervision of the gendarmerie and of the Haitian police. The plans had been worked out to a considerable extent—almost matter of fact—by Gen. Waller, in connection with, presumably, the Government; and immediately after Gen. Waller left I was asked to make the arrangements and they wanted to make some changes.

What the arrangements?

The arrangements.

What do you have that, will you, please?

I do not remember the details. They wanted to make arrangements, and it was a succession of desires to make different arrangements, apparently with the idea of having the Government able to carry on former activities in connection with the results of the election. In fact, on a number of occasions afterwards the President said to them to have a fair election and that we could handle the matter ourselves; that the President formerly would have been in charge of the expended money, but we would not allow that, and consequently the national assembly was gone. As a matter of fact, the conditions in Haiti prior to the occupation had been absolutely different from the person who was in power, who held the power. These changes which they suggested. General, did you agree to them?

Generally not.

Mr. HOWE. Why not?

Gen. COLE. Because I was using my best judgment in trying to get a fair, honest election as it was possible to get.

Mr. HOWE. And these suggested changes would, in your opinion, make that more difficult?

Gen. COLE. Yes. I do not say there were many of those frequent requests, probably for local conditions, in regard to the election that had been issued. There was constant calling on me for changes in one way or another, or reports of interference or of noninterference with that sort. We had to look after the registration to see that the election was conducted, and they tried to put over all sorts of things, but we tried to do them so far as they could. Sometimes they made mistakes, but we made them were rectified. Where they were not made, they were perfectly correct. We actually tried, to the best of our knowledge and belief—I know it, as far as I am concerned and as far as the country was concerned—we were working under my immediate control were concerned. Of course, answer for every man who was in the Republic of Haiti. As far as those people were concerned, we were trying to have as fair an election as we could possibly have, and I think that I can say that the attitude in every other activity that the Americans had in Haiti in 1915, 1916, and 1917, and I presume since.

Mr. HOWE. The election, then, took place?

Gen. COLE. The election then took place.

Mr. HOWE. Did it pass off quietly?

Gen. COLE. It passed off quietly, without any disorders.

Mr. HOWE. How soon after that did the assembly meet—the legislature, would it not—that you were electing?

Gen. COLE. The Chamber of Deputies.

Mr. HOWE. About how long? What date did the assembly meet?

Gen. COLE. The Chamber of Deputies met on April 2, and the Senate on April 10. Of the committee I will state that the Senators were elected by the Chamber of Deputies from certain lists of candidates, and that consequently the National Assembly was not formed until after the election of the Senate, and then the organization of the National Assembly into two chambers, and that took place on April 10.

Mr. HOWE. Between the election and the organization of the National Assembly were more than two months?

Gen. COLE. Yes; it was three months: February, March, and April.

Mr. HOWE. Now, in those three months what was the next step? What was that came up after the election?

Gen. COLE. The question of the cabinet came up in February. The cabinet was organized at the same time as the extension of the terms of the treaty for five years, the terms of the convention.

Mr. HOWE. Will you give us a descriptive outline of what was the connection with the selection of the cabinet and with the extension of the treaty?

Gen. COLE. As the result of the elections, I recommended to the President that it would be well to have a cabinet that would be in accord with the different chambers and the National Assembly along the same political lines as the National Assembly was. What later, in particular, that Dr. Herraux, the minister of the interior, was the main in any cabinet formed. Herraux had been a strong supporter of American occupation, and was known as probably the only minister in Haiti in favor of American intervention and American management. He had married a Cuban, and their only son had been killed in the revolution, and she was probably the stronger member of the cabinet. He was bitter against the revolutionary idea in Haiti. In addition to that, he was a constant supporter of the American occupation. He also, as minister of finance, was the one Haitian who was familiar with the financial situation being done to carry out the investigation of Haitian financial affairs, counting affairs of the Haitians, and to have him removed from the midst of this work going on would have resulted, without a doubt, in a decided hindrance to the work that was being undertaken. The President of Haiti, I saw Gen. Legitime, probably the best type of Haitian that I met in my sojourn in Haiti, and I think he might be able to form a cabinet of a more or less nonpolitical type of the best men in the country that would serve with the President.

difficulties. People distrusted the President, but the main thing Herraux had to remain as a member of the cabinet.

Do I understand you to mean that that made Legitime's task in cabinet difficult?

Very difficult. He said he had no objection to Herraux personally; and that he was honest, but that Herraux had the antagonism of the element of Haiti, and that he did not think that any cabinet that could be formed, of the type that had been suggested between the myself, or suggested to him. The antagonism to Dr. Herraux part of the politicians stronger and stronger, until he became, as the storm center, and with their vicious attacks on Dr. Herraux, desecrated in his being thrown aside, it would have destroyed, in my deal of the influence that we had there, in that we would have get anyone to work with us openly, because they would say, case of Dr. Herraux. He worked with the occupation, and then he stood in their way, and they calmly threw him aside." And reason, in addition to the other ones, that Dr. Herraux would as secretary of finance, and that the department also agreed to. me the question of the extension of the terms of the treaty from came up, and there was a good deal of discussion back and forth. secretary of State for foreign affairs in particular, Mr. Borno, the dominating member of the cabinet, tried to use it as a lever ons toward the appointment of Haitians in the customshouses, as agreed to there was constant delay, and the terms they made up to when they were put in writing, and the correspondence forth, and Mr. Borno, Dr. Herraux, and one other man, as I ere in favor of it. The President was in favor of it, and three of the cabinet were opposed to it.

Do the extension of the treaty for 20 years?

Do the extension of the treaty; and while it was passed on his President having voted in case of a tie, that, among other things, caused the resignation of the cabinet. Vincent left the cabinet the other five remained, and my recollection is that Dr. Herraux, carried on the duties of two departments during the time when did not been filled. The whole cabinet resigned but continued to the request of the President, until the new cabinet was formed, that the National Assembly met, or just before.

Understand, then, that the treaty was extended?

The terms of the convention were extended to 20 years. The all the discussion in regard to the cabinet was to try to get who would work with us and with the Haitian Government to rnement, and a proper government, in that Republic.

General, would you say that in this work you acted primarily as President in the formation of his cabinet?

Considered I had two masters, as it were, or, at least, I had two I had to serve the United States and I had to serve Haiti—and I did to serve the interests of those two I did.

And did you work in cooperation with the President of Haiti?

Did.

Close cooperation?

Close, very close.

General, you spoke of having two objects; that is, the interests of the United States and the interests of Haiti. Did those interests coincide or

In my opinion, they coincided absolutely.

What was the object of both of those interests?

The object of both of those interests was to establish peace and proper government in the Republic of Haiti in order that there be no use by irresponsible people for foreign complications to arise. I was building up the Republic of Haiti and improving the conditions in the Republic of Haiti it was working for the benefit of the people.

And your conception, then, of the interests of the United States and the interests of Haiti—

Were absolutely coincident.

They coincided for that purpose?

Gen. COLE. Yes. I told the President from time to time. I also told him on one or two occasions, when there were discussions between us, or something arising between us, that I considered primarily the point of view of the United States, but that the United States needed a proper government in the Philippines, whatever we were after.

Mr. HOWE. Why did the United States need a proper gov-

Gen. COLE. Well, in the first place, it is at our front door. The Sea is the entrance; that is, the islands of the Carribean Sea are to a considerable part of the United States and the Panamanian Republic. We can not afford to have any foreign country obtain an undue influence in that part of the world. Our policy is, and I think it should be, to do not interfere with the status quo, but that we do not permit European powers to gain any further influence in that part of the world.

Mr. HOWE. Well, was there danger of that?

Gen. COLE. I think there was danger of that. We can not have conditions to exist, or to grow, and say "Hands off" to everybody. They strew in their own juice indefinitely. France had $100,000,000 francs invested in Haiti in the loans, and she had other sums invested in Haiti, and she had large sums invested in Haiti, and, as I have said yesterday, I believed that the European situation was the one that was active operations in Haiti by either one or two European nations.

Mr. Howe. Now, besides the United States policy, which as its following of the Monroe Doctrine down in Haiti, what the United States have?

Gen. COLE. Well, my own opinion is that its objects or objects is to bring about a state of chaos, and replace it by a condition wherein there is no chaos. Haiti could continue to exist as an independent State and perform the functions of government. In other words, I believe it has the capacity to clean that place up and establish decency down there, because it has. You have no idea of the conditions, if you have not been there, and when we landed in Haiti. The Aegean states were Paradise.

Mr. HOWE. It would sound as if you believed that one of the United States going down there was to save Haiti?

Gen. COLE. I think it was. I think that we were compelled of 1915, and having landed and found the conditions there was not anything else to be done but to say there and save. I say to everybody that I talked to that, to the very best of my belief, the United States had no design whatsoever against Haiti, but on the contrary, it had every design to maintain

Mr. HOWE. And you were closely in touch, as brigade commander, with the policies of our country?

Gen. COLE. I know that is the policy of our country; I white, to maintain it and establish a proper government. I was no idea of taking away the independence of Haiti. I Establishing an influence; yes.

Mr. Howe. And you have already told us as to what mission to be in establishing good material conditions down part of the whole task?

Gen. COLE. Yes; by task, particularly after the national solved was to do everything I possibly could to aid—not to doing it before, but that became almost the sole task—to building up a proper government. It was difficult and required. I do not know how much of an impression I even made.

Mr. HOWE: What was the next matter that came up? Was it the declaration of war against Germany?

Gen. COLE. The question of the declaration of war against Germany that was made the object of the wrath of the national as United States.

Mr. HOWE. Was it desirable or even considered necessary to declare war against Germany? That was in the spring of 1917, was it not?

(Gen. COLE. He was considered desirable. The President of desirable, though they wanted certain guaranties. When I it desirable, I mean that he said he considered it desirable. ent nation occupying a neutral country in an area where ene being conducted.

refer to the submarine operations?

As to the submarine proposition. I do not believe the stories were true, but Haiti might very well have become a base for submarines. If German ships had been able to put to sea, Haiti would have been a place where they would have tried to base. An American ship had large material interests in Haiti, a neutral ship, a belligerent, were occupying, and it was thought best to have it ally. There were good reasons for it. For instance, Haitian ships through the sinking of French ships which plied between Haiti and the United States; numerous Haitians were in the French Army as volunteers; they came back to Haiti they were received as heroes; the French was entirely French; their names were French; their French; the educated Haitian who could go to Paris to live was French, and he had every sympathy with the French; and yet, in the United States, they voted absolutely against war with Germany. What assembly?

There can be no question about it that that was the case. That declaration of war was killed in the assembly? I recommended the severance of diplomatic relations, and they went to Haiti to make claim for indemnity and so on. The question of the declaration of war came up later? In September I had a very long letter from the President, in which he took that position.

What did he propose at that time—that the assembly be asked to declare war?

I proposed that the cabinet and the council of state should draw up a declaration of war, and then it should be submitted to a plebiscite, and then everything else; and I replied to it, or advised in regard to opinion, it was entirely undesirable; that it was not necessary that if Haiti had done it in the beginning it would have had a loan. She needed financing, and I was very much in favor of it because I felt it would have assisted Haiti in that line at that time. I have a long correspondence here about it.

Must have considered, then, the conditions to be very radical between April and September?

Considered they had changed. I think the United States policy of any countries declare war against the Central Empire as possible of morale, as a matter of showing that the world was in the Central Empires. It was the desire of the United States, that as many American States as possible join in this line in. Of course, San Domingo was under our occupation. Countries took a stand, but Haiti wanted to swat us.

Was that condition had changed by September?

Considered it had changed, and that there would be no moral in the United States in the war with Germany, and I did not see how we could get any benefit from it. She was coming in with the idea of this declaration of war she could get a loan, and I did not think the conditions warranted her in that belief. I believed she needed the loan if she had gone in at the start, but when she apparently with the idea of simply getting something out of it, not good form for her to do it. As I say, I have a long correspondence about it, if you care to have me read it.

Was the military situation changed by September? It is so, is the military situation required caution on the part of the United States?

In September of 1917 the conditions were pretty well drawn at Haiti, as I remember it, occurred about the 1st of December, made the assault and were so badly broken up.

What was the result?

In December, 1917, was it not? That was the time the British made an assault, got caught there, and they were not prepared for an open assault and got smashed back.

They got pretty well pushed back by a counter attack?

I will give you my résumé, if you wish, in a few words.

Thank you would, please.

Gen. COLE. My opinion is that the motives were: (a) L the United States a loan on the ground that the country (b) desire to be placed in a favorable position, so that she the needed merchandise from the United States; (c) a m or, at least, to gain favorable consideration from France of gaining prestige and of getting an indemnity for the de armed vessels by the Germans on December 6, 1897, and : bitrary acts of Germany, including the loss of Haitian lives the present war.

Mr. HOWE. That 1897 is the correct date?

Gen. COLE. Eighteen hundred and ninety-seven. With t tion that they will be represented on the council when pe started at the end of the war. I also hear they are talk to take charge of German sequestered property, if such state of war is made, but in that I can see absolutely no from the proposed move, but, on the other hand, I see som the United States. Mr. HOWE. Did the fact that the declaration of war ha have anything to do with your determination in September

Gen. COLE. I think it had something to do with it; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Was the next important event the revision revise the Haitian constitution?

Gen. COLE. That was one of the outstanding features of t

Mr. HOWE. Then, General, can you indicate in what resp needed change, and what was done about it, or what was another narrative outline, please.

Gen. COLE. My recollection is that the thing was practi the convention, necessary in order for the United States to it was to undertake under its terms—as the constitution be very difficult, if not impossible, to get financial interes Haiti, at least without our guarantee and we could not w changes in the fundamental law of Haiti—a revision of the least, implied by the terms of the convention of August, 1 indicated by the fact that there had apparently been two sent from the United States to take up formally and Haitian Government the question of a convention between which would contain features that would require a modifie tion. Under the constitution of Haiti, as then existing, a own land. Mr. HOWE. On this land tenure?

Gen. COLE. Yes; compare the two constitutions. You ha have you not?

Mr. HOWE. We have not got those in the record, have w Mr. ANGELL. Yes; at least the article of the old constitut I read it one time in the hearings.

Gen. COLE. I can take up the comparison of the two later

Mr. HOWE. Yes; I think now, if you will go ahead and changes, besides the land-tenure one, it would be well; cha mean.

does not concern what I was talking to you about over here, in the new constitution. These were made by the American minister. I had said that, this thing I am giving you. I am quoting this correction to show what the United States desired the Haitian Government to do with this change in the constitution.

provided that secretaries of state should receive fees in salary. Our country desired that cut out, our Department of State to do away with the council of state, as it did not consider it being an additional expense and, as a matter of fact, an anachronism in the country. It desired that provision should be made of judges of the court of cassation and the judges of the supreme court. This had been made for the prosecution of the secretaries of state, a procedure whereby the judiciary could be held to answer in office. It desired that article 131 should read: "and the liquidation of the accounts and of the general administrative officers responsible to the public treasury should be determined in the place of having it in the constitution, 'On confirmation of accounts,' which was the prior constitutional provision." The three articles—132, 133, and 134—that it desired to be added to justices of the peace being named by the President of the Republic under certain conditions.

desired judges also, judges of the court of cassation, the removal of judges and the fact that they could not be removed from office by legal forfeiture, a judgment, or suspended only by an act of Congress. They could not be retired.

Article 135, provided that the appointment of judges of the peace should be by the President.

These were apparently not considered proper in there, and the government eliminated.

He desired that foreigners should enjoy the same protection as Haitians, without exception, and besides that the right shall not be claimed for indemnities for wrongs or losses sustained by them.

He did not get that quite clearly. The proposed change was to allow them to claim indemnities?

The proposed change to the article followed substantially the same as inserted in the constitution an article similar to the one in the Cuban constitution, ratifying the acts of the United States in military occupation—a very important provision.

Protecting property rights and everything else vitally?

Protecting everything. Practically everything that had been done in Cuba by military forces in Cuba could be set aside.

There were not—

There were not—

Such a provision in the constitution?

Such a provision in the constitution, an absolutely essential one as was made in the case of the Republic of Cuba.

Not that essentially for the good of Haiti?

Essentially for the good of everybody—Haiti and the United States should know where he stood.

You find more objection to some of these proposed changes but I did not have anything to do with them other than to say that I did not think I did very much in that, as a matter of fact, the revision of the constitution, so far as that was concerned with the President and in discussions with the different members of the cabinet and the Chamber of Deputies, I gave very careful consideration to the wishes of the United States and I take any particular part in that particular feature of it. between the State Department and the Haitian Government.

Mr. HOWE. Now, let me just ask you this question. What was the attitude of the Assembly toward these changes?

Gen. COLE. The attitude of the Assembly was very hostile.

Mr. HOWE. To the United States?

Gen. COLE. To the changes and to the United States. I was particularly hostile, and this, I think, was something that they had in the question of land tenure they were afraid of; there was a fear. The question of ratifying the acts of the occupation, the military forces, martial law, the decisions of the military courts—

Mr. HOWE. They were very reluctant on—

Gen. COLE. They would not do it. They did not want to have that set aside, and it was absolutely essential.

Mr. HOWE. For the best interests of Haiti?

Gen. COLE. I think for the best interests of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. How about foreign land tenure? Was that a question of Haiti?

Gen. COLE. I think so, with certain reservations to the United States.

Mr. HOWE. You mean for the protection of the rights of the United States?

Gen. COLE. For the protection of Haiti. That was a question that was carefully considered by Admiral Knapp, Mr. Myer, and the committee. The question of the form in which the constitution was finally passed.

Mr. HOWE. Of what we might say was the new constitution?

Gen. COLE. Of the new constitution.

Mr. HOWE. As distinguished from this attempt to revise the constitution?

Gen. COLE. As distinguished from this attempt to revise the constitution.

Mr. HOWE. Now, General, some little time after that the constitution was proposed, or dissolved?

Gen. COLE. I think if I gave a short résumé of the constitution it would be well. The council of state prepared a constitution. That project was presented to the national assembly. It was presented to the American minister, who also took it up with the American government. The American minister, after having the constitution of the United States, I presume, communicated with the Haitian government. There was considerable correspondence with the Haitian government. The Haitian government, I always thought, deliberately spilled the beans. They took this constitution and sent it, without comment, practically, to the national assembly, saying, "Here is not our recommendation, but here is the result of the American government. It amounts to dictation from the United States. Now, see if you can do better." There is not any question in my mind but what that was a malice aforethought, and it certainly did raise a rumpus. The Haitian government naturally got angry, because it was inexcusable to do that. They just simply shot this thing over to the national assembly. They really made them all the madder.

Mr. HOWE. That result is easily understood?

Gen. COLE. I think so. They just simply would not pass the constitution considered necessary. The United States had things had to be done to carry on the work it had set it. It was their wish that a constitution which was absolutely a expressed wish of the United States should not be put in.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I will present certain testimony in written form, in the shape of a continuation of understanding, I believe, when he was last here as a witness. This is the understanding that later on, if cross-examination is deemed examination, Admiral Caperton will be recalled. This is a new 75 typewritten pages.

referred to was printed as a part of Admiral Caperton's original general, I think at the end of the morning session we had arrived here you were going to describe the prorogation or dissolution of the assembly. Will you give us an outline of that?

There were a number of conferences with the President. The conferences with the leaders of the national assembly, the Senate and the endeavor to come to some amicable arrangement, but apparently failed. The President had from time to time intimated or stated that it would be necessary to dissolve the national assembly sooner or later. He had asked me what attitude we would take, and I told him that on what developed; that at the times he had spoken before, in the time was not yet ripe for any such action.

I have a comment on that question which I wrote at the time, probably express my opinion better about the thing than I could

Will you read that? Is that your idea?

Yes; I thought I might do that, if it is agreeable.

On the 17th, the President asked me to come and see him at 10.30 a. m. I went to see Dr. Herraux. He stated that the national assembly did not seem to be in accordance with the desire of the United States in regard to the constitution, and that the opponents to the Government of the United States are apparently endeavoring to prevent, by means of a session of opinion of those favorable to the Government, and to prevent a free discussion; that while he was trying, he did not seem to get very much done, and wanted to know what attitude the Government would take in the matter of the national assembly falling to the wishes of the United States. I told him that I was keeping the Government informed as to the conditions here; as to the national assembly, and as to the various happenings; that I was making a long and fairly detailed report as to the general condition of the country, and particularly as to the present situation, and that the report must now be in the hands of the State Department, I also told him that my Government felt that Haiti should have every opportunity for capacity for self-government, and to actually govern herself; that it considered that the national assembly should be given an opportunity to show that it was capable of relieving the actual state of the country or incapable of performing its duties in such a way as to aid in the proper Government in this country; that there were a number of agreements which required the approval of the national assembly, and that the assembly showed that it actually was not going to approve them, it would not be wise to have recourse to drastic action, perhaps there would be no assurance that another body would be any more successful, and in the meantime things most necessary for the development of the country would be held up.

The interference of which he spoke, I suggested that he endeavor to stop playing politics and come out in the open in favor of the things he was supporting, and to demand their rights to be heard; that if power had apparently been in his hands, and that if they had been heard they could force the opposition to act in a reasonable manner. I told him that when disorder was feared before, the presiding officer had ordered for gendarmes to preserve order and that as soon as additional troops were asked for they would be furnished, and in sufficient number for the chambers of spectators if necessary.

In regard to that.

That conversation which you have just spoken of took place about the actual time of the dissolution of the assembly?

Fourteen days, two weeks.

What then developed?

The report of the committee to the national assembly to prepare the constitution provided that only Haitians could be landed proprietors or citizens. They stuck to their safeguard that foreigners could enjoy no rights provided by law, etc.

Mr. HOWE. They stuck to that—continued it?

Gen. COLE. Yes; they stuck to that.

Mr. HOWE. Just what was that you referred to; they stuck to that foreigners—

Gen. COLE. Should have the protection accorded them. States' demand was that foreigners should have the same protection to Haitians, and they stuck to the provision that they should have the same protection provided by law.

Mr. HOWE. What was the difference there?

Gen. COLE. What was the difference?

Mr. HOWE. Yes; between the two classes of protection?

Gen. COLE. Well, the one class of protection to foreigners gave them the same rights and the same protection under Haitian law as the law gave the Haitians, while under the provisions of the constitution it gave them such rights only as the national assembly in making might see fit to grant them.

Mr. HOWE. As a matter of fact, was there a different protection provided by law?

Gen. COLE. There was. It was practically impossible to get justice in the Haitian courts.

Mr. HOWE. That word "protection" applied to more than their lives?

Gen. COLE. I mean in litigation and things of that sort. There was no chance in a Haitian court unless he was able to buy it.

Mr. HOWE. Was he discriminated against in the constitution?

Gen. COLE. Offhand I would say yes; decidedly.

Mr. HOWE. So there was more than a distinction in language of protection?

Gen. COLE. Oh, yes; it was considered very vital, and it was vital myself.

Mr. HOWE. And the assembly stood by the existing protection?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And would not change it?

Gen. COLE. And would not change it; and they would not have the notion of ratifying the acts of the occupation and the military law. I had reported the final project that the national assembly proposed to put through and I received instructions to execute and prevent the passage of such a project.

Mr. HOWE. You have given us an outline of that project?

Gen. COLE. Yes. Now, here is a report that I made on the subject. "Antagonism national assembly to foreign ownership law. I can influence such that no endeavor I can make short of that will prevent passage constitution along lines reported on. I discussed matters fully with minister and Gen. Butler. Support of Haitian Government that, in opinion our Government, constitution of national assembly will make impossible to bring about results of articles 1 and 14 of treaty, and consequently our Government will not support such constitution. If national assembly refuses heed such constitution necessary to dissolve assembly to prevent passage. The Haitian Government should be increased by at least eight full companies of troops that may follow dissolution assembly. See paragraph 16 of memorandum." Mr. HOWE. Did you anticipate trouble when you were at the assembly?

Gen. COLE. I did not anticipate it, but I was prepared for it. It would create trouble. I did believe this: That it would be more than the dissolution of the entire Haitian Government and the establishment of a military government there, because, on account of the fact that the two elements, if both were suppressed each would be the fall of the other, but if one went down, one would be sore.

Mr. HOWE. For surviving?

Gen. COLE. For surviving.

Mr. HOWE. You refer to the executive and the legislative?

Gen. COLE. Yes. The President had sent me a memorandum and I went to see him in regard to this memorandum, and he made in connection with the constitution. I went to see him in regard to his memorandum and discussed matters with him.

of the conversation I learned a number of interesting things. In this memorandum I told him that it was necessary, before it was further considered, to follow out its results to an ultimate conclusion. I admitted that if the people decided, in the election proposed by the constitution prepared by the national assembly that the United States were willing to accept such a constitution and was Haiti should remain in its present primitive and disorganized condition it would be necessary to suppress the national assembly. He also stated that if the result of the elections was to reject the constitution of the national assembly the fact that the national assembly would have that attitude and that it would still, in his opinion, stick to its position, and that if his suggestion that other representatives be allowed the consequence would be either two assemblies, each legally elected or that the present national assembly would be dissolved.

He stated that he could do nothing without the complete support of the United States and that his real belief was and is that the national assembly should be suppressed. As I have reported on a number of occasions I have no doubt in my mind but what the President has consistently held that end. He stated that, in his opinion, the dissolution of the national assembly was absolutely the only method that could be followed, and that he had the approval of the United States before he could take any action. He also stated that at no time, as he believed, has this country been able to elect a proper national assembly, that the elections were controlled by a few politicians, and that the vast majority of the voters had voted for what they were voting for, but were simply brought in and manipulated by their friends, having received money for such votes. In his opinion the only government by Haitians that would be acceptable would be one of a President, with a council of cabinet ministers and a council of state with legislative powers; that such government would be a constitution in accordance with the ideas of the United States, and that he would like to see the country and carry on the government under such conditions as the country had gotten out some of the influence of the politicians and had been able to realize by actual experience the benefits of the various changes in the constitution that were suggested by the United States. He stated that such a government had been carried on in Haiti and that if the experience with the last and the present government was a criterion of the capacity of a Haitian national government, he quite agreed with him as to the undesirability of such an government. He stated to him that while the present system seemed to be demonstrably a failure, that for a year the system proposed by him had been in operation and had not been a success; that if such system were continued, in order to reach a conclusion it would be absolutely necessary that the political element be discarded and a cabinet and council of state formed of people of ability who had not been active politicians, and, above all, men of the reputation of being thoroughly honest, so that the educated country would realize that the Government was composed of men working to benefit the country and not to fill their own pockets at the expense of the country. I stated that the council of state had been composed of all politicians, and that they had not been able to control the country, and further, that if such experiments were continued and found lacking there could be but one result, the administration of Haiti by Americans until such time as the younger generation was able to take over in public affairs. He stated that he realized this fully and that the United States Government were permitted that he would make no appointments of state or to the cabinet without the express sanction of the United States Government, and that, in his opinion, such a government would be successful. He further stated that he would emphasize the importance of the various departments, particularly of agriculture and education, as would be necessary to place these departments on

He stated that since he had become President many people who were his friends, became his enemies; but that outside of the political element, numerous friends of high standing in all parts of the country, were now his friends and he could get good citizens to work with him. As to this

I am somewhat uncertain, as the President has been in p years, and I do not think he is particularly well or favo other parts of the country than Port au Prince and his hor

In discussing politicians he stated that the reason why the United States influence was so bitterly hated by the they were prevented from getting their livelihood from th ing that in former days all of the principal politica enough money out of the public funds to enable them to t their families to Paris each year.

In discussing article 6 I stated that from the instruct I had no doubt whatever but what my Government woul or to accept a constitution similar to the one now bei national assembly, and I referred to the fact that his brothe the right of foreigners to own land, and the President expl Prior to the first meeting of the national assembly to vot tion he had had a meeting of his friends and that one-ha and one-half had been opposed to the right of foreigners t had information that payment was being made by those o to have people in the chambers to howl down any attempt of the ownership of land by foreigners, and, consequen keep his supporters lined up, he had suggested or stated as they pleased, and consequently his brother, among o favor of denying foreigners the right to own land. seem to be particularly good sense.

resident what he expected to gain by seeing the chambers, and had hopes that all the suggestions of the United States would be national assembly with the possible exception of the one of the occupation. I told him that the constitution of 1839, in ph of its one hundred and ninety-second article, had provided es and acts made by revolutionary committees were ratified, and that I considered that the new constitution of Haiti ratification of his decrees and of the acts of the occupation that the end desired could be accomplished by agreement tries formally ratified by the national assembly. I informed him, in my opinion, no constitution could possibly be accepted which was not in accordance with the one prepared by the council of state and which I had sent to the State Department for consideration, with modifications in accordance with suggestions of our State Department. In the meantime, that, fearing he might be insulted, he decided to send for assistants of the two chambers in place of going to the meeting himself. I informed him that the decree should be in readiness for delivery, so that in case any tricks were tried by the nation it could be met by an immediate delivery of the notice of dissolution. The American minister, with Capt. Anderson, was entering the hall when the son was received with honors of a vice admiral.

"Immediately after the American minister had left the hall I saw the bureaus of the national assembly, after which I went to the meeting place of the national assembly, when the national assembly held a secret session on the second floor of the building, the session lasting one-half hour. After this they came downstairs and resumed the session, starting in at article 104, where they had left off. Gen. Zamor then attempted to speak, starting his speech by saying that while he could not divulge what had taken place in the secret session, he considered that people should know what the situation was, and that for the national assembly to attempt to pass a constitution which could not possibly be accepted or put into effect. At this point several various members interposed to such an extent that he refused to continue. Afterwards it became apparent that the chambers were endeavoring to pass a constitution through. I sent Gen. Butler to the palace to see the president after his arrival there he reported that it had not been possible to find the cabinet members could not be found, but that he had directed a search for him. I had told Gen. Butler that, in case he could not find the decree, he was to be informed, as coming from me, that the national assembly myself and would recommend the election of a new temporary government. The President then signed the decree of dissolution. Afterwards it was reported to me that the national assembly was endeavoring to pass the whole constitution by skipping articles, so I sent immediately a gendarme officer at the meeting place of the national assembly to prevent by force if necessary, any further proceedings. The president then signed various articles and endeavored to declare that the constitution was passed. I directed that the doors be closed with the members on one side. The missing secretary of state was found; he was brought in. I directed Gen. Butler to proceed immediately to the national assembly to deliver the decree to the President of the assembly.

"The president of the assembly refused to accept the decree. I directed it to the assembly as it was not delivered to him by the president. He then thereof, announcing that he had a message from the president, but did not know what it contained. Gen. Butler then took the decree to the national assembly, and directed, in accordance with the instructions, the chambers be cleared and members and spectators be released. The chambers had been placed at the entrances to the chamber, and no further proceedings. The deputies or senators will be recognized nor, if practically possible, the event they stand dissolved and no meeting of any consequence. The decree was taken place and then only in some private place."

Just prior, I think a couple of hours prior, to the dissolution of the assembly I was at the legation with the American minister and his assistants and patrol forces, and just about that time, after we had decided that the dissolution was necessary and must be done at once, a messenger came to the legation and stated: "Take no action until arrival of State Department. We have no knowledge." There was nothing else to be done but to wait. The assembly dissolved and it was done.

Mr. HOWE. Did Gen. Butler clear the hall, the legislators, did he strike any difficulty in that; do you know?

Gen. COLE. As far as I know there was no clash whatsoever.

Mr. HOWE. This report which you have just read was given by the American minister, did he see Gen. Butler, after the dissolution was accomplished?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Do you know whether or not Gen. Butler was personally armed down there?

I do not know; I would presume that he probably was.

What do you know?

I do not know. He may or he may not have been.

Do you know whether there were gendarmes inside there?

I think there were.

Do you know why they were there?

To preserve order.

Do you know if they had been requested by the presiding officer?

My recollection is that they were invariably there.

Do you know whether they had been requested?

On that specific occasion I do not remember.

Had they been on previous occasions requested by the presiding officer to keep order?

There had been requests made on previous occasions for extra men to preserve order.

Was a request made by the presiding officer?

I think, as a matter of fact, there was probably a request made that there be extra men there to preserve order.

Well, then, General, to sum this up, the assembly was dissolved? The assembly was dissolved?

By the President?

By the President.

Were you were prepared, in case the President did not take that the assembly dissolved on your own orders, and in that you had the approval of the department, with the exception, perhaps, of that last dispatch and do I understand that that was received so late in the day that it not be changed?

It was received so late that we could not change our plans. If our usefulness there would have ended then and there.

Was that received before or after the President signed his proclamation? I would say it was received after he had signed his proclamation.

Was it after it had been decided that the dissolution was to take place? It was received just a few minutes before the assembly actually took place in the chambers. If I had gone to the telephone, or messenger, or automobile, I could have stopped it.

Could you have stopped Gen. Butler?

Could you have stopped Gen. Butler.

From delivering the President's proclamation?

Yes.

But you could not have done that unless you had acted quickly?

It was not a case that could be done. I had to take the responsibility of carrying out what I considered the best thing to do, being on the scene. Were there attempts after that, on the part of the assembly, to do anything; it passed off as quietly as you please.

Did they did not gather in other places and attempt to function?

No.

From that time on until the end of your tour there were there any serious crises?

No; no more. That ended it.

Then how would you characterize the remaining months of your tour? Were they tranquil?

Yes; very tranquil.

And how was the time used?

The time was used in building up, to the best of our ability, the government, and improving conditions?

During all your tour there did you hear of any Haitian prisoners of gendarmes or marines?

No.

And, to the best of your belief, during your tour were there any serious occurrences, to the best of my knowledge and belief, was there a prisoner who escaped at Fort Liberte, or at Ouanaminthe.

Mr. HOWE. General, during your time down there were the American occupation and its forces, and the people country, happy?

Gen. COLE. They were all given to understand that it v make themselves so persona grata to the Haitians and ment, that they were on their toes to do it, and they did the country, and they made their influence throughout the

Gen. COLE. Taking the end of 1917, when I left there; ye not believe, had been as prosperous as it was in the fall of The country people, the peasantry, were far ahead of a ever had before. However, that did not apply so much to nor did it apply to the political class, for the reason on the class that they did not have the pickings, and on the pe class that the war and the suspension of water transport affected their business, and they could not get material, siderable difficulty in regard to that. Mr. HOWE. Did it cause any friction?

Menos, who was the Haitian minister, and he made complaints to the State Department, and the Government took it up with us, and I took it up with the President. M. Menos had acted entirely without his authority; and on his own initiative entirely, without any authority from the Government was thoroughly satisfied with the way the question was working. There were one or two complaints from the cases, it being shown to the President, to his entire satisfaction of the minister of the interior, that the reports that were misleading reports, and not correct.

Is there anything else down there that you think we should mention, that you have not covered in your testimony?

There is that question of martial law that has not been spoken of very little.

Will you make comment on that, please?

In my opinion, until the Haitian courts have been entirely replaced by an entirely improved government exists in the Republic martial law must continue. It certainly must continue so long as there are there under anything like the present conditions. It has been very heavy on the innocent; it has not weighed heavily on the poor; it has weighed heavily on anybody, except on their fears. There were several provost courts were resorted to. There was one occasion when in a purely Haitian case.

Will you describe that?

A man died, leaving two sons, and also leaving some property. A dispute between the two sons as to a division of the property, not friends. One brother sent to the other brother and said try to settle up, so the other brother went to him, and he was with the other and the brother's son, and then his wife and child were they came, and for a period of approximately 12 hours, in the presence of the child, the man was gradually tortured to death by beatings and bleedings, and ligatures—tied to a tree. It was a very atrocious, deliberate killing of a brother. The matter was referred to the local judicial authorities, and the man was released. The gendarme officer took it up with the next authority, and was informed that nothing could be done in the case was ended, he having been released by order of the chief. The matter was reported to the chief of the gendarmerie, and to my attention, and I took it up with the minister of justice. I said that a condition of that sort could not be done, and they took it up with the commissary of the Government. He I directed that the man be arrested. They said that there could be done. I said, "Very well, then, this is a case I refer to before a military court," and the man was tried before a court and sentenced to confinement. After that was done, a short time the minister for justice said he thought they could deal with the case they had made a mistake; they said they could not deal with the case after some discussion between the minister, the President, and the minister asked for jurisdiction of the man, I told them that I would have the man serve under the sentence of the Haitian court for the sentence of a military court; that it was a Haitian case, but I did not propose to allow the man to escape if they would prepare the proper legal papers in his case for him to trial before the proper Haitian tribunal, that in case it was proved in accordance with the evidence, the man would then be a Haitian prisoner, but, so long as I remained in Haiti, and in my opinion, as the American military authorities remained in Haiti, he would have to remain in jail for the length of his sentence; he could not, having become a Haitian prisoner, be immedi-

Was there anything that they feared, but it was something that did not happen very often; very, very seldom. The newspapers generally believe pretty well. The only case in which I remember of having a trial before the provost court was immediately after the dissolution of the National Assembly. The same day the assembly was dissolved I gave Gen. Butler a notice to deliver papers that there should be no comment on this particular public opinion, and all the newspapers carried out those instructions.

Some two or three days later a Government newspaper made a vicious attack on the National Assembly, and I had the editor brought before the provost court, and he was tried and placed under a bond for his offense. Incidentally, it looked very much as though it was written by Dr. Heraux.

Mr. HOWE. What was the attitude of the Haitian courts toward this action?

Gen. COLE. They were opposed to it; they did not want to do it.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know about the case which has been made for the presentation of a check for gourdes?

Gen. COLE. Well, I know something about it.

Mr. HOWE. It was testified here, General, that a Haitian called for the payment of gourdes at the bank, and he was refused payment, whereupon he brought suit for the amount of his check in gourdes and punitive damages. The plea of the bank was that it was forced to take that action—because of the occupation—and thereafter the court of cassation took that plea and upheld the action of the lower court in finding against the bank. Do you know who of the American officers ordered the bank to do this?

Gen. COLE. I think Admiral Caperton. My note states that he was the one who acted in this case; that acting under an order of Admiral Caperton, with a view to preventing speculation in gold and gourdes, and the correction in the rate of exchange, the bank made payment in gourdes for five for one for a check drawn in gold. This was a check drawn for $100,000.

Mr. HOWE. Drawn in gold means in dollars?

Gen. COLE. Yes. Mr. Francis—his name is Francois—brought the case against the bank and attempted to execute the judgment. I issued an order that judgment could not be executed and that no interference with the bank on account of this case would be permitted.

Mr. HOWE. Then I got my question hind part before the bank was for.

Gen. COLE. Mr. Francois made decidedly objectionable suggestions to this, against the occupation; and I was very much inclined to go against him, but finally decided I would not, as he was an American of reputation of being quite irascible and was apparently trying to make a martyr, and I thought the best thing was simply to let him be taken to put into effect the decrees. I took it up with the bank and he could not do anything, of course; it was beyond his power. The order of justice said it was beyond his power; but as it was done under a direct, positive order of Admiral Caperton, as far as I could see, I could do but protect the bank. I have considerable papers about this case. I can give my instructions, if you would care to have them.

Mr. HOWE. Let us have those.

Gen. COLE. This is to the financial adviser, dated April 28, 1917.

"Referring to your letter of April 26, 1917, with inclosure, I am informed that one J. B. W. Francis has caused a summons to be issued against the 'National Banque de la Republique d'Haiti' through the 'National Tribunal' to appear before the tribunal civile of Port au Prince, to produce the original or copies thereof, and to show cause why certain fines or damages should not be imposed against the said banque, you are informed that the action on which this complaint is based was performed by the agent of Admiral Caperton (in whose name the account was opened) whose orders the funds concerned were disbursed) and his orders, this case does not fall within the jurisdiction of the civil courts and consequently that no judgment of the civil courts against the banque can be permitted to be executed, nor will any interference of the banque on account of this case be tolerated. I have accordingly instructed the banque accordingly and instruct it to inform this office that it will not attempt to interfere in any way with its operations on account of this case. Also instruct the banque to keep the plaintiff in this case. Also instruct the banque to keep the plaintiff informed of the further actions of the plaintiff and to report to this office."

think that probably is all that is really necessary about the facts the court withdrew a part of its decision against the occupant of the fines against the bank, but they stuck to something else, put into effect.

In other words, the effect of that direction of yours was to disregard and decree of the court?

To set aside the decree in the civil court. That would be an abuse where it was necessary to have ratified the acts of the occupation of Haiti by the constitution before we could withdraw. That is a case in point.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that Mr. Angell would like to suggest some witnesses to the committee. I told him that I hoped they would be called by the committee at its own instance will probably be examined by the end of Tuesday morning's session of the committee—that is to say, on the 15th of the month—and he, I think, will submit to the committee the names and addresses of some witnesses that he would like to have called.

All of these names, I believe, have been already given by me in a letter to Mr. McCormick, at his request, as far back as August, the time I came down here from New York to go over with me the names of the witnesses and the general procedure, and these were the names that I submitted at that time.

Q. Do you think that he had better give a list of them for the committee?

A. That is the point. You will probably not have time in the two days before we start down to Haiti to examine all of these witnesses.

I suggest, in view of the limited time at the disposal of the committee, that only two or three or possibly four of those be heard, and that the committee be particularly anxious to have the testimony of H. R. Pilkington, whose address is care P. W. Chapman & Co., New York City, or, if he happens to be away from New York, that he can be reached in care of P. W. Chapman & Co., Chicago.

I would like very much to have the committee hear the testimony of one Mr. Johnson, at 110 Crawford Street, Roxbury, Mass., care E. Levy, and also of Charles A. Burrows, 253 Belgrade Avenue, Roslyn, N. Y., and Mr. Johnson, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mr. Johnson and Mr. Johnson would come simply on any informal request to the committee or its counsel, Mr. Howe. Zurckerman is a young man, and he told me he could not get away without serious preparation with his employer unless he had some kind of semi-official position with the committee.

I would suggest a telegram from the Sergeant at Arms.

Yes; some such form in his case. I do not think that will be the case of Mr. Pilkington and I am sure it would not be necessary of Johnson, but I would suggest that a similar telegram be sent to the Sergeant at Arms to Burrows.

Which would you rather have, Johnson or Burrows?

I can tell that better when I get back to New York to-morrow. Johnson has to say, in substance, but I do not know what Burrows, although he has promised to write me and give me an outline of his testimony will be.

Q. You take that up with Capt. Angell, Mr. Howe?

A. Yes; I will take that up.

If in the meantime I may have Pilkington and Zurckerman with me, when I get back to New York to-morrow morning I will be able to tell you whether I would prefer to have Johnson or Burrows, as the case may be.

people who, from one cause or another, had become objectors to when not engaged in revolutionary activities prefer living on the to work performed by themselves; and in general it included by armed robbery.

Were the Cacos who refused to surrender their arms and accept in the fall of 1915 thereafter regarded as bandits by virtue of the usual?

Only during the period when they remained under arms. After Fort Riviere was finished we did what we could to get people their homes and reestablish their farms; and it was our general policy to action against other than a few of the higher leaders, except people who still continued in bands under arms and were scouring the country, in particular market women, their best prey.

Well, up to the time of the capture of Fort Riviere were those who remained under arms regarded as ipso facto bandits and occupation?

They were. They were regarded as bandits, because their leaders at a formal convention for the delivery of arms and the return to their followers; and these people had disobeyed not only the leaders, up to and including the very highest, but they had taken in the announced determination of carrying on a war to drive us subordinate must in civilized warfare follow the instructions of him in the military hierarchy.

Were those operations—I am speaking now of the operations in which concluded with the capture of Fort Riviere—regarded by us as practically warfare being conducted by our troops against the us; absolutely.

You spoke in considerable detail of the conditions at Cape summer and early fall of 1915 and of the work that was undermilitary forces under your direction, such as cleaning up hospitals, sanitation, and public utilities generally. From what sources were in those works derived?

Gen. COLE. Almost entirely from funds allotted me by the senior naval officer present, through Col. Waller, the senior military officer on shore, although some small sums in the treasury of the commune were used to make payments for communal purposes and to make payments, as I remember it, for communal building or buildings. But the amount involved was very small, the funds being turned back as soon as the administration was formed at the Cape.

Mr. ANGELL. Were those communal funds seized by you or others under his direction or your direction? In other words, were they made available for expenditures by the military forces?

Gen. COLE. There was no Haitian official of any authority found that there were funds belonging to the commune in a very precarious position, and—

Mr. ANGELL (interposing). Were those funds on deposit?

Gen. COLE. No; they were not.

Mr. ANGELL. They were in specie?

Gen. COLE. They were in specie, in a very insecure safe building, and in charge of a man of whom I was somewhat doubtful. Those funds were placed in the bank at Cape Haitien, and for them, and an account was kept of all funds that were received from the communal administration and were turned back.

Mr. ANGELL. Were the funds in question deposited by your orders and in your name?

Gen. COLE. They were, as I remember it, deposited by me in my name, as representing the commune of Cape Haitien.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember the approximate amount?

Gen. COLE. I do not. And I have not got the data; I could find it. I have it somewhere, but I do not know where.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it a few hundred gourdes, or several hundred?

Gen. COLE. As I remember it, it was some hundreds of gourdes. Now, the time approached—or the time had arrived—when I had to make up the tax list for the commune for the coming year. I had of this until very near the time to have the thing completed from, I believe, the former mayor, Mr. Auguste, who had left papers before, and the same people were employed to draw up the list for the ensuing year. And my recollection is that funds were turned back from those taxes during my administration. They may have been like a good many other things, and I had placed an officer in charge of that work, carrying that on under my general direction. I am quite certain, absolutely secure without my signature, that the funds of the Commune of Cape Haitien were deposited in the Caisse Nationale de la Republique d'Haiti in the name of Col. Eli L. L. de la Commune de Cap Haitien, as follows:

19 Oct., 1915.....

28 Oct., 1915.....

22 Nov., 1915.....

23 Nov., 1915.....

Total.....

The above total was turned over to and receipted for by the communal administration of Cape Haitien on December 4, 1915.

Mr. ANGELL. The funds were secure without your signature?

Gen. COLE. They were absolutely secure—unless I put my signature on something ordering them to be taken out of the bank.

Mr. ANGELL. Oh, they could not be disbursed except by your order?

Gen. COLE. They could not be disbursed without my signature.

Mr. ANGELL. In the name of the commune?

Gen. COLE. I really do not remember, but I have no recollection of it being in the name of the commune. It was a separate account lumped with anything else; but as to the exact amount that was carried I do not know, though I did have a number of checks in the bank from time to time, though never a personal check.

who was responsible for determining the purposes for which expended in and around Cape Haitien?

military governor himself.

Do you know the sources from which the funds turned over to Caperton were derived?

Always understood they were derived from the customs revenues, as martial law in effect in Cape Haitien in the fall of 1915?

Yes.

formal proclamation?

Yes, that made substantially at the same time as the proclamation in Port au Prince?

Immediately following, or at the same time.

You spoke of the agricultural stations, experimental farms, and conducted. Do you remember how many of those stations there they were located?

One school was located outside of Port au Prince, beyond a place and when was that begun—that school—approximately, if you as some time prior to the end of June, 1917.

Was that established and run by the marine forces of the military occupation?

Yes, as run by the military occupation, and my recollection is that officers of the gendarmerie. Now, there was an experimental place; there was a farm started at Furcy, and there was a recollection is, in the vicinity of the gendarmerie station near number, or practically a large proportion, I think, of the had been directed to start small farms with as up-to-date tion as the officer concerned was capable of putting into one of having a model cabin or farm buildings put up, but it of this work that you are just speaking of—this agricultural taken upon the initiative of the military occupation?

Other than upon a suggestion from Washington?

Yes. Washington never made any suggestions. All of this we had a certain mission to perform, to do the best we could country; to build up a stable government; to preserve peace and ing prosperity to the people; and we were all trying our best anything that we could put our hands to that would help toward ed to put over.

As far as you know, were agricultural experts ever sent down ?

Yes.

When was that? Was that during your time in Haiti?

I find this under date of July 13—

17?

On the arrival of the agricultural experts from the United States it was hoped through their advice to be able to secure a quantity of nonperishable foodstuffs for export to the United States.

Were up against the proposition there of lack of transportation States, and consequently we had to provide food in Haiti, not but we wanted to go beyond that if we could and provide food would be to our benefit and to the benefit of the Haitians.

What was the source of the funds that supported these little s?

Haitian funds; presumably collected, as I said, from the customs.

Have you any idea, General, of the attendance at the agri-How widely did the idea spread? How much was it taken up

Gen. COLE. It was an idea that grew. At first we think—

Mr. ANGELL (interposing). During attendance?

Gen. COLE. During attendance; I think 10 gourdes a man with their food, such food as they could not raise—that was withdrawn—that is, the 10 gourdes—and my men were required to pay small fees. But it was a thing increased. I have somewhere among these papers—I make an account of the visit of the President there, if you care.

Mr. ANGELL. You might put it in afterwards if you think.

Gen. COLE. Well, I would have to hunt for it. I may.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the numbers in attendance at the scores or the hundreds or—

Gen. COLE. No; my recollection is that there may have been. But unless I had something in my records to show I cannot answer that question very satisfactorily.

Mr. ANGELL. Did that school continue to exist so long as you were there?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know if it was continued after that?

Gen. COLE. I understand that it is still in existence, though I am not in regard to it.

Mr. ANGELL. Referring to irrigation and the cul de sac at Prince, I understood you to say that nothing had been done pointed out under the treaty prior to the time when you left Haiti.

Gen. COLE. Nothing had been done by him. We had to repair the dam, I being afraid that in the winter freshets I believed then that we would have completed the work in six weeks; but as I had orders to turn over the engineering of Haiti, and as I believed that the irrigation systems came under the jurisdiction as a treaty official, I turned it over and said, "you can go at it."

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember about when it was that you turned it over to him?

Gen. COLE. I think it was probably in September or October.

Mr. ANGELL. Of 1917?

Gen. COLE. Of 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. These plans were drawn up by you, or under your initiative?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Rather than by direction from Washington?

Gen. COLE. Yes; all of these things. I do not remember any sort that we ever got from Washington.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make recommendations along with you to Washington—that is, recommendations for irrigation, or for such matters—to Washington?

Gen. COLE. I kept a diary, and copies of that diary I gave to Admiral Knapp in San Domingo, to the Navy Department, to the State Department, and to headquarters of the Marine Corps; and I took up everything that came up that was of any importance. In that diary I had gotten the President to ask for agricultural experts, postal experts, or whatever it might be. So Washington during the year 1917 as to what was actually being done in Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. Did your diary also contain general notes that would set forth clearly conditions in Haiti as you have them in direct examination here?

Gen. COLE. I think so, without any question; because my testimony here has been refreshed by going over this material.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you keep such a diary during the year 1916?

Gen. COLE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Or 1916?

Gen. COLE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. In addition to this diary, copies of which you have just said, did you make specific recommendations to Admiral Knapp, the State Department, the marine head-ch aspects of the whole situation as education, public works, government administration, and the like?

; but not extensively. The only way to get things done is to And the United States was pretty busy, with probably more for its Government than the administration of an experimental g of that sort, though they did send the agricultural experts; their postal experts. I got the expert for the schools. They sent lists; the Smithsonian Institution sent down some people. And ings that they were asked to do they did. But I did not ask that it was our business to do, or that it was the business of als to do. I made comment from time to time in regard to one, or as to what was not being done, by other treaty officials. e those comments contained in this file?

generally. Of course, there were brief, more or less daily, or, radio reports made, and impotant things were handled that very frequently.

hy did the people of Haiti disapprove of President Dartigueagine because he was a politician, had been in political life at is, most of his life. And there are very few men in Haiti prominence in political life and retain their integrity. You e was well educated—quite polished; and I must say, in my inmate politician. I have a great deal of respect for Mr. d a great deal of personal liking for him. And he had the a difficult position, when apparently very few others would. e him the credit of being a man of considerable moral and hen you say "to accept a difficult situation," do you mean American intervention as a fait accompli, as a necessary step t of Haiti?

I think that would be a correct way of putting it. The term escribes the condition of affairs in Haiti; our troops had been ; the President had been assassinated, murdered; revolutionary ge throughout the extent of the Republic; generally the courts w state of morale, if any existed at all; a foreign government in Haiti; and the Haitians had had no reason to think that t that is, white powers, were particularly anxious to regard any man that accepted and worked with a white occupation t that he would be a very decided object of suspicion and of there is no question that they were jealous of their independ- xious to preserve their independence, but they did not realize he idea that were were going in there, for instance, as the e in there, and were going to swat the deuce out of them.

as the President's acceptance of the American intervention among the people?

I think so, without any question.

l the knowledge of that acceptance of such intervention have judgment, in the distrust in which he was held by the people? do not go too far in regard to that, because Mr. Dartiguenave distrust of all the people, by any manner of means. Mr. the distrust and the dislike of a considerable part of the s, the Haitian political classes, but Mr. Dartiguenave did osity of the people of Haiti. Mr. Dartiguenave went through Haiti; and he went at times almost unattended, and he did mosity; he had their liking, to a great extent.

d he have the general support of the population?

ink Mr. Dartiguenave had as much of the support of the opulation like that of Haiti was able to give anybody; as a e population of Haiti are like so many sheep in the hands of ders; a few educated people, possibly 2 per cent of the total he people who handle the affairs of Haiti, and who have affairs of Haiti for the purpose of lining their pockets and own standards.

d the population of Haiti generally know, in your judgment, acts leading up to our intervention and the signing of the ification and the subsequent steps?

Gen. COLE. No; only a comparatively small part of the population was based on the fact that they were getting better treatment than they ever gotten before; that their life and property were more secure than they had much more consideration shown them; that they were not arbitrarily led off in droves to form part of a revolution against the Government. They had rights, and their rights were respected; they were given a chance to enjoy the benefits of their own government which they had never had before.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the general attitude of the Haitians toward the United States and the military occupation at the end of the year 1917?

Gen. COLE. Fine. They used to kneel down by their altars and thank God that we were there. I have told about the attitude of Butler and I, as well as the cabinet, going up the mountain to comfort the people.

Mr. ANGELL. You remember the report which you made to the Navy, in an official letter dated September 23, 1920, regarding the peaceful conditions in Haiti at the time you relieved General Butler in November, 1916, you went on to say: "I will venture to say that the situation in Haiti (that is, while you were in command) "life and property were as secure as in the United States, if not more secure."

Gen. COLE. Yes. You take the little State of Georgia, where there were murders, or more killings in a day, or in an average of a week, than there were in a month in the Republic of Haiti at the time you mentioned Georgia because I read the Savannah News and the Savannah Daily on American civilization.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they ever have to use the marines in the mails? [Laughter.]

Gen. COLE. No. But in order to prevent rifling of the mails, a system whereby a gendarmerie noncommissioned officer was assigned to the post office and seal sacks of mail and deliver those to the other part of the Republic, getting the receipts therefor. The system of having gendarmerie messengers responsible for the delivery of the mail. And we shortened the delivery of the mail very materially. We made time mail that was intrusted to the charge of the gendarmerie, and it invariably.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell us briefly, General, what you thought of Dr. Heraux, the pro-American leader in the assembly?

Gen. COLE. Well, I gave you my reasons for the support of Dr. Heraux acting for the President in regard to getting together people in his cabinet, I invariably made the statement that it was Dr. Heraux to remain as a member of the cabinet, giving me the impression that is about the extent of my discussions in regard to the cabinet. Many of them, but they were along that same line. Dr. Heraux, a Haitian who had consistently endeavored to aid us in the formation of a national government in Haiti, and he was the one Haitian who was in touch with the financial investigation and revision of the system of the government going on. The President, without any question, wanted Dr. Heraux. As a matter of fact, I felt quite certain at the time that against Dr. Heraux was traceable directly to the root of the excellency.

We felt that in order to carry out our work in Haiti we needed the cooperation of Haitians; unless we had the cooperation of the Haitians, there be no Haitians to occupy Government positions of Haiti. We felt that we hoped they would get from an honest administration. We had calmly thrown Dr. Heraux aside, because he was a firm supporter of the United States, desiring to improve the country. We never would have been able to get anybody to stand up for him. We would have said: "You use him, and when it seems he is no longer for our own purposes you cast him aside." And I would not do it.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the treaty of September, 1915, extending the period of 10 years upon the request of the United States?

Gen. COLE. Upon the request of Haiti, but presumably a treaty between the representatives. The United States had bound the Haitians by convention to do certain things. Among other things, was to maintain the finances; the procurement of a loan.

United States, or the fiscal agent nominated by the United States adviser, had, I think, without any question, tried to get a loan on the terms of the old convention. It was absolutely essential that a loan be procured if the work was to be initiated that we wanted to do and the country built up. And the United States, I believe, Haitian Government that such loan could not be obtained from the interests of the United States under the 10-year tenure in Haiti;
 the Government then took up the question of asking the extension and it was passed by a divided cabinet.

The request, then, came from the Haitian Government, rather than the United States Government, in the first instance?

The official request came from the Haitian Government. Now, was it not the United States or the Haitian Government first started the work, because I had nothing to do with that particular feature, it was handled between the representatives of the State Department and the secretary of state for foreign affairs of Haiti.

Do you know the period from which the treaty was extended for 10 years?

Nineteen hundred and seventeen. The school system and every thing we wanted to get built up in Haiti required financing, and to do that we had to do we had to have the funds, and we could not get them on the then existing conditions. In my opinion, if the Haitians had not actually aided us as we were trying to aid them, the funds could not have been obtained long ago, and the affairs of Haiti could have been in a better state than they are to-day. And I lay the blame, to a large extent, on the Haitian people's or the Haitian Government's, or the country's inability to do anything that seemed to aid in this particular

You say the funds might have been obtained if it had not been for the intervention. What do you mean by saying the funds might have been obtained if you refer to a loan?

Yes. I think that if the Haitian Government, its representatives, the assembly, and so on, had acted as honestly toward us as we were toward them, or as fairly as we were trying to act toward them, they could have obtained a great deal better for themselves; they would have retained the United States and they would have caused, through showing that they would cooperate with the United States, such an attitude as would have enabled the Government at home to put over a loan to the Republic of Haiti on better terms, and to give it sufficient funds to enable the work that was to be started, at least.

And you feel that the fact that no loan was made is due in large measure to the financial conditions in Haiti?

I think it was absolutely due to that. If, for instance, Haiti at that time had cooperated with us; if they had displayed a desire to cooperate, that in my own mind but that in 1916, or the spring of 1917 at that time, a Haitian loan could have been floated in the United States. But they had no funds just simply would not advance funds, on the lack of funds to what was going to be done in the Republic of Haiti. Then, because of the war financing; loans to countries who were to become enemies. But largely, the thing is due to the attitude of the Haitian

Speaking of the United States interests in Haiti, you referred to the fact that the French had 150,000,000 francs—

(interposing). In round numbers.

Yes; invested in Haiti. That was largely the sum invested in the foreign loan, was it not?

Yes.
 And on that loan the interest had been paid regularly during the time up to the time of the intervention, had it not.

Up to the time of the intervention.

And for five years following the intervention the interest was paid?

I am not able to answer as to five years. I can say it was not paid for five years and a half. But as an explanation, I think that you will understand, after it is investigated, that the payments of the interest would not have been made by Haiti any longer. I think that she had reached the limit of her borrowing capacity.

I was very anxious to have the finances of the country very particularly anxious to have the internal debt, particularly by the people of Haiti, put in the course of settlement at once therefrom could be paid. These bonds had been taken frequently forcibly, by the middle and upper middle class by some politicians as provision for their families when that if those bonds could be settled, or if the interest on them was paid, it would relieve a very pressing necessity. Because those bonds were generally the people that we were unable to help the countryman, the farmer, and so on; we could not. But with the war going on, with steamers not running, to secure, the commercial class, the city dweller who was not saved in one way or another before—we had no particular financial benefit to those people.

Now, I said and reported that if the interest on these bonds we were at least going to get away from the antagonism among the people; and that that antagonism and animosity must go away, we were unable to get their interest with which to purchase them. I wanted that paid, and I wanted it paid badly, because I wanted to help those people; and I believe that if we had gone ahead and paid the interest to pay the interest on the internal loans in particular, it would have given us a great many more friends. We had, and among a class of people who were able to influence the Government.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the interest paid on the so-called internal loans the first two and one-half years of occupation?

Gen. COLE. No; it was not paid at all.

Mr. ANGELL. The question as to whether or not interest on these bonds was paid depended ultimately on Washington?

Gen. COLE. Possibly. There was the financial adviser, Mr. Cole, with those things; but I observed those things only as they came before me, which was to build up a Government in Haiti to work themselves.

Mr. ANGELL. You made an investigation and report?

Gen. COLE. I did, a number of times.

Mr. ANGELL. You made reports to Admiral Knapp and to the Government?

Gen. COLE. Yes; I think that was in a long report that I made.

Mr. ANGELL. You said a moment ago that in your opinion the Government was unable to continue to pay the interest on the foreign loans based upon the feeling by you that the national funds were not sufficient to meet these obligations.

Gen. COLE. Yes; for, as I understand it, the national funds disappeared, interest on the loans would become due with time, there was nothing on hand or in sight sufficient to pay that interest.

Mr. ANGELL. After our intervention in July, 1915, and the restoration of the customs by us, were there, to your knowledge, funds that actually would have been sufficient to meet the foreign-loan obligations?

Gen. COLE. I really do not know, but I rather doubt it.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you mean when you say you doubt it that the funds plus above and beyond the expenditures actually made for constabulary, road building, etc., would have been insufficient?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Or that the total receipts before any such expenditures would have been insufficient?

Gen. COLE. I do not know whether or not the total receipts were sufficient to pay the interest to be paid. I presume they would, but government was reestablished; much starvation had to be warded off; the expenses of the government had to be met. And as the Haitian Government upon his stipend for his daily bread, had not been paid for months, it was necessary to provide these people with some means of existing of meeting their obligations and of reestablishing the Government. I think those are the things that must have been considered in place ahead of the payment of the interest on the loan.

Mr. ANGELL. You had no hand yourself in the determination as to whether or not to pay the interest on the loan?

Gen. COLE. I had nothing to do with it at any time.

do you think that the declaration of war on Germany by Haiti in 1915 would have been beneficial to Haiti?

I think it would have been very beneficial to Haiti. It would have saved her in her expenditures; and it would have brought about, I think, in the United States—that is, in the Government at Washington—Haiti was willing to work with us. They were informed that of calling upon them for assistance. All the arguments that I heard of Haiti entering the war with the President and members of Congress were based on what, in my mind, were the best interests of the United States; so far as the United States was concerned, we did not need it; it would have been much more expensive to arm her people themselves, and we would not have made good soldiers out of them. Absolutely given, I repeat, with the idea that it was to improve in the Republic of Haiti, and incidentally it would have improved our relationship with Haiti.

When you say it would have improved the conditions in Haiti, the virtue of the—(interposing). I believe that they would have gotten their loan; it had something to do with it.

That it would have established a psychological rapprochement with the United States?

Rapprochement, yes; but they just could not do it.

At the very beginning of your testimony the other day, in giving your tour of duty in Haiti, you said that you left there late in 1917 to Washington, where you had conferences at the State Department for the new constitution. With whom did you hold such conferences? You tell us briefly about that?

Stabler, as I remember it.

Mr. Stabler was chief of the Latin-American Division of the State Department?

Yes, sir. My interviews with him were brief and far apart. I left in December, and the business was finished up by the end of the year. I thought that it would have been finished up long before. As I say, was probably a small part of the large whole that was concerned.

Were your interviews at the State Department with Mr. Stabler with other officials?

With other officials. I think there was a Mr. Glen Stewart; there were others there most of the time. I had interviews alone with him.

Did you acquaint the State Department through these gentlemen with the general state of affairs in Haiti?

As much as was necessary. I think the State Department had a pretty fair idea of the conditions there.

Did you have a pretty fair idea of the conditions there?

Yes, and of what was needed and what the occupation had been doing.

Do you know who drafted or was in the main responsible for the changes desired by the United States in the then existing constitution?

I had nothing to do with the projects of the constitution until after 1917, and I presumed the questions as to what changes had been discussed between representatives of the State Department in the United States and the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Haitian Government.

Of those preliminary discussions and projects you have no personal knowledge.

I know that there was correspondence; that the correspondence went to the Department of Foreign Affairs of the Haitian Government—I have always felt with an idea of sending the correspondence direct to the bureau of the State Department without comment, or with other than little comment.

What was the act which you referred to the other day as a

Gen. COLE. I do not know that that act on the part of his cabinet, really had any actual effect on what took place that the members of the National Assembly were so antagonistic in every way, shape, and form, reasonable or unreasonable, were any reasons for it—that they would not have acceded to the request of the United States Government in regard to the constitution, although, through the convention, such changes had been suggested as contemplated, as necessary, and as agreed to by the Haitian nation.

Mr. ANGELL. Agreed to in so far as they were implied in the fact of the execution of the convention of 1915?

You referred to different articles which the United States modified in the old constitution, such as the land-holding articles which you named. Is it your understanding of the suggested changes initiated with the United States and the Haitian Government?

Gen. COLE. I can not say. It was probably as the result of the discussions between the two departments of state, or discussions between the United States and the Haitian Government, but I have no doubt that the Council of State drew up the projet de constitution. That was the preliminary discussions. After the assembly had through the constitution recommended by the Council of State and prepared which they were trying to put into effect, they were dissolved and the Council of State prepared another project.

And my first real connection with the constitution was from immediately after the dissolution of the National Assembly. The President asked me to come to the palace and discuss the question of a constitution which would meet the object of the United States to the ones that had already been prepared. I made full report to our Government, and that I could not do it in a friendly way with him in discussing the matter; and I did not want to bind myself or the Government in any way without reference to this sort to the United States. And we had considerable discussion and made certain suggestions.

The thing, with my suggestions, as I remember it, did not come as a matter of fact, I think I took them there; became a matter between the President direct and the legation, and cut out the State for the time being. I think that I was simply trying to give each instance which stood a reasonably good chance of meeting the needs of everybody concerned.

There was after that, to my knowledge, considerable discussion in the department sent back a project of constitution; and the chargé and myself thought we probably were better qualified to understand the needs of Haiti than anyone else; and we decided to go forward and to take everything bearing on the constitution that we could get, and consider it from every point of view, and possibly find a constitution which we hoped would be a satisfactory one and at the same time conserve the interests of the Republic. I spent, as I remember it, some three weeks on it. We reached Haiti with various things—

Mr. ANGELL (interposing). This was in the fall of 1917?

Gen. COLE. This was in the fall of 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. After the dissolution of the assembly?

Gen. COLE. After the dissolution of the assembly; some time in November. We felt that there were certain things which Haiti had a right to feel disquiet, and we tried to fix it so that the Haitians would be safeguarded just as much as it was possible to be safeguarded.

Mr. ANGELL. In what particular did you feel that the Haitians ought to feel disquiet?

Gen. COLE. I felt that there was in Haiti the idea that they ought to be given the right to own land. That was one thing.

Mr. ANGELL. Was that idea widespread and intensely felt?

Gen. COLE. I do not think that it was widespread or felt by all among the political classes, and to a certain extent among the people. The better they were informed, of course, the more they felt it. And I really believe that they had an honest fear interposing). Economic exploitation?

Economic exploitation, yes; that is a very good term for it. I have a real, honest fear: and we tried our best to give at least that fear could not materialize.

In what other particulars, if any, did the Haitians feel dis-

I think this is about the only one that they really had disquiet was the question of so-called diplomatic intervention. In other words, their solutely prohibited any such diplomatic representation or and I think that that was one of the things that they had in

Was that provision finally done away with in the new consti- member?

That provision was done away with, yes. Our Government con- foreigner doing business in Haiti should have the same legal as accorded a Haitian. A Haitian comes to the United States same legal protection that our people have. In addition, he ion due to diplomatic representations, which would without made. And you can not expect the country of Haiti to be funds and without security for property. And I know per- I would not put a cent, if I had a million dollars, into Haiti ions that existed there.

What instructions did you get, and from whom, and what was ate, so far as you can remember, approving the adoption adverse to the wishes of the United States? Were those instructions, in other words, that came from the Navy Department?

Gen. COLE. The Navy Department. I read them all into

Mr. ANGELL. All right, if those instructions are in the report, us, in your direct testimony, the date of your cable showing short of dissolution by force would prevent the adoption of adverse to what was desired by the United States?

Gen. COLE. I think so, but I can very easily give it to you. That was the 15th of June.

Mr. ANGELL. June 15, 1917?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you, as brigade commander of the United States in Haiti at that time, prepared for the eventuality of the military government for the then Haitian Government?

Gen. COLE. No, and yes. I had stated in the first report that I had made that I believed the results desired could be accomplished through a military government, and more economically and than in any other way. I had given four different methods of opinion, could be followed by the United States Government.

Mr. ANGELL. In those suggestions of the method of accomplishing the United States, did you specifically recommend the out-and-out military government for the Haitian Government?

Gen. COLE. I stated that, in my opinion, that was decided to do. We could not get cooperation from them; the military off of them they were off doing something that was a waste of time, or a grain of sand or two in the bearings.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make actual preparations for a military government for the Haitian Government?

Gen. COLE. No; not at all. I had been told by members of the military that they thought that the only way in which the matter was settled out in Haiti was through the exercise of the military. I believed it myself.

Mr. ANGELL. General. I do not want to put to you a question of its legal and constitutional implications seems unfair. In my familiarity with conditions in Haiti, I would like to ask you to your understanding of the constitution of Haiti, that the dissolution in 1917 was constitutional or was provided for.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman—Mr. Angell is talking about it—that perhaps it would be just as well not to ask those questions of Haitian constitutional law here—merely to get the understanding of that law on which he was acting at the time.

Senator ODDIE. Yes; I approve of that point. I think that is all.

Mr. ANGELL. I think it is an intricate question of constitutional law. The practical question is, we have this constitution here, but it consists of some two hundred and odd articles. Now, if you are not familiar with it to go through with it and pick out the parts that bears or does not bear on a particular question is a difficult task.

Gen. COLE. I can do it, but it will take some time, because I am not where a thing is stuck in that constitution.

Mr. HOWE. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, however, that the question asked by Mr. Angell is one of some importance and interest.

Senator ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. But we are starting down to Haiti at the end of our time is very limited. I know that Gen. Cole has a mass of documents of which may be of importance—I mean documents and cables that he mentioned this morning. The committee is going to take up its return from Haiti, as I understand it. Gen. Cole was there during a most important period. And it may very well be that we will need to have the general's knowledge put at its disposal by having him here as a witness, or by having him give the benefit of this collection of memoranda and papers of his. It is taken up on our return on account of the shortness of our time.

Senator ODDIE. Yes; I agree with you about that.

Mr. HOWE. And I believe that an arrangement can be made by which we can inform ourselves more at leisure as to what we got there, and if necessary we can have him as a witness and let him furnish us with copies of these papers for our information.

Yes.

would like to make that statement at this time, because I think fortunate to have the impression go out that the committee was with Gen. Cole's testimony.

Yes. I think unquestionably we must have it understood that we have time to give us the material facts, and that Capt. Angell on these matters, so that none of us will be unduly hurried. To the best of my knowledge and belief I am entirely at the disposition of the committee, and I have nothing to hide that I know of.

When would you make an answer to that question which I put to you the question which started this last discussion, the answer that you intended to answer the question specifically at this time, or words ; that will serve my purpose very well. I can add to it if it is necessary.

You said in connection with martial law, General, if my recollection is that it is and will be necessary in Haiti so long as American troops are there. Why do you think it is and will be necessary?

From the attitude of the Haitian politicians and from the condition of the judiciary.

Do you think that the raising of martial law while American troops are here would result in an outbreak of crime, or rather in what the Haitians might regard as undue liberties or excesses on the part of the troops?

We have never worried much about the press—never did myself while I was here. I could not tolerate the things that appeared in the press subsequently there—absolutely. But I had no particular trouble with the press. I think they would slop over a bit and maybe be cautioned to be

What, then, is your belief, is the actual practical function of martial law in Haiti?

A military force occupying another country has got to have a discipline. It can not get along without it, particularly under the conditions here. It is a venal judiciary system, and one that is absolutely, in my opinion, no white man can get justice before a Haitian court, in my Under martial law, then, in Haiti enables a white man to obtain justice before the military or military provost courts?

Martial law in Haiti is more of a moral force than it is a physical force. It is a physical force standing back of the shadow of the the moral force being exerted—

(interposing). Through the belief that, in case of necessity, the moral force would be exercised.

To the end that the white man may obtain justice in Haitian courts?

We have never interfered in the Haitian courts to amount to anything. We have prevented, on one or two occasions, through the power of the Haitian courts from putting into effect judgments against the institutions were acting as agents of the occupying forces. For example, the bank case?

The bank case. But if martial law were lifted. Tom, Dick, or Harry could go out and shoot at a white man, or at a member of the occupation, or a member of the occupation took the law into his own hands there would be no punishment for the Haitian. In other words, I believe that martial law is necessary, under the conditions existing in Haiti, to enable peace to be maintained throughout that country.

Martial law operates, then, as a protection to the white man?

I believe that it operates as a protection to the white man and the black man. The black man knows that, under the pains and penalties of martial law, if he may invoke, he is being protected from his own people, in his own country. It is just as important for the black man as it is for the white man. The moral force which makes people behave themselves, a blessed thing, is the Haitian law. If there were no martial law, it would be a man that wanted to start in and raise trouble, to do so, and nothing for us to do but to go after them with military force. We could not deal with them under martial law, unless we put it back; and in the meantime, if we had raised it, some of our people might be shot and killed, and white people killed. I do not think that it is really an important duty to consider eventualities and possibilities, whenever you take a step, and particularly when you take any step to destroy a thing that has been in existence. And if you had your martial law raised for 24 hours, you would really have no right to act or force, even if it was 24 hours later, on anything that had been in existence.

Mr. ANGELL. Except as to offenses by the military.

Gen. COLE. Offenses by the military are not tried by the military.

Mr. ANGELL. By those—you mean the provost courts?

Gen. COLE. Yes; the provost courts. Our own courts function along, and would function.

Mr. HOWE. The military is taken care of by the military.

Gen. COLE. The military is taken care of by the military. The provost courts are different, though they are military courts. The two cases of murder or killing by our men, in cases of crime; that is, in one case a man got drunk in Port au Prince, and killed somebody; I had him tried and charged with court-martial, not by a provost court.

Mr. ANGELL. Killed by a Haitian?

Gen. COLE. No; he killed a Haitian.

Mr. ANGELL. I mean the man that got drunk?

Gen. COLE. The man that got drunk was a sergeant of the military, and he was tried by court-martial and got 10 years at hard labor.

Mr. HOWE. Before a general court-martial?

Gen. COLE. Yes. Another case came up at Cape Haitien, and he was tried by general court-martial.

Mr. ANGELL. And not by the provost court?

Gen. COLE. Not by the provost court. Now, a man was killed. If I had gotten that man, he would probably have been tried by the provost court, but because it was cold-blooded murder, the influence of liquor, or anything of the sort, but just a cold-blooded murder, the man that killed Lieut. McNab would have been tried by a general court-martial, and not by a naval general court.

Mr. HOWE. Let me straighten that out: The members of the military are always subject to the military courts?

Gen. COLE. Are always subject to the military courts.

Mr. HOWE. But it takes the operation of martial law to bring the population to a military court?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. That is, under the control of our forces?

Gen. COLE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And they are subject to the jurisdiction of the military tribunals, the provost courts?

Gen. COLE. Yes; and the military commission.

Mr. HOWE. And the military commission, for more serious offenses?

Gen. COLE. All offenses between members of the military are tried before the naval or military court, pure and simple.

Mr. HOWE. That is so in this country?

Gen. COLE. That is true everywhere; wherever the force is used. It is the right to use the military or naval courts. Now, when you are in the law in the United States, a civilian would be tried by the civil courts, a military man would be tried in the military courts or the provost courts, depending on which had taken jurisdiction first. Formerly the provost courts were the courts for a man in the military service who had committed an offense. The law was amenable to trial not only by the military courts, but by the provost courts as well; and he might get one sentence by the military courts and have to take another trial by the civil courts in the country, where the crimes are between members of the military. In the provost courts, there is the provost court-martial, the military commission, and under certain conditions the provost court-martial can exercise jurisdiction over people who are civilians.

Mr. HOWE. Who are exclusively civilians?

Gen. COLE. Yes; it does not necessarily limit its authority to civilians in conflict with the military forces; they may be in conflict with the military commission or with the promulgated decrees of the military.

ank you; that is all.

general, would you care to make any comment upon the degree of the United States, particularly through its civilian treaty obligations assumed by the United States under the convention

II, I have made a considerable number of comments already in which I think that the financial situation could have been bettered; it has been done, possibly, than has been done. But I also believe I have to go back to the fact that there were always difficulties, put in the way of the financial adviser in carrying out his work, in endeavoring to get the finances straightened out, the cooperation of the Haitians, and of the legislative branch of the government.

Referring particularly to article I of this convention of 1915, from your understanding of the facts, that the United States Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of the mineral and commercial resources?

Yes, without any question, done a great deal; it has not done what it could have done had there been sufficient funds available. As a country which was on the verge of starvation in 1915, for the people were absolutely undernourished, inside of two years, or two and a half, had been developed into a country where the country people were as well off as they had ever been before, and were not only producing enough to support themselves but were exporting food. I say it did a good deal to help the country. It did not do all it might have done had funds been available. I say this, that without funds—and considering that it was a mistake to create an engineering organization which would require for overhead practically all of the funds that could be used—consequently that funds that had been theretofore actually available for other conditions were going to get up here (in "overhead").

Rejection.

To the overhead?

Yes, the engineers going in at that time. I wanted to use the engineers to put them in a position where they could handle the work themselves, and where they could have gotten something done. But they would not have their organization. Each man naturally, I suppose, is in his own position; he fights for his own position. And, under the circumstances, they are independent branches, independent of the military, and they are independent. It did not matter to me whether they were doing anything else. What I wanted was to get the results; and they would get the results—and they did not. And they will be available and they get a different system. I do not know how they depend on in the way of Haitian assistance under the present

Do you believe that the unification of the responsibility and the American administration, civil and military, in Haiti would better accomplish the United States in the island?

No. I think there is no question but what that is true. I would like to see the Americans in positions where they could be responsible for what they are doing, and I would put with them just as many Haitians as have the same attitude and by their work that they were the kind of men for that particular kind of work. In other words, I would start in with American forces as were necessary to direct the work, supplemented by Haitian forces as could be used to perform such details as could be done by them; and I would gradually increase the number of Haitians and gradually reduce the number of Americans employed.

Do you think the responsibility and direction of the Americans in all the different branches, military and civil, such as military command, financial adviser, receiver general of customs, engineer, and the like, would be against the effectiveness of the aid which the United States has rendered Haiti?

I think so. Now, I do not know what has been done in Haiti in the years beyond casual hearsay.

You have not been back to the island since 1917?

I have not been back to the island since the end of 1917. But I have been back to the island—just before leaving—over the sanitary engineering, or at least when my control over them was reduced, the efficiency began to go straight down; and the force had been put into actual work in improving condition of part of them went up here—considerable number of engineers.

Mr. HOWE. Went up to overhead?

Gen. COLE. Went up to overhead. They brought down things here, and there was not anything to be done with them; to go out into the country with them. I wanted the chief engineer and make a comprehensive survey in the country.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say "the chief engineer," to whom?

Gen. COLE. I am referring to the civil engineer, who was with me. I fought it just as hard as I could.

Mr. ANGELL. As a matter of fact, the civil engineer and the military engineer were not responsible to the chief of the military occupation.

Gen. COLE. They were only responsible to the military commander. That I was the senior officer on the spot, and they had to go up to a certain point. But instead of my having the final say in the details of their work, in regard to the policy, etc., that was taken out, that was practically taken away from me. That was so far as their not being under my control is concerned, I was not in control; but I had lost my power of saying: "This is what must be done" or "this is what must be done." I could advise them, but I could not control them or not.

Mr. ANGELL. The determination of questions was not under your control.

Gen. COLE. It had passed from my control.

Mr. ANGELL. I want to read article 5 of the convention of 1900.

"All sums collected and received by the general receiver shall be first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the assistants, and employees, and expenses of the receiver; second, to the salary and expenses of the financial adviser, which salaries and expenses shall be paid by previous agreement; third, to the interest and sinking fund of the Republic of Haiti; and, fourth, to the maintenance of the public works referred to in Article X, and then the remainder shall be set apart for the purposes of current expenses.

"In making these applications the general receiver will submit monthly and expenses as they arise, and at the end of each calendar month, will set aside in a separate fund the quantities of receipts of the previous month."

I want to ask you whether it is your belief that the first article of the convention, which I have just read, giving the order of the disbursement of the general receiver, has been carried out?

Gen. COLE. I will say that that is a question that should be asked of the people who have to do with it, because I did not know the answer. I had nothing to do with that at all, absolutely nothing to do with to make it undesirable for me to do it or not.

Mr. ANGELL. I think we understand that you had no direct control over the disbursement of money.

Gen. COLE. Absolutely nothing in regard to that particular question. I had no direction for a long time in regard to the expenditure of the military occupation of Haiti; that is, which were allotted to the Government of Haiti; that is, which were for the military occupation of Haiti; all of that I allotted. There was a certain sum which I could employ for the maintenance of the Republic of Haiti; and reports were coming in all the time of things that were needed, and I made up every month a budget of funds for different purposes, roads, repair of hospitals, or whatever it might be; and that budget, signed by me, was sent to the financial adviser and he paid that. Now, that sum was not a sum for the military occupation, simply a sum which I was authorized to expend, and I never had anything to do with it.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, upon the understanding that you had that the disbursement of funds, except such as were specifically authorized in the manner you have just described, is it your understanding that the treaty was carried out?

Gen. COLE. Well, I would have to make my answer to that question in my mind whether it has been carried out, but I cannot say for my own personal knowledge.

Mr. ANGELL. All right; that is all.

Gen. COLE. Yes, absolutely; and after we had been four years and a half.

Mr. HOWE. I think that clears that up, Mr. Chairman.

Senator ODDIE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Now, as to the interest on these different loans, external and internal, do you know whether Haiti could have obtained her foreign loans and maintained the necessary current government at the time of our occupation?

Gen. COLE. I do not believe so. I do not know from a personal knowledge. I do not believe so. She could not have paid, in my opinion, her loans at any time subsequent to the 30th of June, 1917.

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask you this question for the record: At the time the treasury was practically empty at the time of our occupation, do you count for the fact that up to that time Haiti had met her foreign loans?

Gen. COLE. I understood that it had been through bonds or forced loans from its own people.

Mr. HOWE. Which practices were not continued during our occupation?

Gen. COLE. Which practices were absolutely discontinued?

Mr. HOWE. Do you know why no interest was paid during the last half years with which you were familiar?

Gen. COLE. I think they were trying to get the thing done. An agreement reached between the parties, trying to find a way to actually represented, and trying to get a loan to refund the principal. It was not my business; but that was my understanding of it.

Mr. HOWE. I understand. But was it your recommendation that interest on the internal loan should be paid by funds furnished by the United States?

Gen. COLE. I did not recommend how it should be done. I did not recommend the political effect, or the social effect, that the nonpayment of interest would have, and why, in my opinion, the people who were in charge of the finances should, as soon as possible, make some arrangement by which these things could be paid.

Mr. HOWE. If you had been in charge of those matters, would you have had been money enough, then you would have done it; but why it was not done?

Gen. COLE. That I can not say, because no man in my position could say what would be done until he knew all the facts surrounding that thing.

Now, I picked out, as a person who was not materially interested, I picked out a certain salient point which could be improved. If certain action was taken, would cause good results to follow in the long place than that particular point. But I can not say that I was in charge of that particular thing could have done what appeared to be the thing to do; for instance, I could not say that if they had paid the interest, would not have been such a howl from the other creditors that they would not have paid, that it would not have been wise to do that. It would have been a good will of one at the expense of the antagonism of many.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see any rise in the revenues, and any material internal improvements on which you expended the allotment?

Gen. COLE. Oh, yes; materially. The exports for a time were very large. And they were just as large as the transportation up to the time I left, though at one time the bottom dropped out of the wood market.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see any connection between the change in the constitution and the possibility of commercial development and rehabilitation?

Gen. COLE. The changes, as I have said, were, in my opinion, necessary; nobody is going to go into a country like Haiti and change the constitution which says that he shall not have even the same that he must have a safeguard which is whatever they may and never equal to that of their own citizens. He is not can not get land; the land tenure is uncertain. The courts the man who went in there and put a sugar mill on land leased the Lord only knows whether he would ever be in a position anything out of it. All the provisions in the proposed constitution of my knowledge, were as much to the interest of Haiti as to the United States and were such that the terms of the convention went out. I believe those terms were in such shape that proper given to the Republic of Haiti and to its people. I have spoken of certain difficulties put in the way of improving the Haitians, and to distinct opposition to changes in this constitution of the assembly. It must follow, then, that those who regarded difficult did not look on them in the same way as you do, Haiti?

I am not going to give them that much credit, because I think yes, they were so obsessed with the idea that if they could get out they could get back to their old system of graft, and their handling all the Government funds between the pockets of those who went to the Government and their own pockets, that they would do rid of us, and that they lost all sense of proportion in that questionably; there is no question about it at all; it is unquestionable I had.

Let me ask you this: Do you think you understood better than the distinction between these steps proposed by the United States and those of their country?

I think probably I did, though I also believe that many of them were of the things that we asked them were for the best interests; but they did not think they were for the best interests of their own individual and political life.

And this: In Haiti politics was a profession—almost a professional politician was largely a class by itself; people came into it out of it; but it was a class which had its own morals, its own public morals. Its public morals were absolutely different from some people who were all right. Legitime, I believe, was he was a politician; he had had the executive power; he had himself, and would not enrich himself at the expense of the country—politics was a very fine man. And there were some others who were political class. But, generally, the class of political parasite I cannot describe them.

Now, do you think the peasant—the country people, by and large—of the effect of these proposed changes?

I do not think so. The peasant was fed up, I believe, with the fact that the Americans were trying to enslave them and trying to take their lands, and that if the changes were made, Americans would take their lands. But, as a matter of fact, we never believed the people were against us in any way, after, I will say, the midway, as to martial law, on cross-examination you used some examples—remember it, to the general effect that martial law there is necessary to the white man?

These are private papers, kept for my own personal gratification in case any such question as this ever did come up.

But my understanding is that headquarters of the Marine Corps to make available everything that I have. Is that true, Maj.

Yes; but with regard to most of these papers that Gen. Cole has the originals are either in the Navy Department records, or the headquarters records; and Gen. Lejeune and the Secretary of War have already stated that everything in those records is available; and there are tons of such material. I merely want to make sure that the committee will know that all these papers and many more are available if the committee desire them. But the general feeling is that he has been instructed to give the committee everything with reference to books and papers.

These papers there are generally arranged in chronological order; they are not, but generally they are. And in addition to that, I have certain things there that headquarters do not have.

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to the taking of the roll by the chairman.

OF MAJ. JESSE F. DYER, UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS, HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Chairman, will you give your name, rank, and present station,

Jesse F. Dyer, major, United States Marine Corps, attached to headquarters, Marine Corps, Washington.

Chairman, the purpose of calling Maj. Dyer as a witness is to get the committee an idea as to the scope and methods of the investigation conducted by him as judge advocate for the so-called Mayo court inquiry.

By the record of the Mayo court of inquiry here that the first inquiry was held on October 19, 1920. You had been appointed judge advocate of the inquiry, had you not?

Yes. Some of the meetings of the court were in this country, and

Maj. DYER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. And there is already in the record the preliminary inquiry. I gather from reading the proceedings of the court that the idea, as judge advocate, that the investigation and duties prescribed in the precept?

Maj. DYER. That is correct. That was not only my idea, but the authority of inquiry has to act, the precept.

Mr. HOWE. Therefore within the authority of the precept, judge advocate, was it not, to assist the court to bring in the materials for an investigation?

Maj. DYER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Now, may I, for the sake of brevity, ask you to go to this extent: The record shows that some investigation was made of the cases in Haiti which involved the names of Lieut. Lang, Lieut. Doras Williams, and an officer named [unclear], one whose name was mentioned by the witness [unclear]. I am correct in saying that the cases where these officers were in testimony, were the only specific cases which you came upon in your investigation. Am I correct in that, that these are all the cases of Haitians that came within the scope of the precept?

Maj. DYER. No; there were a number of other cases mentioned otherwise, which I attempted to run down. In the case of [unclear] accused of offenses and tried by court-martial, I got the record from the Advocate General's office and introduced them in evidence in my inquiry. In numerous other cases I spent considerable time in getting some testimony to present to the court, but was unable to do so.

Mr. HOWE. The record itself speaks of the cases of [unclear] and others whose names I mentioned, and of these court-martials. I stand from your last answer that there were a number of cases that came to you in the course of the investigation, no mention in the record, and that you undertook to run those down, so that you could get the testimony?

Maj. DYER. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. What I want you to do now, Major, is to tell me, in such investigations which you were unable to run down, what cases they involved, to what extent there was correspondence with the court, and to what extent you traveled around the country.

Maj. DYER. While I was in Haiti I interviewed scores of people who related what they had heard. I corresponded with scores of people who traveled up into the interior somewhat to try to run to the bottom of the rumors which I had heard. I found a number of people who, from their personal knowledge of alleged misconduct, but many of them had already been tried by general court-martial; or, I found a number of places where the witnesses related that the interpretation could be construed as offenses, since they related acts, for instance, the case of Haitians who had been arrested, and in one particular I recall there were five or six cases where they told me, or who wrote to me, about such a killing, and where they themselves that they had no charges to bring of illegal acts, but to tell about the case as they knew it. In most instances where they came to me or who came to see me had no personal knowledge of the case, but they talked. I tried to get them to give me the names of the persons as to run the thing back to the original relator, but they gave me their information from general rumor, or that the thing was true. In a few cases I was given the names of people from whom I got the stories, and on communication with those people I found that they were based upon hearsay. Of course, I did not bring people in on hearsay, but wherever any person claimed to have personal knowledge of any acts that could be construed as coming within the precept, I brought such a person before the court as a witness, and the court could judge and weigh the testimony, which I never did.

Mr. HOWE. I want to ask you also if you traced all such cases as far as possible, so that you could determine whether you could get the testimony, or could speak of his own knowledge or not?

Maj. DYER. I did the best I could in that respect, and I was convinced that I could get no further testimony to add to the record in relation to the matters mentioned in the precept.

y, as to these cases of Brokaw, Lavoie, Lang, Williams and at the case of Rogoski you had some reports on them as the investigation, did you not?

; there were possible witnesses mentioned in those cases.
at efforts did you make to extend the scope of the previous relation to those men?

mentioned as witnesses, and those people were brought before er they could be obtained. In order to make one thing clear, that a court of inquiry is purely a creature of statute, and has nted to it by statute. It is empowered to subpoena witnesses, at did you ascertain as to Lieut. Brokaw?

ut. Brokaw was at the time insane and was not competent to ete an investigation, due to his insanity and to his inability to r explain the circumstances as far as he was concerned.

tee as to whether or not charges had been brought against Wells; and if so, why the charges had been dropped. The retary of the Navy carries with it inclosures in explanation of insanity of Lieut. Brokaw. I offer in evidence the letter of These inclosures will show that one charge was presented against Maj. Wells and that it was withdrawn before trial. Inclosure 1 shows that Maj. Wells was first temporarily released from arrest in order that he not be unduly prejudiced before the court of inquiry "on the charge of neglect of duty in Haiti," while inclosure (G) revoked the court of inquiry in view of the fact "that the exhaustive report of the said court of inquiry fails to contain evidence upon which proceedings could be held in the case of Maj. Wells."

1. In September, 1919, the record of the proceedings of a court-martial at Port au Prince, Haiti, in the cases of Privates John J. McQuilkin, jr., United States Marine Corps, were presented and were found to contain references by counsel to a private Haitian prisoner without trial. The Major General Commandant referred the matter to the brigade commander in Haiti for his consideration with the object of bringing such practice, if it existed, to the attention of all persons found to be guilty of such practice to punishment.

2. On December 9, 1919, the brigade commander, Col. John H. Johnson, United States Marine Corps, forwarded the record of investigation of the assistant adjutant and inspector attached to brigade headquarters. He recommended that the statements of officers and men in the report be obtained. This was accomplished and all papers were received on January 12, 1920, with instructions that the investigation be completed as practicable and the full report, together with recommendations of the brigade commander, submitted to these headquarters.

0, 1920, the brigade commander mailed the complete report, received, being apparently lost in the mail. The fact that it had not been received was not discovered until August last, and on the return last months of Gens. Lejeune and Butler from a tour in Haiti and Santo Domingo that all of the report was at the headquarters.

Enclosed herewith copies of the first report of Maj. Thomas O. Butler, November 3, 1919; of the forwarding letter from the commander, Col. John H. Russell, December 7, 1919; statements taken from Maj. R. Lay, A. A. & I., and submitted by letter of January 12, 1920, to Maj. Gen. Commandant Barnett to Secretary of the Navy Jan- uary 12, 1920, stating that partial investigation had been made and that report submitted to Haiti for completion of investigation and submission of recommendations (original); approval of action reported by Sec- retary in own handwriting on above-mentioned letter (original); report of investigation, February 28, 1920, Lieut. Col. J. S. Hooker in Maj. Turner in conduct of investigation; letter February 28, 1920, brigade commander directing Lieut. Col. R. S. Hooker in Maj. Turner in conduct of investigation; letter February 28, 1920, brigade commander directing Lieut. Col. Hooker to expedite report of investigation, February 28, 1920, Lieut. Col. J. S. Hooker; indorsement, brigade commander, Col. Russell, forwarding report of investigation; résumé of testimony taken from Maj. R. Lay, A. A. & I., and Butler in Haiti, including 12 statements of gendarmes, Bertol, Gendarmerie d'Haiti; and report of investigation made by Maj. R. Lay, A. A. & I., and Butler.

On August 25, 1918, the commandant of the gendarmerie issued an order instituting the system of corvée (enforced labor) on the public roads. By another order, October 18, 1918, to include the Hinche- Maissade districts, which had been interpreted as being outside of the limits of the system. The system was continued in those districts notwithstanding and caused a great deal of unrest and disturbance. The continu- ance of the system was repeatedly denied by Maj. Clarke H. Wells, the com- mandant of the Gendarmerie in the Department of the North, Haiti. Finally the commander personally investigated the matter and found the corvée at Hinche and Maissade.

Alexander S. Williams was chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, and from the evidence available it does not appear that he kept himself suf- ficiently informed of conditions. Moreover, it appears from the statement of Maj. R. Lay, A. A. & I., formerly an enlisted man in the Marine Corps and a lieutenant in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, that Lieut. Col. Williams, on November 1, 1918, advised the commander, that no provost prisoners were wanted; and that any of the prisoners were "Cacos" and actually had no objection to do away with them. These statements, if made, would indicate that the chief of the gendarmerie approved of the unlawful treatment of the prisoners, and such approval would have had a baleful effect in the minds of his subordinates. There appears, however, to be insufficient evidence to bring Lieut. Col. Williams to trial at this time, and it is recom- mended that his case be deferred until after receipt of the record of the court of inquiry now in session.

From the evidence that Maj. Clarke H. Wells had knowledge of the continu- ance of the corvée in the Hinche-Maissade districts during the period from October 1, 1918, to March 31, 1919, in the department under his command, and that he knew that the order of the chief of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, dated October 25, 1918, and October 18, 1918, prohibited corvée; that on or about February 2, 1918, he gave orders over the telephone from Cape Haitien to Major Baker, at that time a private in the Marine Corps and a captain in the Gendarmerie d'Haiti, to "bump off," meaning to kill, prisoners; that on or about February 19, 1919, he gave Capt. George D. Hamilton orders to kill any prisoners; that Hamilton thought to be a caco and not to bring him to prison; and that during the period November 1, 1918, to March 31, 1919, he ordered his juniors to suppress reports of any unfavorable conditions and to maintain the state of peace in the Department of the North, of which he was commander.

In view of the foregoing I recommend that Maj. Clarke H. Wells be brought to trial by general court-martial for the offenses charged, and for such other offenses as may be warranted by the ## PRESENT HISTORY OF CASE.

Diagnosis, dementia precox (217). Origin in the line is not the result of his own misconduct.

Facts are as follows: Patient was admitted to hospital observation as to his mental condition, having been accused of execution of two natives. Hearsay evidence is to the effect that he was a heavy drinker for some time, and his health record shows poisoning by alcohol. Upon admission, he answered some questions in a hesitating manner, but since then he has not answered questions. Patient is not oriented to his surroundings, and keeps his eyes closed all of the time. When aroused by stimulus he will pick at the bed clothes, look under the bed, and make expressions which would indicate to the onlooker that he is having able hallucinations. Patient is unable to care for himself.

Present condition, unfit for service. Probable future duration, indefinite.
Recommendation, that he be transferred to a United States Hospital via the first available Government transportation for further treatment.

Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Did the court of inquiry come to any conclusion in the cases of nd Williams?

Yes, sir. I think you have the record. The court found the alle-them not sustained.

nd as to the officer named Rogoski?

I believe the same findings in his case. As a matter of fact. I find that the court did not find any acts such as set forth in the en established.

ow many individuals do you suppose you interviewed or listened a with this inquiry while you were in Haiti?

At a guess, I should say probably between 250 and 300.

What, if any, steps did you or the court take to let it be known the investigation was on and that you were the proper person to tions or reports?

Shortly after we arrived in Port au Prince I drafted a notice, uctions of the court, to be sent to the local newspapers, announc-of the court and the purpose for which it had come. That notice

The fact of the court's coming was also pretty well known in been a matter of discussion there for some weeks at least.
 holding sessions in Haiti a number of Haitians came to me and people thought they would have to wait until they should be that I might not get in touch with them. I explained to them an erroneous idea, and that not only were they allowed to come nation to the court, but that I would consider it a favor if they would come to me and let me know what they had to investigation. Some of the Haitian newspaper men asked for a statement to that effect, and I told them that they were free to do so, but I would be very glad to have them do so. However, they refrained from publishing that interview with me. What I have stated, word was transmitted through the occupation person who wished to testify to communicate with the judge at court at Port au Prince.

Mr. HOWE. There was no inquiry into the corvee by the Major?

Maj. DYER. Not into the corvee as such, because the corvee is covered by Haitian law, and corvee, which means public work, is under the Haitian Government. The principal connection with the part of any of the forces of the occupation was through the person who had charge of the actual work going on. I looked into the matter, and tried to find out if in connection with the corvee the American forces had committed any of the alleged acts, but could not find that effect to bring before the court. We were not there to question the operation of the Haitian Government. If Haitian officials may have perpetrated upon their own people, in fact, numerous persons came to me offering to testify that illegal acts had been perpetrated upon them by Haitian officials. I had to tell them that that matter was not being investigated by inquiry.

Mr. HOWE. Could you ascertain whether in those cases there was against Haitian officials there was more or less than hearsay?

Maj. DYER. Well, I can only judge from my experience whether practically none of them know the difference between fact and hearsay.

Mr. HOWE. So from what they told you—

Maj. DYER. They did not recognize the difference in the

Mr. HOWE. So from what they told you, you really gain the extent to which Haitian officials abused the law; is that correct?

Maj. DYER. I never made any attempt to form an idea of

Mr. HOWE. Did you at any time discourage any witnesses from coming or from testifying?

Maj. DYER. No; I did not; although I understand I might have discouraged them, based upon an incident which occurred in the judge advocate. I explained to a number of Haitians the purpose of giving me information that as a preliminary to hear even rumors, which I would try to trace down, but to testifying under oath that a witness should confine himself to his knowledge, and that for any man to take the stand and say that something had been committed, that he knew it had been committed, on personal knowledge, when, as a matter of fact, he was not sure, was perjury, and that I wanted them to understand what the courts: that, as far as the court of inquiry was concerned, the rules as all the Federal courts of the United States, and the testimony as to facts or circumstances within the knowledge of the witness himself. I might say that several people who had come to me as witnesses left after that explanation. If that was discouraged, have discouraged some of them.

Mr. HOWE. Is that the only basis you can think of for a discouragement of witnesses to appear?

Maj. DYER. I can not think of anything else, because my attitude was to dispel any such idea, if it existed. If any such idea did exist, on account of the fact that people were scattered all over the country, and widely scattered, communicated with freedom volunteering to testify. They seemed to have no fear. As a matter of fact, people came to me with complaints and carried on in the Haitian courts and wanted our court of inquiry to take dictation. One woman had a suit over a grocery bill, and she wanted to have a hearing on it and adjust it. They seemed to think that the court of inquiry, and had confidence in it. I believe that there were people there who pretended to believe and tried to create not wanted, but I think that was confined to a few people for interest. The people at large, I feel sure, felt confident that before the court, and they did.

What action, if any, do you recollect that the court took in the Wells case?

The court took no action in his case at all. There was no evidence before the court, none which I could find, to show that any of the precept had been committed, with which he could do as was necessary, of course, before you could bring Maj. Wells in, and the act had been committed, and then connect him up with it in the case. There were rumors in regard to him, but we were unable to verify them. In other words, there was no corpus delicti to go on.

Did you, however, investigate such rumors or reports as you did in the Wells case?

I traced them down as far as I could, trying to get something to go on, but was unable to get it.

How long have you been in the Marine Corps, Major?

Fourteen years in the Marine Corps and about a year and a half more than that.

As a matter of curiosity, I would like to ask where you were at the time of the Wells case?

I was in Vera Cruz, sir.

Major, have you the terms of the notice which you caused to be published in regard to the arrival of the court of inquiry in Haiti, and its mission?

Yes; I have not.

Was that notice published in full, as you remember, in the Wells case?

Yes; I know it was. It was translated into French and published in the newspapers. I read it myself.

Was it published anywhere, to your knowledge, except in Port-au-Prince?

Not to my personal knowledge; I do not know.

Were any steps taken, so far as you know, to have it published in Haiti, or give out an official announcement?

I do not know whether there were or not, but the purpose of the court was well known in other places in Haiti, because I had been in various parts of the country, for instance, from up in Cape Haitien, to the south, in several other places.

Was that notice the only public announcement made by the court, concerning the function, purpose, and procedure, method of hearing witnesses, and the like, during its sessions?

Yes; that was the only official notice sent out. That court, the court of inquiry in the United States, did not advertise itself. It was not the Supreme Court of the United States, or any inferior court. They did not give out notices about what their purpose is, or their status, or anything of the kind.

Was any announcement made, in your notice or otherwise, of the place where the court would hold its sessions?

Not in that notice, but it would have been impossible, because we were as we were able to get testimony to bring before it.

Were we to understand, then, that there was no public announcements and places of holding the sessions?

Yes; there was no public announcement. There was no purpose in giving out that I know of. The sessions of the court were open, but if a person wanted to know when he could appear before the court, he would have to find out by himself.

He would have to know where to inquire, to find out when the court was going to sit?

They knew that. It sat in the same place, the barracks, every day. Arrangements were made for the public to have access. I personally gave instructions were given, because I knew there would be charges made for the public, so I know orders were given, and I carried out, that any person who came there to the barracks and inquired of the court was told where the room was and shown how to get in.

get up there and told he could come in, because, as I would be charged made about secret hearings, and all that.

Mr. ANGELL. The sessions were, in fact, then, open to the public?

Maj. DYER. Yes. There were, of course, certain times closed.

Mr. ANGELL. Under the technical rules of procedure of the court?

Maj. DYER. Yes; but not to take testimony.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there any official statement gotten out on its behalf, inviting persons who had complaints to make either to the court or to the judge advocate?

Maj. DYER. No there was no advertisement either there about already. We did not advertise in the newspapers to come or offer them any rewards for coming or any other inducements for them. They were all given them.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did the court hold sessions in Haiti?

Maj. DYER. In the library room in the barracks in Port-au-Prince, as I remember, one or two sessions on board ship, of taking testimony. That was only to consider matters.

Mr. ANGELL. There were no sessions, then, held in any other place besides Port au Prince?

Maj. DYER. No.

Mr. ANGELL. You said you went up into the interior?

Maj. DYER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did you go? How many trips did you make? Give us some idea of the extent of the investigation you made or trips into the interior?

Maj. DYER. I made one trip, going to Hinche and St. Louis. At the time at Hinche, endeavoring to obtain some witnesses because that had been the center of rumors of numerous statements of one of the inhabitants of that town prior to the possible occurrence of a number of outrages. I went there and endeavored to obtain from him the names of a number of persons who also got into communication with Mr. Lang on that trip. I was at Cape Hatien, and the court had originally intended to go there, but in view of the fact that it was impossible to obtain any more people up there other than those who were brought down to testify, I never proceeded there. I was gone on that trip for several days.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you go to Cape Haitien?

Maj. DYER. No; I just said I did not.

Mr. ANGELL. Admiral Knapp made a trip to Cape Haitien. Did he not?

Maj. DYER. Yes; he did.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he go officially or unofficially for the court?

Maj. DYER. No; he had nothing to do with the court or its proceedings. Any investigations he may have made were entirely disconnected with the work of the court of inquiry.

Maj. DYER. So far as the court was concerned, he was not, and, as a matter of fact, I know he did give us several interviews, followed up, but he was not connected with the court or its work any more than any other official down there.

Mr. ANGELL. You felt, then, that there was no necessity of going to any other point, in Haiti to hear possible evidence?

Maj. DYER. No; there was no object in the court going to any other point, as we knew they were going to get some testimony there.

Mr. ANGELL. And you felt that your trip or trips had been sufficient?

Maj. DYER. That, and in connection with the correspondence and the interviews. In other words, we could not spend a great deal of time there going from one town to another and putting out a great deal of people to come and testify before this court. We could have done that, hoping that something might occur, or fearing that something might occur, but the court stayed there as long as they thought there was any possibility of getting any testimony in connection with their precept. It is a little more understandable to you if I would state that the preliminary investigation preceding the hearings before the court—followed the same lines that would be

Mr. ANGELL. Did you understand from sources of information during your investigation there in Haiti that the since the occupancy, had been in accordance with the H of any case of individual abuses?

Maj. DYER. Exactly. I am stating now that that was the termination, but I could find no evidence that the marine personnel that, and my personal opinion was that other people were and they were the people who administered that law.

Maj. DYER. The records of his court was introduced in court of inquiry.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there any attempt to get him as a witness or any persons who testified at that trial?

Maj. DYER. You mean to retry that case?

Mr. ANGELL. No; not to retry the case.

Maj. DYER. For what purpose?

Mr. ANGELL. I am just asking you the question, whether made to get him or any of the witnesses who testified at court?

Maj. DYER. I do not recall as to any of the other witnesses was concerned, I made no attempt to get him.

Mr. ANGELL. What attempt, if any, was made to look in Ryan, who was court-martialed?

Maj. DYER. There was no attempt made to reopen any matter settled by a court-martial. Our court could have had no subject of that kind. The case was closed. We could second time. We accepted the finding of the court. When guilty, we accepted that as evidence of the fact that the man committed and that the man had committed it; and where the man was acquitted, we accepted the finding of the court that he was not

It would not include, for example, the question of the original treaty of July, 1915, apart always from individual cases of specific abuse of power?

No; it had nothing to do with the question of policy or the interference of the United States.

Or the seizure of the customs, or the new constitution, or any other matter?

No. The precept will speak for itself.

I know; but I want to get it in the record, that is all Major, for the purpose of the thing.

Thank French or Creole, Major, at that time?

I do not speak Creole at all, and I do not claim to speak French.

Did you have to converse with your witnesses who spoke French through an interpreter?

I used an interpreter, and used several of them. The majority of the people in Haiti do not speak French, and their dialects are so different that, unless a man can interpret for a native living in Port au Prince, he is really an accurate interpreter for one living 100 miles away. At the time we had four people interpreting before the court, to try to find out what the witnesses really wanted to say. We had one interpreter who was present all the time, who spoke, read, and wrote French excellently, and I had, or one other, who attended all sessions of the court, as a translator. I believe that all the members of the court read, write, and speak French with some fluency—I know that Admiral Oliver is an expert French scholar—so that they were able to follow the witnesses without much difficulty, although everything was interpreted.

Had you served in Haiti before you were appointed judge advocate?

No; I had never been there before.

Had you made any special study of Haitian affairs before being appointed judge advocate?

Not any special study. I had been familiar with the general situation, as I followed it, but not what you would call a special study of the particular.

Is there any further statement that you think you should make, or that the committee may have any information that you have investigated and about your conduct of this court?

No; I have nothing to say, except I believe that a reference to the record of the court will show that it proceeded intelligently and thoroughly, within the scope of its precept.

The record of the court is in evidence before this committee, and I believe, with its appendices and exhibits, speak for itself. We were very much interested in hearing from you the practical methods you were using that record up.

I simply want to state that while I do not claim to anything near the skill of a judge advocate of a court, I have had a good many years' experience of that kind of work, and I have a legal education and I understand the duties of a prosecuting officer before a court, and where dissatisfaction was expressed to our court it was largely through ignorance of the American system. The criticism that was most frequently made was that we did not accept hearsay testimony, and I explained to the people, whether one or two Americans down there, that that was a rule of the United States courts, and that we had exactly the same rules as the courts of the United States follow, and we only accepted hearsay testimony under one of the regular exceptions to the general rule. The committee adjourned until Tuesday, November 15, 1921, at 10 o'clock (A. M.) id you go to the Philippines?

Yes.

ow long were you in the Philippines; I mean from the time you time you came away?

About three months. That was in 1915, after this company had ay, and then, after that, I was in charge of certain branches
s work, as its vice president, in New York.

hen did you cease to be the vice president of that company?

In January, 1918.

hat company is still doing business?

Yes; a very large business.

id you have anything to do with the Philippine Society?

Yes; in 1912 the questions which arose in regard to the political Philippines were of considerable moment, and those who were interested in the Philippines banded together to endeavor to tions which might help their interests in the Philippines, into Society. I had talked with Mr. Taft and Gen. Wood, and Mr. s, and others who had had to do with the development, politically y, and so on, in the Philippines, and under their advice we Philippine Society with myself as secretary, and I was the a the work of that society for upward of three years.

o it is fair to infer that you made a study of conditions in the d the relations between our country and the Philippines?

Mr. FORREST. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. When you left the company in the Philippines were connected, did some of your associates leave at the same time?

Mr. FORREST. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. That is in stock ownership?

Mr. FORREST. Those who had been interested in the company at the same time I did.

Mr. HOWE. Then there was a prompt transition, was it, to Haiti in association with the same people?

Mr. FORREST. Yes; in association with the same people.

Mr. HOWE. What was your project in Haiti?

Mr. FORREST. It started by taking a contract from the United Fruit Company to produce castor beans in Haiti, from which castor oil was produced. We were given a contract which was in the nature of a lease for the production of castor beans, and subsequently we were asked to enlarge our contract, our production, and that we would have the exclusive right for the imports of castor oil from Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. About when was that?

Mr. FORREST. The first contract was taken in February, 1918, and the second was taken in September, 1918.

Mr. HOWE. Will you go ahead now, Mr. Forrest, and give us some of your development experience in Haiti, giving us an idea of what you spent there, whether or not you were interested in the country, or whether you were not actually in Haiti, and, in general, give us an idea as to what your opportunities for observation were?

Mr. FORREST. We organized our company, which was the West Indies Corporation, with myself as president, in March I went to Haiti and spent about two months. We started the production of castor beans and the production of castor oil until December, 1918, about a month after the armistice. I went again to Haiti in January, 1919, and spent about two months in order to develop plans for the production of cotton. Then we devoted ourselves to this cotton industry until March, 1919, which time I spent, I suppose, an average of from four to six months in Haiti.

That is condensing the whole thing. I do not think I can give you the details.

Mr. HOWE. No; it is not. We just want an idea as to what your experience was.

Mr. FORREST. And during all of that time, until May, 1919, I was entirely to the work of the company in Haiti, whether in New York. I did nothing else.

Mr. HOWE. What results came from the long-staple cotton?

Mr. FORREST. We had developed a very large plant on the island of St. Vincent.

Mr. HOWE. About how many acres did you have there?

Mr. FORREST. We had under cultivation there about 2,000 acres. There was cotton there on the 10th of November which looked like it was about to be harvested. On the 20th of November we found that practically the whole crop had been attacked by an infection which apparently is a very serious one. In fact, there has been no record of that infection happening elsewhere except in the island of St. Vincent some years before. It was with in the destruction of that cotton, of course, meant that we had to go to an experimental stage, and our position now is that we are working with sugar and cotton to see what further plans we should make.

Mr. HOWE. Has the company holdings of land outside Haiti?

Mr. FORREST. Yes; we own, altogether—perhaps it would be better to say that in the record.

Mr. HOWE. I do not think that is necessary on the record.

Mr. FORREST. I will simply say that we have large tracts of land in the country besides St. Michel.

Mr. HOWE. You formed the acquaintance of many Haitians?

Mr. FORREST. I have been down there very frequently and have met many in Haiti but also in New York, and I feel that I have a good acquaintance among the Haitian people.

Mr. HOWE. Have you also met our treaty officials and managers?

Yes.

What were your relations with them?

Complete cooperation. I have always been treated by the Haitians as if they looked toward the agricultural development of Haiti, and we have endeavored to help them in giving them the benefit of our experts which we have, and further in actually taking up to our plantation certain agricultural schools to instruct them in the work that we were doing. The course was done without any cost.

You expect to be in the United States for the next few months,

I do.

The committee expects to go to Haiti, Mr. Forrest, starting in the near future and coming back in about a month after that. Its time for hearing is somewhat limited, although the committee wants all the information it can get. You believe that we could have the benefit of your information on the committee's return to this country?

I should be very glad indeed to do anything I can to assist in the important question, either now or when the committee comes back.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Forrest has had great opportunities for observation here, I learn, and it would be impossible in the time at my disposal to go into these matters in any great detail, but there are a few things which I think he could touch on at the present time, and with your permission to lead him up to those matters and then get his free comment. I am not going into an exhaustive examination.

That can be taken up later.

Is agriculture an easy matter down there in Haiti, or do you have to be on the lookout for plant blights in cotton or in other crops?

The conditions which make for the prospect of agricultural success like Haiti also make for very decided dangers as to crop destruction. You have conditions which favor very rapid growth of plants under conditions which favor the rapid growth of things which will destroy them. If we were ever to have the boll weevil in Haiti, it would be impossible to ever get any cotton out of Haiti, because there would be no time to destroy the boll weevil as there is in this country where it comes along and retard their production. If you have army worms in Haiti, you are going to have a tremendous number of them destroy your crops in a very short time. In agricultural production in Haiti, or in fact in the Tropics, the risks that are taken are not only on account of the presence of destructive influences but also the risks of transportation difficulties of organization on the ground. To sum that up, I think that the profits from agriculture in Haiti would be very large and so very great.

You have had an opportunity since you went to Haiti early in the occupation to see the results or accomplishments of the American occupation. Please compare those results, not with what the conditions were when the American occupation began, because, as I understand it, you have no direct knowledge of them; but compare them, please, with the conditions as they are now, as determined by the United States in its treaty with Haiti, the treaty of 1904.

I have the treaty, what is called the convention, here with me, and I am permitted to just read the first article of that treaty, it says: "The United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, commercial resources, and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a sound and solid basis."

That is the convention which, it seems to me, is the most important consideration in regard to the questions which this committee has to consider. It speaks of the efficient development of agricultural, mineral, and commercial resources, and the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a sound basis. If we look back to the time when we made this convention, we can consider the progress which has been made during four years. We have to admit that the progress has not been at all satisfactory.

To-day the agricultural and commercial resources of the country are somewhat improved on account of the establishment of law and order, but they are not been at all commensurate with what both the Haitians and the American business men who are interested in Haiti had a right to expect from the words of this convention.

Of course, the European war has had to do with the gram, but, nevertheless, it seems to me that the chances a convention was made the people of Haiti had a right to be going to be lifted up into prosperity, and looked to the them in that. I regret to say that, in my opinion, they lived up to that faith which they gave the Haitians. A feeling of disappointment and the indefinite policy on the States, and also on the part of the Haitian Government deal of friction, and has brought about a weakening of sides. I think, if we look at that, as the basic situation of Haiti to-day, we have got the main cause to exist.

Mr. HOWE. You stress what you term the disappointing can occupation in bringing about financial stability. What

Mr. FORREST. First, I should say that there was needed the part of the United States Government as to how the can be established on such a basis that friction between representatives of the United States Government can be with, to the end that the words of this article may be a firm policy of government has been established, capital go into Haiti. We all know that capital is extremely tight that if there are indications of governmental friction itself to become subject to the exigencies of a continuing misunderstandings.

Mr. HOWE. To go back a minute to the material evidence what about the establishment of law and order? Has it or not?

Mr. FORREST. I consider that the work which has been law and order in Haiti has been truly remarkable. The part of the country is such that to the person who sees the passable districts it would seem quite impossible to establish order throughout the country. The efficiency with which handled that is, I think, truly remarkable and very much.

Mr. HOWE. What have you to say, Mr. Forrest, as to roads and communications?

Mr. FORREST. I can not give the details. It is not per committee that I, a layman, would give the details as to and how much had been constructed and what the expense.

Mr. HOWE. Well, we knew from testimony which has that between 400 and 500 miles of roads of various classes or constructed under the supervision of our military or our marines—down in Haiti. How good has that work been, and purposes has it served? Let me ask you a question suggested which the committee already has. In your opinion, were on a plan which would do the most for the commercial country or, in your opinion, does the plan of reconstruction military considerations as being better served by the laid out?

Mr. FORREST. It is very difficult to discriminate between for commercial purposes and for military purposes, except of a road would be such that there would be no economic. The road from Ennery to Limbe is purely a military road for the agricultural products of the Gonaïves Valley and would naturally go to Gonaïves for export, and on the cultural products of the Plain du Nord would naturally of the north coast; therefore the most expensive, you might part, of that road is purely a military road, because it is tains, where there are no agricultural developments which never could be.

Mr. HOWE. Is there on either end of that road a direct economically served to other outlets, to outlets on the sea?

Mr. FORREST. Yes; but the building of the roads across have anything to do with the handling of the economic products because they would not go over the mountains.

Mr. HOWE. They would not go to the sea?

Mr. FORREST. They would not go to the sea, but entirely instead of over the mountains the other way. I speak of because I think that is the most spectacular road in Haiti.

on which I came to the same conclusion is the road from Pontais, which has no economic value whatever, and must have order to allow good access into the heart of the country, where cos were operating.

is the road from Ennery to the St. Michel plain. In the road it must be remembered that the headquarters of the surrection were in the mountains surrounding the plains of the construction of that road into the St. Michel plain was e of the means of eliminating the Charlemagne rebellion, for it could be approached from the south and also from the north. n Miragoane to Jacmel is also purely a military road, for the products of Miragoane are on the shore, and the products of o on the shore, but those three roads are very spectacularly y opinion, are purely military roads.

r to facilitate military operations, it was really necessary to dition of the roads which were already in Haiti. Whether you the improvement of the road to Croix Des Boquets and to the Gonaives district would be due to economic developement is because it must be remembered that the products of Haiti are and oxcart, and can be carried over a road which is not what is omobile road. It is perfectly true that the economic advantages ve been very remarkable in Haiti, and I believe that the market recognize the fact that to-day they can transport their products ar with the same effort as they could before these good roads et me interrupt there to ask if you think there was any benefit road you mentioned over the mountains, in making it possible f one part of the country to mingle with and meet the people of the country?

I believe that political stability and the progress of the the country people is dependent upon communication, just as ina, or any other country, that you can not have a civilized, e who are separated from each other by impassable conditions

o that might be an incidental good from that piece of road

Absolutely. The communication has been tremendously im- he American occupation.

ad that has brought forth greatly bettered conditions? A great deal better living conditions, and a decided advancement the outlying districts.

other words, you would not call that work wasted work?

No, I should not.

ut if the plan had been purely for the economic development of the earliest possible date, would you have devised a different hat would be the central theory of a system of roads for the pment of the country?

Entirely—I do not mean entirely, but I would have supplemented of these important military roads over the mountains, which e the most expensive part of the program.

The proper construction of roads in the three large agricultural first, the Cul de Sac; second, the Plaine du Nord; and third; Michel.

ad an outlet from those regions to what point?

To the seacoast.

ad then, after that, I take it you would be ready to link up these but your first avenue of transportation would be to the sea, Correct.

ow much of that has been done, giving these regions direct ac- over roads?

That is a difficult question to answer, because it involves a of the little roadways that go through those districts.

do not think it is going to be beneficial at this time to have a to that, Mr. Forrest?

I should say there has been considerable improvement in the nsporting products to the markets and to the seacoast.

Mr. HOWE. Would you say that considerable improvement has been done?

Mr. FORREST. A great deal remains yet to be done; yes.

Mr. HOWE. What about sanitary conditions?

Mr. FORREST. Sanitary conditions in the towns have improved. It used to be such that when ships passed by Port-au-Prince, stopping there, they knew that the sanitary conditions were bad, because of the wind, which would carry the odors from the towns, the large towns of Haiti are in an excellent sanitary condition. It has been brought about by the expenditure of comparatively small sums.

Mr. HOWE. By what agency?

Mr. FORREST. By the sanitary engineer of Haiti, assisted by the magistrates and chefs de section, through the old rural police.

Mr. HOWE. Have the gendarmerie or the marine contributed to that improvement?

Mr. FORREST. Yes; where the towns were under the command of the gendarmerie and the marines, the sanitary conditions were better, and they are directly responsible for the improvement taken place in those towns.

Mr. HOWE. Has progress in sanitation, then, been worth the cost?

Mr. FORREST. Not only worth while, but truly remarkable.

Mr. HOWE. I suppose there is still more to be done along that line.

Mr. FORREST. Yes; I should say that there was in a general way, but to-day I consider that Haiti is a very healthy place to live in.

Mr. HOWE. What changes has the occupation brought about in Haiti?

Mr. FORREST. The education has been improved by the introduction of the French system. There are more children in the conditions of law and order. There are more children now than there were when we first went into Haiti, but it cannot be called satisfactory, in my opinion. Whether this is due to the fact that we went into Haiti there was no school organization of any kind, from which to build up, or whether it is due to the lack of funds to carry on a proper organization of an educational system. My own idea is that the prospects for educational improvement would not be bad if funds could be provided and a proper system with funds at its command, established.

Mr. HOWE. How long would it be before you could have a large number of students?

Mr. FORREST. I believe it would be a long time.

Mr. HOWE. Would you have to train your own?

Mr. FORREST. You would.

Mr. HOWE. What, then, is necessary for the carrying on of the system there, would be sufficient funds and sufficient time?

Mr. FORREST. Sufficient time to provide an organization of the details of the number of children that are at school, and really very small compared to the size and population of the country.

Mr. HOWE. What has been effected in the way of agricultural culture?

Mr. FORREST. I feel that the improvement in agriculture has been the work of companies which have started there in the last few years, but that the results, as far as economic progress is concerned, is to-day not of any consideration.

Mr. HOWE. What is needed in order to make progress in agriculture?

Mr. FORREST. The first thing that is needed is the clearing up of the land situation. It is not feasible for people to start farming when they do not know who owns the land, and that is why the committee will probably go into at length.

The second thing is intelligence of management and the third thing is the providing of equipment, and the fourth thing is the market for the products.

The land situation is a very difficult one to solve in Haiti. To-day down there who are in agriculture are comparatively few. It will take a considerable time before Haiti really starts to get on its feet in agriculture unless the finances of the country are improved by the investment of proper capital down there.

Mr. HOWE. Here again is a feature of development requiring attention.

Mr. FORREST. Yes.

so far you have made that comment on education, that it requires roads or transportation, that that requires money and capital. Agriculture. - Would you deem irrigation projects as another matter of capital and which projects themselves are necessary to a betterment in Haiti?

I should say irrigation was a part of the equipment of a plan. Therefore comes under the heading that I spoke of. It is just as important as buildings or anything else which has to do with the improvement of soil conditions. I consider that in any agricultural operation the investment of capital would absolutely require irrigation. The reclamation of land would also require irrigation, is that

Yes.

Is an irrigation system would be an indispensable prerequisite to irrigation projects in Haiti?

Yes.

The development of new lands?

You say new? I should say large agricultural developments are a great many things that are produced that require no irrigation. The important things in Haiti, such as sugar and cotton, should be irrigated. Of course, we deal with coffee and cocoa, and things of that kind. They do not require irrigation, but the important development in Haiti is irrigation is necessary for that, but not for cotton, because there are places in Haiti where cotton could be grown without irrigation.

What has been done toward the restoration of irrigation systems and the development of new irrigation systems by the forces of our occupation?

In 1919 an irrigation expert was employed by the engineer of the occupation to go down there and report on a complete system for the irrigation of the Cul de Sac. He made a full and complete report, which is on file. It is understood that nothing has been done further with regard to that project on account of the lack of funds, but it has been seriously considered in the past. We have been down there that a proper irrigation development in this connection that there have been plenty of revisions of the situation in Haiti for some time past, and that the difficulties in the matter are very great, due to the uncertainty again of land ownership. It is a very old thing. If a man is not sure as to who owns the land, he is not so much interested in how he is going to put water on the land. There are in a great many instances of irrigation that has been carried out for many years the ownership of the water is established, still, there is a question in Haiti with regard to land titles as it is to-day, the land is linked up with an irrigation system. For instance, if you put a tax on an irrigation system, and then put a tax on the lands which require the irrigation, the question is who is going to pay the tax—land?

and that is a question on which there is uncertainty in Haiti?

On which there is and always has been and will be until some surveys can be put in, and the ownership of land established. The irrigation projects and the land title situation are linked up together, in in your opinion, what should be the main channels of expenditures of the Haitian Government?

The object of investing any money in Haiti would be to get as possible a return on the investment.

The situation as it is to-day, it is impractical to place a land tax on the land. Therefore I think that the thing that would yield the quickest return for the country, and also clear up all of these other indefinite projects necessary, would be the establishment of a proper system of land titles. Means of course, a Government survey, and, after that, the establishment of titles; in other words, the establishment of a proper bureau of land titles as had in the Philippines. The Torrens system has worked out very well in the Philippines, and I think it might work well in Haiti.

Then you think that the existence of land surveys and Government bureaus and the bureaus for the administration of land titles would be a proper expenditure of Government funds?

I believe so, and not only appropriate, but would tend also to clear up many of the difficulties which have to be met now.

Mr. HOWE. What else would you spend Government money on?

Mr. FORREST. I should say that the second thing would be educational progress of the country. I do not believe the country is progressing as rapidly as it should, without having the educational system improved.

Mr. HOWE. What visible results would you expect from the Haitians?

Mr. FORREST. The whole welfare of the people would be improved. It would result in the development of a middle class in the country which we can not say we have at the present time. It would improve the political situation. I think the benefits of education, of the country, are not as great as they should be.

Mr. HOWE. But it would be a direct and important benefit.

Mr. FORREST. It would be a direct and important benefit.

Mr. HOWE. What else would you spend Government money on?

Mr. FORREST. Haiti is decidedly an agricultural country. Agriculture is an important factor in the development of agriculture is the basis of the products of the country. Wherever you are going to develop a country which deals with things in bulk, the cost of transportation is an important item in the proper conduct of the business. It applies especially to cotton, and I think practically everything Haiti would produce. Therefore, say that the ability to get the products to a market would be the next thing to handle and consider, and then the development of the road system which would go through the districts of Haiti, would be the next most important thing to consider, and also increasing the security of those who are engaged in agriculture and also improving the intelligence of the farmers of Haiti.

Mr. HOWE. Then, from what you say, I would gather that the country is an enterprise but the Government of Haiti now needs capital to develop it, is that correct?

Mr. FORREST. That I consider to be most important.

Mr. HOWE. And if that should be accomplished would you expect progress and would you expect satisfactory progress along the lines of development of the country and the proper development of the industries?

Mr. FORREST. I think it would be the first step in the development of both the Government and economic development.

Mr. HOWE. Would you consider that the negotiation of a loan, with duties and obligations which the United States Government has entered into that treaty?

Mr. FORREST. I think that is implied in this convention. I know that the sentiment in Haiti, or the feeling in Haiti, is that confidence that as soon as this convention was signed the country would be with the funds, because it says here, "The Republic of Haiti, under the present conditions of its revenues and finances."

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that the American Government is being delayed by reason of its delay in making this loan?

Mr. FORREST. I consider that the American Government is being delayed by the terms of this convention, as generally interpreted by the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Apart from the interpretation of the Convention, in your own judgment, do you think our Government, as a matter of course, postponing until this time the negotiation of a loan?

Mr. FORREST. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you further: The authorized amount of the loan will take some $14,000,000, in round numbers, to pay the interest on very advantageous terms, I think, to satisfy the local currency of the internal debt. That will leave somewhere between $1,000,000 free for expenditure on public work in Haiti. Do you think that is adequate at this time?

Mr. FORREST. I should say it was pitifully inadequate.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that even at the high cost of borrowing the Government would have done better to borrow $5,000,000 more?

Mr. FORREST. I am confident that it would; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask that because, at 6 per cent. which is the rate of the loan ultimately and permanently, apparently the market rate is around 85, and naturally the conservators of Haitian credit rowings at this discount. Nevertheless, you believe that, despite would have been better to have borrowed $5,000,000 more, let us er to carry out energetically the program of public works?

Senator, I feel that anyone who would think that they should rowing of $5,000,000 at the present time, even if they paid such ou say, could not have the proper confidence as to what that in- in Haiti. In other words, if we consider that this loan means an Haiti for the improvement of Haiti, the more money that is put certain limit will bring back more return, because those of us Haiti—

n. Well, more money put in, and the sooner the better?

The sooner the better, because those of us who believe in the believe that we would not invest capital in Haiti if we would ) per cent out of it. We believe that the prospects for invest- in Haiti are far in excess of 10 per cent, and what applies to of private capital in Haiti would also apply directly to the ublic funds in Haiti.

ve just explained, the most important thing in Haiti at the he settling of the land situation, and until that is done—

n. By that you mean the clarification of titles?

Yes; and until that is done I do not think you can start any e development of Haiti, and that will take a great deal more e Senator has said would be available right there, in my estimaell, how about the negotiation of a loan, or the settlement of e the relations of this country in Haiti are, as you have called ? Can you obtain that loan or settle your land titles as long s are indefinite?

I think that capital, ordinarily being extremely timid, would est in a country where the political program or policy, we will way indefinite, and that it would be essential to obtaining the e of the people who have the capital that they should know al conditions are in the country in which that capital is invested. d what they are likely to be?

And what they are likely to be.

ow far can you go in the development of the country by private sisting the Haitian Government along progressive lines, or lines out the confidence of the Haitian people?

I do not believe that any project can succeed in a country which pathy of the people of the country. I think that the sympathy otten myself from friends in Haiti can be easily obtained by es of the United States, once the program of a political policy ined. I believe the Haitians will cooperate. I think that it is agricultural development of a country to have, further, more n, almost a partnership with the people of that country. I ential, and I believe that can be done in Haiti.

other words, the agricultural development of Haiti would ecessarily benefits to the Haitians?

Yes; and I think that the Haitians, who are extremely sensi- ount of what has happened since this convention was made— r confidence could be obtained.

what steps?

First, by a development of policy which would show that their perly safeguarded, and by a general cooperation between those o Haiti to invest their money and those—

s. Has our Government had any policy in Haiti since it went should say no; I think things have been allowed to drift.

v. Has there been any responsible American official to whom ther in the service of the Haitian Government or in the service nt of the United States, could be held responsible?

No; there has not been, because the authority has been undefined g of treaty officials, and as to their standing in their relations Government. There has been a confusion of authority which se who are in Haiti of confidence as to just what the Govern- s, and where the responsibility lay, a problem that we all know.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, Mr. Forrest, to consider the problem of a loan. The treaty was proclaimed in March a period of 10 years, and may be extended for a period of 10 years, will expire automatically, unless further renewed, in 1911, when the proposed loan of $40,000,000 is to be made is 30 years.

Mr. FORREST. So I understood; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Therefore, the treaty will expire at the end of 10 years, although the loan runs for 30 years. Let me ask you if you are in favor of that article of the protocol, and especially in the following language, for the security for the loan:

"And it is further agreed that the control by an office appointed by the President of Haiti, upon denomination of the United States, for the collection and allocation of the funds, will be provided for during the life of this loan, after the aforesaid treaty, so as to make certain that adequate provision for amortization and interest on the loan."

I ask that question because I am disposed to believe that the burden borne by the loan and the ability of the underwriters to provide largely upon the interpretation of that provision of the protocol.

Mr. FORREST. Well, I think you have answered the question. I believe that if I was one of a syndicate which was going to make that I would try to make the loan as good as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, under that language, is it good enough?

Mr. FORREST. Well, I could not answer that question, because I am not sufficiently in touch with the investment market to know how to proceed in taking that loan, under those conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask the question in another way, to imply to you that for the service of the external debt provided by the receivership under control of officers appointed by the United States will continue until the service of the debt under the loan is paid?

Mr. FORREST. I should say that 15 years was too short a period.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the question I am asking. The question means that the receivership will continue for a subsequent period.

Mr. FORREST. I should say yes.

The CHAIRMAN. After the expiration of the treaty?

Mr. FORREST. Yes; I do not believe that Haiti could maintain the condition in 15 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that she is bound by the treaty whether she recovers or not, to agree to the appointment of a President of the United States?

Mr. FORREST. I should say that she was; yes.

Mr. HOWE. How much progress can be made until the loan is paid?

Mr. FORREST. Under the present world conditions, I should say no progress.

Mr. HOWE. Can the loan be a fact until the uncertainty of the country and of Haiti is turned into as great a certainty as possible?

Mr. FORREST. Well, that depends on the conditions, the terms, who are subscribing to the loan are willing to take. It is not a question of saying whether people are going to buy those bonds under those conditions or not, but there is no doubt that there would be no loan.

Mr. HOWE. The greater the certainty, the greater the chance of success.

Mr. FORREST. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Is there anything more, Mr. Forrest, that you wish to say which you think the committee should hear from you?

Mr. FORREST. No; I think that as the committee is going to perhaps absorb more information, or so much information, that it might say now further would be superfluous, but I would be glad to have myself available for the committee on their return.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I have now called the last witness. The committee has in mind to call before its departure for Haiti, unless materially changed, with the exception perhaps of a few witnesses, Mr. Williams to complete his cross-examination, and I therefore call the committee that Capt. Angell be permitted to call his witnesses for the examination of his own witnesses.

TESTIMONY OF MR. MAX ZUCKERMAN, ROXBURY, MASS.

Will you state your name and residence, Mr. Zuckerman?

AN. Max Zuckerman, 110 Crawford Street, Roxbury, Mass.

Have you served in the United States Marine Corps?

AN. Yes.

Will you give us the dates of your service?

AN. From July 6, 1915, up until, I believe, October, 1919.

In October, 1919, did you receive an honorable discharge from the Corps?

AN. I did.

Did you serve in Haiti while a member of the Marine Corps?

AN. Yes.

Between what dates?

AN. From the 7th of November, 1915, up until the 22d of October, 1919.

Where were you on duty with the Marine Corps between the date of your discharge and the time you went to Haiti?

AN. What is the question?

Where did you serve in the Marine Corps between the time of your discharge and the time you went to Haiti?

AN. I served at Norfolk, and then went to Haiti, Cape Haitien, and Ouanaminthe.

Where were you on duty after your return from Haiti?

AN. Quantico, Philadelphia and Quantico.

Did you go overseas?

AN. I did not.

With what units did you serve in Haiti?

AN. The Fifteenth Company, and then was transferred to the First Battalion, Second Regiment, as acting sergeant major to Col.

What was that what you were during the rest of your time in Haiti?

AN. I left Haiti as sergeant major and came back to Philadelphia and went to Quantico.

And did you serve as sergeant major in the headquarters of the First Battalion during that time?

AN. Yes; I was acting sergeant major up until the time I was transferred to Cape Haitien.

What other officers of the Marine Corps did you serve actively with in Haiti?

AN. Capt. Upshur, Col. Gulich, Col. Hooker, Col. Wadleigh, Col. Catlin—that is all I can remember.

Gen. Catlin, did you serve with?

AN. No, sir.

Where did you go when you first landed in Haiti?

AN. Fort Liberte.

What indications, if any, did you have on going to Fort Liberte as to the attitude of the Marine forces in Haiti toward the natives?

AN. We came down on the Prairie and got aboard a motor boat, and in the motor boat there were two or three natives, as I remember, and my impression that these were the men we had to contend with on the island.

What impression were you given?

AN. Well, "these are the sons of bitches that you would have to deal with while you are down here."

Who made that remark, if you can remember?

AN. The man in charge.

Was that an officer?

AN. Yes; he was an officer.

A Marine officer?

AN. Yes.

Did you go to Fort Liberte first?

AN. Yes.

What was the nature of your duties there?

AN. I was private, attached to the Fifteenth Company.

What was the nature of your duties?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Hiking details, guard duty, etc.

Mr. ANGELL. How long were you on duty at Fort Liber

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About five months, I believe; four or

Mr. ANGELL. Then where did you go?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Then I was assigned to headquarters minthe as acting sergeant major for Col. Gulich.

Mr. ANGELL. How long were you at Ouanaminthe?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was at Ouanaminthe for about a ye

Mr. ANGELL. Then where were you transferred to?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Back to Cape Haitien.

Mr. ANGELL. In what capacity were you there?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. As acting sergeant major of the regi

Mr. ANGELL. Did you remain at Cape Haitien the rest

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Until I was ordered back to the Unit

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever serve in the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I did.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Ouanaminthe.

Mr. ANGELL. In what capacity?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Just detached from the Marine Co gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you an officer in the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; I was not.

Mr. ANGELL. How long were you at Ouanaminthe in t

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About seven months.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you come in frequent contact wit around Ouanaminthe?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I did.

Mr. ANGELL. While you were serving in the gendar were there native prisoners brought in from time to time

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There was.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the general attitude of our toward the natives and how were they treated?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, it was an individual attitude. treated fair, but it was the individual attitude of the d bringing the prisoners in. They were generally grilled degree. We brought them into the gendarmerie headquar would take their prisoners to the gendarmerie headqua would take theirs to the marine headquarters, and they by the captain in charge of the gendarmerie—put thro order to derive answers from them. They had two diffi One was to gain information from them by beating them remember what it was, but it was a long thing fill gendarmerie would stay there, and if he would not an let him have it. Another one was this: They had a stan 6 feet over the ground, and they just strung a rope arc there so that his toes would just touch the ground, and f the question he would pull the rope.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were those prisoners?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Brought in by the gendarmeries.

Mr. ANGELL. Why were they brought in? Were the bellion?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They were brought in to get inform Cacos were.

Mr. ANGELL. How often did you see these methods of which you just described?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About twice a week.

Mr. ANGELL. Over a period of what length of time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. During my period of duty with the p not know how long it was. It was five, six, or seven m that.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the information obtained from these perter or through direct questioning by the officers?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Through an interpreter.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you yourself actually present to treatment?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes.

Did you ever see yourself or know of your own personal knowl-istances of shooting of prisoners?

AN. No.

Did you go out on patrol duty or hikes in active operations
 ives, the Cacos?

AN. I have often gone out on hikes, but was never jumped by

On these hikes did your detachment take active operations ives?

AN. We did.

What was the nature of those operations?

AN. Well, on several hikes out of Ouanaminthe we fired at sevt in the fields supposed to be Cacos.

What were those parties you refer to doing?

AN. They were out in the fields there a distance of about a
 , I should say.

And doing what?

AN. And apparently it was a large plantation there. On two ns there was a party of three or four that were fired at, and on n, just coming over the top of Mount Capitan, we fired at a

What were these various parties doing at the time? Were they rations against your detachment?

AN. No.

Were they working on a plantation, or what were they doing?

AN. Well, they were quite a distance away. We could not tell were doing. They appeared to be working on the plantation.

Do you know whether your firing at them resulted in hitting

AN. I really could not say.

You could not tell?

AN. No.

Was there or was there not common talk among the marines of ers, referred to as bumping them off?

AN. There was by a certain gendarme lieutenant.

Who was he?

AN. Lavoie.

Lavoie?

AN. Ernest Lavoie.

Did you know him personally?

AN. I did.

Where have you seen him, under what circumstances?

AN. Well, I used to see him at Cape Haitien quite often. He there. I believe he was stationed at Le Trou, in charge of the rou.

Is Le Trou near Hinche?

AN. It is quite a distance from Hinche. They operated from ough Hinche. That was before they put a gendarme post at What conversation did you have with Lavoie along those lines?

AN. We were all at the French Club one night, a party of five

This was at Cape Haitien?

AN. This was at Cape Haitien; and he came in and told us off a magistrat, I believe; that he finally caught him and bumped

Did he give any particulars of this incident?

AN. No; he just happened to pass that remark.

Can you fix the approximate date of this statement by Lavoie?

AN. It was either the latter part of 1917 or in 1918; I just can out I remember distinctly his coming down to the French Club
 He drove in there with his horse and told us this story.

Did you ever see the corvee in operation?

AN. I seen two corvee camps, and I saw them working on the Where were these camps?

AN. One of the roads was from Cape Haitien to Ouanaminthe oads from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince.

Mr. ANGELL. How far, approximately, from Cape Haitien were the camps?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. One of them was about 12 or 15 miles, and the other was about 7 or 8 miles. They worked on the roads, and the roads they helped build the road from Cape Haitien to—

Mr. ANGELL. Will you describe these camps as nearly as you can?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. In one camp on the road to Ouanaminthe, they were quartered in these ordinary Haitian huts, and in the other they were quartered about the length of this building, and barb wired off.

Mr. ANGELL. When you say "barb wired off," how do you mean it? By barbed wire?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Just the front of it was barbed wire. The back of it was a wooden background and the front of it was barbed wire.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see the gangs actually at work on the roads?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe I did; yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know whether or not you saw the gangs actually at work?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe they were corvee. I saw them at work there building the road—out on the road to Port au Prince. They were building the road there to transport logwood from the interior to the corvee system built that road coming out to the Plain de la Gonaïve.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were in charge of these men you saw at work on the road?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were they armed or not?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They had a gendarme guard there.

Mr. ANGELL. Were they armed?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. How many were in these gangs?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe 30 or 40; something like that.

Mr. ANGELL. Each gang?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; that is the crowd that I saw at the camp.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the general attitude of the enlisted men and officers of the Marine Corps toward the Haitians?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, among the enlisted men, the attitude was indifferent. Some of them had no use for the natives and some of them were friendly with them.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the attitude of the natives toward the occupation?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. It varied. When they first went down to the coast, they were all right, but kind of went after we were there a while.

Mr. ANGELL. What did it become after you were there a while?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They got so they did not like us.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know why there was that change?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, as I say, it was individual. Some of them would go out and raise hell with them, and it got to be that they would go out and raise hell with them, and it got to be that they would go out and raise hell with them, and it got to be that they would go out and raise hell with them.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you specify a little more what you saw the marines would go out and raise hell with them?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They would go out and break up the houses and beat them up.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see such instances?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; but several of them were tried by court-martial. That is how I know that.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were these courts-martial held?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. At Cape Haitien.

Mr. ANGELL. How did you know about these courts-martial?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was sergeant major, and drew the sentences.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there convictions in some of these courts-martial?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There were.

Mr. ANGELL. Why did you get out of the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, I requested a transfer to Cap-Haitien, and they ordered to put a priest under arrest.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. At Ouanaminthe.

Ordered by whom?

AN. By a captain of the Marine Corps in charge of the gen-

At Ouanaminthe?

AN. At Ouanaminthe. I was ordered to put this priest under e was some stir coming up about it, and when this thing came to be transferred back to the Marine Corps headquarters.

Why did you request to be transferred back?

AN. I thought some investigation was coming out of it, and I ack to duty in headquarters; I did not want to be on duty with

Why?

AN. Well, I did not like the doings down there at Ouanaminthe;
e way things were carried out down there; and I wanted to get ine Corps.

When you say "doings," what do you mean by doings?

AN. I saw there was going to be some investigation of some sort the arrest of this priest, and I did not want to get mixed in

Tell us about the arrest of that priest?

AN. I was sent over to place a priest under arrest, with five

That was at Ouanaminthe?

AN. That was at Ouanaminthe.

Can you fix the date approximately?

AN. No; I can not.

During what year?

AN. 1917.

In 1917?

AN. Yes; I was sent to place this priest under arrest.

On what ground, do you know?

AN. Well, this priest came over to draw his monthly pay, or hich was disbursed out of the gendarmerie funds, or some sort e came over to get his money and had some kind of a row with d the captain ordered him out of the office and sent me over to arrest.

Did you place him under arrest?

AN. Just as I got to the door I was called back, and then I be-o gendarmes over there to place him under arrest.

You were called back by whom, the captain?

AN. Yes.

So you did not place the priest under arrest?

AN. No.

Was the priest placed under arrest afterwards?

AN. I believe he was.

Do you know whether he was charged with any offense?

AN. I really do not know. There was a radiogram that came ince to release him immediately.

Did you see the radiogram?

AN. No; I just heard there was a radiogram came from Port au e him.

Was he released?

AN. He was.

It was shortly after that you requested a transfer?

AN. Yes, sir.

and you were transferred back to Cape Haitien?

AN. Cape Haitien.

When you went back to Cape Haitien what was the nature of ergeant major?

AN. I was acting sergeant major to Gen. Gulich.

What did you do as sergeant major there?

AN. Office duty.

Tell us a little about the nature of those duties?

AN. Drawing specifications for court-martials, taking care of rts, binding them, taking care of incoming radiograms, and I sergeant of the headquarters detachment, sometimes pay rolls.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have anything to do with provost

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Later on I was made clerk to the provost

Mr. ANGELL. About what time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That was the latter part of 1917, I believe, as clerk to the provost court under Col. Hopkins and Capt.

Mr. ANGELL. How long were you acting as clerk of the

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About three or four months.

Mr. ANGELL. This was in the latter part of 1917 or in 1918?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. During the latter part of 1917 and in 1918.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have anything to do with the Haitian?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was bookkeeper for the disbursement funds.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did these funds come from?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Port au Prince. They were cash allotted to us for certain purposes each month.

Mr. ANGELL. For what purposes were they expended?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Public work—road work.

Mr. ANGELL. Anything else?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That is all I can remember, just road work.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the personnel of the Marine Corps do any work you were on duty at Cape Haitien?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Men assigned to road work, I believe, 30 days a month.

Mr. ANGELL. Was that in addition to their regular pay?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That was in addition to their regular pay.

Mr. ANGELL. From what source were those payments made?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe they were made from the public works officer disbursed those funds.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have anything to do with the vouchers?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Not with the individual vouchers. I drew the vouchers in bulk. I drew the vouchers, and they were turned over to the commanding officer, and then they were taken down to the public works officer—whoever was in charge of the town.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you yourself draw extra pay at any time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. As clerk of the provost court.

Mr. ANGELL. How much?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe it was $25 a month.

Mr. ANGELL. From what source was this $25 a month drawn?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. From the fines.

Mr. ANGELL. From the fines paid?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Paid by the prisoners.

Mr. ANGELL. Were they native prisoners entirely?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes. And I drew, I believe, $12.50 a month for handling the books for the Haitian Government.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the purposes for which the fines paid to the provost court were used?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe there was some office furniture bought from the funds, and stationery, etc.

Mr. ANGELL. What other purposes were these funds used for, if you know?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe they turned some over to the provost court.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell us about the operation of the provost court?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. In what respect?

Mr. ANGELL. Well, what jurisdiction they exercised, were they tried before them?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, the offenses were mostly thefts.

Mr. ANGELL. Thefts by natives?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. By natives.

Mr. ANGELL. By natives of articles from themselves or from the natives?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Both from the marines and from the natives.

Mr. ANGELL. What were the sentences or fines imposed?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, the fines used to run from 25 cents to $10. The sentences were from six months on up to about two years.

Can you give us specific instances of specific fines imposed or sed for specific offenses?

AN. Well, I just can not remember the names of any cases, but can remember the instance of a native being sentenced to 18 theft of some Marine Corps clothing from some marine attached panies up there.

Was it more common to impose fines or to impose sentences?

AN. Well, just about evenly balanced. For theft, I believe they
; for such offenses as carrying arms they were fined.

Did the average amount of the fines imposed vary from time to

AN. Yes; they did.

Under what circumstances, if you know?

AN. That I can not say, but they varied from time to time.

Who sat on the provost courts?

AN. An officer appointed by the commanding officer at the post provost judge, and he decided the cases.

The court, then, was composed of a single judge?

AN. A single judge.

Tell us briefly what the procedure in those cases was?

AN. They were brought in, and the witnesses were brought there oned through an interpreter.

Were there written charges?

AN. We had a blank form that we furnished the brigade com-of.

Were the charges on which a man was tried written out in trial?

AN. Oral.

The charges presented were oral?

AN. Yes.

You say the man was brought in before the judge?

AN. Yes.

How was the trial conducted?

AN. Well, the prosecuting witness would tell his side of the the interpreter would explain it to this native and ask him what and if the provost marshal thought he was guilty, he would e.

Was there any review of these sentences?

AN. They were reviewed by the commanding officer and then e brigade commander.

Did the sentence go into effect immediately upon pronouncement
; judge?

AN. I believe they had to be approved by the commanding officer.
The local commanding officer?

AN. Yes; either him or the brigade commander; I am not just

What happened to the man in the meantime, if he was sentenced?

AN. He was held at the civil prison.

What was the condition of the prison?

AN. Very good.

At that time?

AN. The prison was very, very good.

Was the condition sanitary?

AN. Very sanitary.

Was the civil prison maintained by and kept in order by the larmerie?

AN. The gendarmerie.

Under the marine officers?

AN. Under marines assigned from the Marine Corps—gendarmerie

Would you care to make any comment, based on your experience, qualifications of marine officers and men for duty in Haiti under between 1915 and the latter part of your tour of duty in 1918?

AN. Well, as I say, as a unit they done very good work down the individual feeling amongst the men. As a unit, they worked e men got out, and it was just the individual feeling that they had no use for the natives. It was not all of them; it was there. But, as a unit, the work was generally very good.

Mr. ANGELL. Is there anything else you would care to say of the military forces and the natives?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see service in south Haiti at all?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. You were in the north during your entire

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. In the provost courts was there any disposition provost judge to fine the marines that were convicted before natives?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There were no marines convicted before. Mr. HOWE. I thought your statement was that they tried marines from marines?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; it was natives who were tried from the marines.

Mr. HOWE. Were there no written charges against the provost courts in any cases whatsoever?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There was. We used to make a written commander telling him that so and so was tried for so and so was tried for carrying arms, and sentenced as stated, and clerk of the provost court we never had any written charges.

Mr. HOWE. You mean there was no written charge prepared by the judge, or drawn up by the provost judge during the trial?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Even in the cases which drew sentences of Mr. ZUCKERMAN. We just had a blank form, and at the time we would write the charge in on the typewriter, whatever the sentence, a regular blank form.

Mr. HOWE. Was the defendant ever informed before sentence was against him?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. That was oral?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. But not in writing?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir. As far as I can remember, the form, and the man's name was put on there, his age and there was a space for the charge, and we just write the writer.

Mr. HOWE. Did you ever know of any sentences by the provost courts more than two years?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes; I believe there was one of 5, 10,

Mr. HOWE. You knew of those, did you?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Were they imposed by the court of which you

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe there was one of five imposed by me. I was clerk, and those over five—there were commissions in the provost courts.

Mr. HOWE. Then was it your understanding that the provost courts had only one marine officer as judge could not impose a sentence of five years?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I could not say.

Mr. HOWE. Were there some provost courts that had more than one sitting as judge at the same time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; only at the time, I believe, when they were down there for carrying arms there were three marine officers in the provost court, and they were sentenced for 15 years, if I remember.

Mr. HOWE. Was that a provost court or a military commission?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe it was a provost court. It was a military commission. That was after I was relieved as provost judge.

Mr. HOWE. So you do not know anything about that of

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. But just what you heard?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know whether many or any of the defendants before the provost court could read or write?

AN. Nine-tenths of them could not. They did not know their re never yet seen any of them that could read or write.
 hat books did you handle for the Haitian Government?
 AN. I handled the public-works books, disbursing the funds.
 o much funds for Port au Prince, and I kept the record as to t to.
 id you get a regular payment for keeping those books?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 nder whose directions did you keep those books?
 AN. The commanding officer.
 he colonel?
 AN. Yes, sir. They had a Haitian keeping them, and we were tian, I believe, $60 a month, and I was ordered to take care of eve I got $12.50 or $25 a month for taking care of them.
 id you get that in a different voucher than your regular pay AN. Yes, sir; I got that on a voucher, and that was taken down of customs or to the bank, I think, and I then cashed it in cher under my own name for it.
 ou drew that up?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 ho signed it?
 AN. The commanding officer had to sign it.
 Hence came your compensation as clerk of the provost court?
 t on your pay roll?
 AN. No, sir.
 ho signed the voucher there?
 AN. There was no voucher; I just got that from the provost cash?
 AN. Yes.
 s clerk of the provost court did you keep any account of fines?
 AN. No, sir; the provost marshal kept that himself. All I did e records for the provost court.
 o you know whether or not the provost court itself kept a record
 ?
 AN. I do not.
 o you know what disposition was made of the fines which it AN. Well, it purchased stationery and furniture and turned e sisterhood there.
 o you know if there was a bank account opened with the money
 AN. I believe there was; yes, sir.
 o you know whether or not that was the disposition made of cted in fines? When the money was collected by the provost s done with it—the money?
 AN. Well, they bought furniture, and turned some over to the
 I drew a salary from it.
 es; but where was the money kept?
 AN. I believe it was kept at the Haitian National Bank there, turned some over—o you know whether or not in connection with the account in tional Bank books were kept?
 AN. I believe there was; yes, sir.
 o you know who kept them?
 AN. The provost marshal. himself?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 en, your $25 a month came to you in the form of a check drawn nk account?
 AN. No; I believe the provost marshal used to pay me peronth, and I would sign a receipt and attach it to the records in o you know whether he, first of all, cashed a check and made an his books?
 AN. Yes; that was done; yes, sir.
 hat was done?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There was a check drawn for my salary and it was turned over to me.

Mr. HOWE. But you did not cash the check yourself?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know who signed that check?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The provost marshal.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know that he did have, in fact, a check book?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe it was a check book. They had it at the Haitian National Bank, and every month they drew on it and at the end of the month I drew mine—every two weeks.

Mr. HOWE. Were the only funds in that bank account the provost court?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And the provost judge had the right to expense through checks?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I could not say, but he did expense.

Mr. HOWE. That is what I mean—the same person that was in the bank took it out?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And the person who deposited the money was the provost judge himself?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Were these marines who were doing road work paid a dollar a day extra there?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. By the public-works officer.

Mr. HOWE. By the public works officer?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. How often were they paid—once a month or twice a month?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe once a month.

Mr. HOWE. In what form?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I could not say.

Mr. HOWE. How do you know they were paid a dollar a day?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. By what they told me.

Mr. HOWE. Did you ever see them paid?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; we had nothing to do with that.

Mr. HOWE. You do not know. Were they in the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; they were just paid from the public-works fund.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know the name of anyone who received the money?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, I believe there was a Sergt. Baker in charge of the public-works force.

Mr. HOWE. Did Sergt. Baker ever tell you he received the money?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did he tell you from whom he received it?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Whom did he say he received it from?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. From the public works officer.

Mr. HOWE. And in what form did he receive it, by check or by cash?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I can not say. He said he was paid more than a dollar a day; I can not remember. He said he was drawing extra pay from the public works fund.

Mr. HOWE. How much extra pay?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I could not say; I do not remember.

Mr. HOWE. You had nothing to do with the payment on that?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir. All we did, we drew a voucher for the money over to the public works officer.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know how that voucher was made?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The voucher was made in this way: There were three classes, A, B, and C, and A was public works, B was for the gendarmerie, and C was for the police. A voucher was drawn under class C, so much money was drawn, and the voucher and all was turned over to the public works officer.

Mr. HOWE. Did the public works officer account for that?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Not to us; no, sir.

Mr. HOWE. To whom did he account?

MAN. I do not know anything about it, sir. We used to send a Port au Prince each month, requesting so much money to be and it was allotted to us by radiogram.

How did you fix the amount?

MAN. By estimates sent in from the different posts.

Did they itemize their estimates?

MAN. Yes.

In those items was any amount estimated as wages for the marine

MAN. They itemized them in this way, sir: Sanitation, $500; road etc.

And it did not state there that $1,000 was for material or wages?

MAN. In some instances when they wanted some extra material extra material," whatever the material was they needed, but no id, I do not believe.

Sergt. Baker never told you whether or not he signed a receipt MAN. No, sir; he never did.

Do you know where Sergt. Baker is now?

MAN. No, sir.

Do you know Sergt. Baker's first name?

MAN. No; I just can not think of it.

Now, did any other marine tell you that he was being paid extra

MAN. Not for road work, but there were marines there—mean on road work. Is Sergt. Baker the only one?

MAN. Yes; I believe that is the only one I came in contact with at

How do you know that the funds, the amount of the funds in rt were expended for furniture and stationery?

MAN. I was there at the time they bought them. I went out and ery and charged it to the provost marshal, by direction of the al. I went out and purchased stationery and charged it to the al.

But how do you know he paid for that stationery and furniture ived from fines?

MAN. That I do not know, though I went out and charged them.

and buy stuff and charge it to the provost marshal.

ut you do not know how he paid for it?

MAN. No, sir.

ou did not have anything to do with keeping his books?

MAN. No, sir.

hen do you know, or do you not know, whether or not furniture was paid for by him from the fines?

MAN. That was just from what I heard and what I seen done; en bought. I never seen any bills paid.

s it not so that you just assumed, that that was your guess, that ed to the provost court, the provost court paid for from fines?

MAN. It was not exactly a guess; I was sent out by the provost old me to charge the furniture to the provost marshal, and I was paid for from the provost marshal's funds.

rom the fines?

MAN. Yes, sir.

nd that was just your guess?

MAN. Yes, sir. That was what I knew from the provost marshal, pay it from the provost marshal's funds.

ho told you that?

MAN. He would say, "Charge it to the provost marshal." I have ought stationery, and he would say, "Go out and charge it to shal's account."

id you, before doing that, make some investigation to find out balance the provost court had at the bank?

MAN. Yes, sir; he would say occasionally to look up and see what

, and I would say, "You have got so much."

here would he look to find out how much balance there was?

MAN. He had an account; he kept an account of his own.

id you see those books, then?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes; he kept a regular account of his

Mr. HOWE. As provost judge?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. As provost judge.

Mr. HOWE. You have seen those books?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You saw those books?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir; he kept a regular account.

Mr. HOWE. You saw them?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did you help him to keep those books?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; I did not; I had charge of the tried.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know how he paid for the stationery?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; I do not. The bills were sent had anything to do with the bills.

Mr. HOWE. You do not know whether they were paid or

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I do not know anything about it; no.

Mr. HOWE. You do not know whether he got receipts for for furniture?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. All I would do would be to go out and ture. I never had anything to do with that, but I have stationery and charged it to the provost marshal.

Mr. HOWE. Who told you about furniture?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I think it was the party they bought there, and he would have it charged to the provost marshal.

Mr. HOWE. How would you know that?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was there at the time he purchased desk in particular that I used to take the records of the that desk, and he told me to send the bill in to the provost

Mr. HOWE. He bought that desk from whom?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. From a native there.

Mr. HOWE. Where was the desk when it was bought?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. On Twenty-second Street; a native

Heve he had the desk made—a mahogany desk.

Mr. HOWE. Did you go with the captain at the time desk?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I walked down and picked out the desk and told him about it—how much it would be—and he sent the provost marshal."

Mr. HOWE. He was provost marshal himself, was he not?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You do not know how it was paid for?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know of any other instances of breaking furniture and beating the natives up—than was through reading the court-martial proceedings?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; it was just through drawing the

Mr. HOWE. You never personally had such information?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. On one occasion one marine got into service men of the gendarmerie or something, and he court-martial.

Mr. HOWE. You were present at that time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was just coming out of the quarters in this marine down to headquarters.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know how many court-martials there raising hell or breaking up furniture or beating up natives?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe I drew up 10 court-martials under Col. Hooker for marines raising hell, etc.

Mr. HOWE. But in the course of all your time you saw you were acting sergeant major and sergeant major; is that

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And you were acting sergeant major and long—two years?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. A little better than that.

Mr. HOWE. In those two years how many court-martials of where the accused was breaking furniture or beating

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That I can not say.

Well, more than 10?

ERMAN. Yes; there were more than 10.

As many as 100?

ERMAN. Well, I should say about 20.

Of those 20, how many resulted in convictions?

ERMAN. All of them; practically all of them.

You said in your direct testimony that the attitude of the natives marines changed because the marines were raising hell with the

ERMAN. Yes, sir.

Do you mean to be understood that the attitude of all of these saw there in Haiti was changed by these 20 cases of court-martial of marines for raising hell?

ERMAN. I would not say that. There were probably 100 cases that brought to the attention of the commanding officer.

How did you gain knowledge of those?

ERMAN. Just from hearsay.

Were there any other reasons that you could think of for the e attitude on the part of the natives besides the conduct of the

ERMAN. No, sir.

That was all?

ERMAN. Yes, sir.

You mentioned road gangs working on the road from the cape to and from the cape to Port au Prince. How do you know that bor and not paid?

ERMAN. I went up to see Lieut. Seeger with the gendarmerie, and he were corvee men working there.

Did he use that term "corvee?"

ERMAN. Yes, sir.

Do you know whether or not those men were paid?

ERMAN. I do not; no, sir.

They might have been paid?

ERMAN. Yes, sir. I understand they were paid something like half something, just from what I heard, but whether or not they were t say.

When you saw people working on the road, in this working on the speak of them as doing corvee in all cases?

ERMAN. No, sir.

How would you speak of them when they were not doing corvee?

ERMAN. The road gangs—they were paid a gourde a day.

A road gang?

ERMAN. Yes.

So when you say paid labor you would call it a road gang, and forced labor you would call it corvee?

ERMAN. I think I have seen one of the corvee. That was up with one case of them being pointed out as a corvee gang.

Which road was that on?

ERMAN. On the road going to Port au Prince.

What was the gang you mentioned being on the road between the naminthe?

ERMAN. I understood that was a corvee camp there. I never seen
. We were going over to Santo Domingo.

And you passed the camp?

ERMAN. We passed the camp.

How did you know that was a corvee camp?

ERMAN. A man in charge there. I think a detailed lieutenant with the was going into Ouanaminthe from this camp, and he left generge out there, and he says, "I have got some corvee men at work will leave a guard with them overnight."

Did you see the men in that camp?

ERMAN. Quite a few, sir.

Do you know whether they were being paid or not?

ERMAN. I do not; no, sir.

What was the date when you passed that camp and you heard

ERMAN. That was in 1917 sometime, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You can not give us the month?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What was the date when you saw this gang to Port au Prince?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. That, I remember distinctly, was about

Mr. HOWE. You were in the Marine Corps under the name of your own name?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; Joseph Rosenthal.

Mr. HOWE. What residence did you give when you enlisted?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. New York City.

Mr. HOWE. New York City?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What did you give as the place of your birth as Rosenthal?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. New York City.

Mr. HOWE. What did you give as your age?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Twenty-one.

Mr. HOWE. And which is your real name?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Zuckerman.

Mr. HOWE. And why did you enlist as Rosenthal instead?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Well, I just left home and enlisted, and folks to know where I was.

Mr. HOWE. Were you discharged under the same name?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Of Rosenthal?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

(Whereupon a recess was taken until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to recess, Senator Oddie presiding.

Mr. HOWE. As a matter of fact, all you know about the gang you have mentioned on the road between Cape Haitien and Port au Prince, is that they were seen there and you do not know whether they were paid or not?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. They were, however, guards there in both directions, is not that right?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. There were guards there. They also were mixed in amongst those, prisoners that they had taken, and some of them had arms.

Mr. HOWE. How could you distinguish them from the others?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They had them in uniform.

Mr. HOWE. What uniform?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The prison uniform; red and white stripes.

Mr. HOWE. Were all prisoners down there in uniform?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; not all of them.

Mr. HOWE. Well, the rest of the gang outside of those who had white stripes—do you know whether those were prisoners?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I could not say; no, sir.

Mr. HOWE. How many times did you go out on hikes with the sergeant major?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Never.

Mr. HOWE. So these occurrences where you spoke of were before you were sergeant major?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And your rank at that time was private?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. With the Fifteenth Company?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Not doing duty with the gendarmerie.

Mr. HOWE. That was when you were in the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What was your rank in the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Private on detached duty with the Ha

And under whose orders were you at the time you fired on these fields?

MAN. Capt. Torrey.

Of the gendarmerie?

MAN. Captain of marines and major of gendarmerie?

About what date was that, then?

MAN. That was in 1917 some time, sir.

Late in 1917?

MAN. No; I believe it was about the middle of July, somewhere

Did you fire at the orders of Maj. Torrey?

MAN. We did not fire; the gendarmes fired. Our orders on hikes fire until fired upon; on all hikes on every detachment that left

How near were you to the gendarmes that actually did the firing?

MAN. Capt. Torrey and I had a detail of two gendarmes, and we 200 yards from this detachment of gendarmes that fired on those

The natives had fired on the gendarmes?

MAN. No; the gendarmes had fired at the natives.

First?

MAN. How far away were you from the party which fired on the MAN. We were about 100 yards.

Was the party which fired on the natives under direct command of the gendarmie officer?

MAN. No, sir; Capt. Torrey and I were going around Mount we could just barely see this other detachment of gendarmes coming the mountain. We were looking for Gentil Sevier.

This detachment of gendarmes that you saw firing were not in the field; is that right?

MAN. Yes; they were with us, but we had left them to go over and look a detachment of gendarmes to go up on the top of the mountain, left this detachment to guard the bottom of the mountain.

How do you know they were firing in the direction of these

MAN. These natives were out in the field there.

How did you know this detachment 200 yards away were firing in the field?

MAN. That I could not say, but they fired in that direction.

And at the range of a thousand yards?

MAN. They were about a thousand yards; yes, sir.

What did Maj. Torrey do when that firing took place?

MAN. He sent me down to find out what they were firing at, down there, and they said they fired at a bunch of men that came ashore, and as I went down I saw three or four men across the plain Where was that?

MAN. That was right at the bottom of Mount Capitan.

You mentioned another incident of firing on natives?

MAN. We were going up to Cul de Nord, I believe the name of the place, and we also had a detachment of gendarmes, and I was in charge of the marines, and we came across about nine shacks, and a gendarme somebody had one of these—I forget what they called them—a man, he took a shot at him, but did not hit him. We did not get any shot or anything else. But that firing was without the orders from the gendarme who was in charge.

Those people in the place near the shacks were under your orders

MAN. Yes, sir.

You had no instructions from your superior officers to fire on the natives?

MAN. Not until we were fired on first. That was the standing order of the regiment.

Now, how many times did you yourself see Haitians subjected to this sand club which you have described?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. While I was on duty with the gendarme twice a week.

Mr. HOWE. For about six months?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About that time; yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. That was a usual occurrence?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Where did it take place?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. In the gendarme headquarters at Ouanaminthe?

Mr. HOWE. At Ouanaminthe?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Were you present during those beatings?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Some of them.

Mr. HOWE. You were present about twice a week, on the average?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. For six months?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Now, what time was that—what year?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe in 1916 somewhere, the last of the year.

Mr. HOWE. What duty were you performing at the time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. On detached duty with the gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. As private of marines?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. At the times when you were present, was there any white officer present?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. You mean a white officer?

Mr. HOWE. Was there a white officer present?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Was there any other white man than yourself?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Capt. Torrey was there on a few of the occasions mentioned the natives.

Mr. HOWE. Was Capt. Torrey present at the time they were strung up with the sand club?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Who actually did the beating?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. And did he do it at the direction of Capt. Torrey?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I believe he did; yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Now, how often did you see natives strung up?

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt. Do you know who directed the practice of beating people with the sand club and initiated the practice of beating people with the sand club?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it invented during your service, or was it in vogue before?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I do not think it ever existed before; yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Would the man be strung up on the beam of the gallows?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. At the time he was being beaten?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; they would just tie him up there.

Mr. HOWE. Who would tie him up?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The gendarmes.

Mr. HOWE. Those were native Haitians?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see Capt. Torrey or Maj. Torrey quelling the natives while he was strung up?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; he was never there at any of those times.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what the name of Maj. Torrey was?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I think it was Philip H.

Mr. HOWE. Is that the one you are talking about?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir; Philip H.

Mr. HOWE. Were these natives strung up?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Or H. P. There are two marine companies, one of them the younger of the two.

The CHAIRMAN. The younger of the two is the one you mentioned.

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Maj. McCLELLAN. Philip happens to be the older.

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. It is the younger of the two that I mentioned.

Mr. HOWE. Did they both have the same rank?

AN. I believe they did, sir.
 This one was commanding officer at Ouanaminthe at this time;
 ?
 AN. Commanding the gendarme detachment.
 Did he order these natives strung up?
 AN. As far as I know he did not; no, sir.
 Did you ever see him present in the room while a native was
 ?
 AN. No, sir.
 But he was present when the native was being beaten by the
 ?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 More than once?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 Did you ever see a native being beaten with a sand club when he was strung up?
 AN. Amongst the gendarmes they used to beat them quite these prisoners with these sand clubs.
 By chasing prisoners do you mean running after prisoners, or beating them?
 AN. Guarding prisoners.
 You say that Maj. Torrey was not present when these prisoners were questioned?
 AN. As far as I recollect, he was not; no sir.
 Do you know why he ordered them beaten?
 AN. Well, to gain information.
 Who did the questioning?
 AN. Capt. Torrey, through an interpreter.
 When was Capt. Torrey present when the witnesses were being questioned and the natives were being questioned?
 AN. On several occasions he was.
 Did I misunderstand you, then. I understood you to say that Capt.
 was present while these prisoners were being questioned.
 AN. While they were strung up.
 AN. If you will permit me, the witness I think, alludes to his seeing the prisoners were being beaten with sand clubs for the questioning, whereas he says that Capt. Torrey was not present while they were strung up for the purpose of questioning.
 AN. Yes, sir.
 Who would do the questioning of these natives as they were strung up?
 AN. Capt. Torrey.
 In all cases?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 Were prisoners being brought in constantly during that time,
 or only occasionally?
 AN. Yes, sir; practically every day we would get a detail of prisoners every other day, or every time a gendarme detachment would bring a detail.
 Was every prisoner who was brought in clubbed or strung up?
 AN. No, sir.
 When it was only those who refused to answer questions, as the others were clubbed or strung up?
 AN. Yes, sir.
 Were there any other white officers stationed there in the past?
 AN. No, sir.
 Who else besides the major, his interpreter, and yourself, were present at the time of the beatings?
 AN. There were several gendarmes there, a gendarme sergeant, and a first sergeant.
 Were there any attempts made to keep these occurrences secret?
 AN. No, sir.
 Was Maj. Torrey the only white officer stationed there?
 AN. No, sir; Col. Hooker, the commander of the marine de-

Mr. HOWE. Was he stationed at Ouanaminthe?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Was he ever present at the time any of the men were beaten or strung up?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Were you working under Col. Hooker at the time you were under Capt. Torrey, or Maj. Torrey?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Maj. Torrey.

Mr. HOWE. He was Maj. Torrey in the gendarmerie, was he not, the marines?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. What questions were being asked of these men at that time?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. The prisoners, I understand, those who were severely, were caught with arms out in the country, and were given information as to where the bandits had their arms, and were after this Gentil Sevier.

The CHAIRMAN. He was a bandit chief?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir; of that section, through Cap.

Mr. HOWE. And throughout the whole six months, that was the case, that Capt. or Maj. Torrey was after?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. To find out the location of the camps of the bandits?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Have you ever made any report of these men's testimony to this committee?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Have I ever made a report? No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state for the record that Zuckerman testified that he was honorably discharged from the service, but did not have his discharge papers with him. In the meantime, he has looked up his record, his record appearing under another name, and gave to the committee before recess, and finds out that he was enlisted under the name which the witness furnished to the committee. charged. What is your real name?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Zuckerman.

The CHAIRMAN. You enlisted as Rosenthal?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And Rosenthal was honorably discharged. Is that correct, or appear on the record.

You had only one enlistment, did you not?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And you were, nevertheless, in the Marine Corps for four years?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. By about three or four months?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. About four months.

Mr. HOWE. What was the cause of your staying over there, in the Marine Corps?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Waiting trial of a summary court for the Marine Corps.

Mr. HOWE. Were you kept waiting trial those three months?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And you were fined?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. How much?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was fined $30 at first, and then the commanding officer, and he said it was inadequate for the offense, and was fined $90.

Mr. HOWE. In addition to confinement?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I was not confined at all, just waiting trial.

Mr. HOWE. Being held three months over your enlistment?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. And were you reduced from rank?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. You had been a sergeant?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Or a sergeant major?

MAN. I was sergeant, I believe, at that time.

What were you discharged as?

MAN. Corporal.

You were reduced from sergeant to corporal?

MAN. Yes, sir. The fine was remitted at the expiration of my to you actually suffered no loss in money?

MAN. No, sir.

I have no further questions.

Can you give us the names of any of the gendarmerie sergeants

Ouanaminthe during this period?

MAN. No, sir; I could not.

You do not remember the names?

MAN. No, sir; I could not.

You have no grievance against Capt. Torrey?

MAN. No, sir.

No personal run in with him in any way?

MAN. No, sir.

And you served the whole period of four years and some Marine Corps under the name of Rosenthal?

MAN. Yes, sir.

Why did you enlist under that name?

MAN. I just wanted to get away. I had some scrap at home. I came home for two years after I enlisted, until they found out where You enlisted under that name to get away from the family, so I would not know where you were?

MAN. Yes, sir.

That is a fairly common practice in the Marine Corps and in the Army, is it not?

MAN. I do not know. I guess it is. The cases I cited were just cases, but there are a lot of things that I could tell on the bright side of the occupation; that is, during the time I was with the gendarmerie. At that time, I was in position to see exactly what was going on down here. I was a sergeant-major of the regiment and seeing the reports and going on tours with the commanding officers. I accompanied the commanding officer on every inspection tour before the gendarmerie was organized. The commanding officer of the marines was in complete charge of roads, everything else there.

MAN. Let the witness go right along and tell the story in his own

MAN. Outside of that instance I quoted, I could not think of any instance that would condemn the occupation down there.

MAN. What have you to say in justification of the occupation?

MAN. Well, sanitation down there has been very, very good, and the water system. I went through that with Mr. Bond, the ex-marine. He was in charge of that, and he done some very good work on the water system. It worked all through it.

All of this is at Cape Haitien?

MAN. Yes, sir; and the roads from Ouanaminthe to Cape Haitien were taken care of by the marines, and that was taken care of, and the city itself was very well, all taken care of by marines. Outside of that one instance, I can not say anything.

MAN. Let me ask the witness what were the general relations between the gendarmerie and the population, other than the bandits or the thieves?

MAN. Well, they got along very well, just for the exception that there would go out and get drunk and the first thing they would do would be to go around and break up some kind of shack.

MAN. That is not peculiar to marines or to the Republic of Haiti?

MAN. Outside of the few instances I can not think of anything

MAN. Normally, what was the relation, let us say, between the American and American officers at a point like Cape Haitien with the population of the city and the country around about?

MAN. Very good. They got along very well in Cape Haitien.

The CHAIRMAN. At what point were you stationed, or travel in Haiti?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. To all northern Haiti, practically all of

The CHAIRMAN. As far west as Gonaïves?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No; I went to Fort Liberte, Ouanaminette up as far as Hinche, and a town this side of Gonaïves, just Port au Paix. This was on inspection trips.

The CHAIRMAN. You were on inspection trips, and presented an opportunity to observe?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir. I was there at the time that we paid the natives, and we paid them—I think the Haitians called them—a dollar apiece for turning in all their rifles, and I believe it was to Le Trou.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the calling in of the rifles, the gendarmerie, and its presence in various communities contribute to peace?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the people more freely come and go in the country to the market places in the towns, because of Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes; and under Col. Hooker's administration the Marine Corps band came down from Port au Prince, so that you could hear it out on the street. He put the band in the band stand in the evening, so as to let the natives come out of their shacks and lock themselves up.

The CHAIRMAN. Weighing the incidents to which you allude in your testimony, the stringing up and the beating with clubs and the unprovoked in some cases, against the pacification of the country and the maintenance of peace, did the faults of the gendarmerie outweigh the benefits to the population, or did the benefits to the population outweigh the faults of the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I think the benefits to the population outweigh the faults of the gendarmerie.

The CHAIRMAN. The country was better off for the gendarmes?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. They were better off with the gendarmes than without them—

The CHAIRMAN. Than if there had been none?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir. The marines patrolled the country and so did the gendarmerie, and the gendarmerie natives were a lot of this trouble. As soon as a man was made a gendarme in uniform he was the big "It," and he went out amongst the natives and the devil himself. They started a lot of the trouble themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. Was a large center like Cape Haitien better off the whole well and orderly and peaceably policed by the gendarmes?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. They acted in lieu, of course, of city police?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANGELL. And on the whole they discharged their duty?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir. We had marines patrol the streets as gendarmes.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that patrol walk a beat as a police beat, the marine or gendarme?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. I do not think either. There was a constant patrol of marines through the streets at all times.

The CHAIRMAN. In groups of 4, 6, or 10 squads?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. No, sir; singly.

The CHAIRMAN. Singly?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gendarmes patrolling also in squads?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say, in so far as there was any peace, that they originated with the native gendarmerie, or with the Americans serving with the gendarmerie?

Mr. ZUCKERMAN. A lot of it was inspired by the natives.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it is a loose question, and I only ask for an impression for the benefit of the committee. It is not testimony, valid in any other sort of a hearing. On the whole, were the natives responsible for ill treatment meted out with the American or officer of the marines, or an American serving with the gendarmerie themselves?

MAN. The gendarmes themselves, the native gendarmes.

INT OF MR. JAMES WELDON JOHNSON, 70 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY.

Q. Will you give your full name and address?

A. James Weldon Johnson, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. I am secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Q. Have you ever been in the United States Consular Service?

A. Yes; I was.

Q. Will you tell when and where, briefly?

A. I was appointed consul at Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, in 1906, to Corinto, Nicaragua, in 1909, and served there until—I can not say how long, but it was early in 1913, when I resigned—about seven months.

Q. You have been in Haiti, have you not?

A. I have.

Q. When did you go there, and how long did you spend in Haiti?

A. I went down to Haiti in March of 1920, last year, and I got back about the 21st of March and I got back about the 21st or 22d of March. I was there perhaps six weeks and

Q. Where, in the island, did you go in Haiti?

A. Well, I made my headquarters at Port au Prince. I radiated from Port au Prince through the country there, anything that could be done, and then I made a trip in an automobile as far as Cap-Haïtien and returned back in about a week.

Q. Did you stay at any place along the way?

A. Well, I made the usual stop at St. Marc and Gonaïves, and

Q. Did you go back into the interior of northern Haiti or central Haiti?

A. I went back largely for the purpose of paying a visit to the palace and citadel up there. That took me a day's journey up into the north.

Q. What class of population did you come in contact with?

A. Well, I guess I came in contact with all classes. I had letters from the best people of Haiti, and then I got in touch as well with all other classes.

Q. Did you meet officials of the Government?

A. Yes. I met the President twice, and most of the Cabinet members, and other lesser officials.

Q. Did you converse with the local officials in the communes, the people?

A. I did not talk with any priests that I can remember, but I did talk with the people as I could draw out. They are mostly suspicious of

Q. A little more clearly, Mr. Johnson.

A. I say I did not talk with any priests.

Q. But with people such as were not suspicious of strangers?

A. Yes; those competent to talk.

Q. Did you have to speak through an interpreter, or do you speak French?

A. I speak enough French to get along. I am not very familiar with it. Although I speak a word or two, I could not say I could talk

Q. Will you tell us what you found to be the attitude of the Haitian people, the different classes, and its feeling toward the United States, toward the military occupation, and the reasons for its feelings and attitude?

A. Well, of course, that is a question that has to be varied a good deal. Just a general impression, it would be that there was a good deal of suspicion and resentment in all classes. The reasons might have been varied, but the impression I gained was from the highest by the lowest I do not mean what we call a peon, because them to any large extent, and I do not know whether serious thought on it one way or another, but the people intelligence, of any thought at all—they were extremely

Mr. ANGELL. Was there bitterness toward the United States toward the military occupation in particular, or both?

Mr. JOHNSON. If you will let me put it this way: The people who seemed to have been disappointed. They seemed to have hope, and I might say the faith that a good deal more would come from the occupation than did come, and their resentment was based on the consideration to be the harshness of the military rule, and the convention was not being carried out in the spirit in which it was intended to be carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. May I interrupt, Captain, at that point?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. By that do you mean that the financial reorganization contemplated by the convention appeared to be postponed?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. I think, Senator, that would be the point.

The CHAIRMAN. They had been led to believe from the convention that the adjudication of long pending claims, the reform of related matters would be taken in hand forthwith and

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. I think that is true, but I think that I am talking about—I will have to divide them into a few statements would not cover them all.

The CHAIRMAN. Precisely.

Mr. JOHNSON. There were a group of people who seemed to expect some good things coming out of the convention. Those people expected a strict military rule. They seemed to feel that there was civil oversight and they considered that the military department outside of the letter and spirit of the convention.

Then, of course, there were groups that I talked with various groups of different political shades of opinion and status, and some people, of course, were bitterly opposed to intervention. I found a very deep pride in their independence and resented anything like foreign invasion, and they were

Mr. ANGELL. What did you find the attitude of these various groups on the question according to the different groups, their expectations for the future as to treatment from the United States in relations with the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me get the gist of that question again.

Mr. ANGELL. Perhaps that was not very well put. What were the expectations of these various groups of people with whom you were in contact with the United States in the future?

Mr. JOHNSON. The more intelligent people that I talked with ought to be what we might call a new deal entirely. They ought to be that convention such as it was, was forced upon them. They could be any mutual benefit in cooperation between the two groups ought to have a fairer start together. That expressed the group. When we get to the other group that I referred to as irreconcilables, they want nothing less than the independence.

The CHAIRMAN. They want the abrogation of the convention?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Are you able to specify the particular incidents leading to the truth or untruth of those incidents, but as to their reasons for the feeling which these different groups have and the conduct of our administration of Haiti?

Mr. JOHNSON. You mean the reasons for the fact?

Mr. ANGELL. The specific reasons for the particular feeling?

Mr. JOHNSON. They resent very much the military occupation rule.

Mr. ANGELL. The fact of the occupation or the method of the occupation conducted, which?

Mr. JOHNSON. The fact in some degree, and the method of the occupation, Judge, and of course conditions in Haiti give rise to a not arise in any other country, and that is the question between back, and that has been brought to the fore very much in Haiti, ans resent it very keenly; they feel it very deeply.

Just how did you gather that the question had been brought to
 ?

N. Well, they talked with me, and I talked with what you might r class of Haitians, the men who assembled in the clubs there nice homes, the educated class, and they said that before the Americans there was no such thing as a well-defined color line t there were foreigners there, both Americans and Europeans, line had never been specifically and tightly drawn as it has been pation there—instances now in which it shows very plainly.

By whom has the color line been drawn since the occupation, nce to any particular individual?

N. I learned that it started with the Americans, but now the ally drawn.

AN. You mean there are no relations, other than official, between and the Americans?

N. That is what I am getting at. Of course, what I am repeately what I gathered in talking, Senator.

AN. Precisely.

N. You might say that there is no personal relation between the ial class and the upper class of Haitians, except where it is sary, and that heretofore those conditions never obtained even ite Europeans there in Haiti, and the American citizens in Haiti.

You said a moment ago that this feeling originated, I believe,
 ary occupation?

N. Yes.

Was it your understanding that it was a feeling which origine color line was brought forward by the Americans against r by the Haitians against the Americans?

N. Drawn first by the Americans. I was informed that the e in what we would call the social set there, who would go into the Americans first landed went very far to make it pleasant it was all right until the number increased very largely, and until the time when the ladies of the occupation came down.
 stand, that the American occupation or the officials of the occu-y and civil, organized a club to which no Haitian is ever iny the Haitians, I believe, have returned the lack of compliment y the Americans to their clubs. That is a side issue, but I judge point of friction which impeded a good deal of motion that might g more easily.

Did you hear comment or discussion to any extent among of the institution or conduct of the management of the corvée ericans under the American occupation?

N. Yes; that was put down as one of the reasons for bitter re-

Was the feeling apparently strong on that point or not?

N. Very strong with everybody I talked to, and I talked with a ople. I talked not only with the native Haitians but I talked s in business there and European business men.

AN. Was it to the abuses incident to the corvée or to the actual law of the corvée that objection was made?

N. I heard something of abuse, but, of course, I have no definite have heard of things that are told everywhere, but I think as I ation there that there is something in the Haitian which objected the corvée itself—the invoking of it.

AN. Although it was in his law?

N. Well, I understand it was never enforced in that way.

AN. Well, I think it was never enforced at all; it was a dead as a law.

N. Well, I think we have the same laws in most all of our States;
 e of the Southern States there is a road law, by which you can o work on the road around your vicinity, but I think it went—if me to digress a little—I think it went pretty hard with the studied the question, because I do not think there was ever any peonage in Haiti. The Haitians in the country, so far as I could learn, the great majority of them, were individual little plot of ground; and no matter whether he cultivated was an independent farmer, no matter on how small a scale taken off his little plot of ground and carried miles away from the country it was slavery to him, even though the treatment had been abnormally cruel.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if they were carried far from the country that might be characterized either as an abuse or maladministration or corvée.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there any specific reasons for the treatment described toward the occupation?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I think that most of the intelligent people here was really no Government, because there was a conflict between the Haitian authority and American civilian authority and Haitian people got that not only from intelligent Haitians but from Americans there.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask the witness the question I put this morning. Could you say that there was any American policy of pacification had been completed up to the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON. Any policy at all—any defined policy?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I could not say that there was.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you able to see any evidence of pacification where?

Mr. JOHNSON. I could not.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you hear any particular comment on the relations in governmental administrative matters between the American minister and financial adviser, on the one hand, and the Haitian Government on the other, such, for example, as the Haitian Legislature and the National Assembly?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; I talked with various men, and they all spoke of the solution of the Chamber of Deputies. They said that it was virtually a solution. Of course, that was another cause of resentment among the classes. Then, most of them told me that they did not like the country being policed, that they had gotten anything but satisfaction from the obligations were on the part of Haiti, but there seemed to be no part of the United States—at least, they could not see any part of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. But the United States had taken control of the country and discharged the responsibilities incident to control?

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what the intelligent classes felt and said.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the foreigners perhaps feel the same way?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would that be your own judgment?

Mr. JOHNSON. That was my own judgment after my survey of the whole situation. First, let us say that I was not surprised at the Haitian people. I found them a good deal better than I had ever hoped or expected to find them, and I wanted to see what the Americans had done. I could not find anything but that was the military roads, the big highway from Port au Prince to the Haitian, the improvement of the hospital there in Port au Prince seemed had been made quite efficient, and some minor sanitation had been instituted in the larger towns. I think they were not so bad as I thought they were. I think they did not go any further than that you must have a cement gutter in which to run the things of that sort.

As for the city of Port au Prince, I found it a very clean city. At first I thought that that was the work of the occupation, but the paving of Port au Prince was the work of the Haitian Government. The contracts had been let before our occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Had the work been completed before?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not entirely. Outside of those three things, I looked especially for some marked improvement in the school system and I talked to Mr. Belgard, who was Minister of Education.

of the schools in Port au Prince, and saw some of the schools country, but, as far as I could learn, the occupation and the Americans had not done anything to improve the school system, such as in some of the other possessions.

What feeling did you find among the population, if any, about the occupation of land by foreigners, and the whole question of foreign capital and economic exploitation, and kindred questions?

Those I talked with seemed to be quite apprehensive about the occupation, and especially the buying of large tracts of land by some of them seemed to be quite disturbed at the rumors prevailing down there of large tracts being taken up. I do not know how except in one case I talked with a man who said he was dissatisfied.

What feeling, if any, was there regarding the article in the new constitution, permitting the ownership of land, and regarding the adoption of the constitution itself?

The intelligent Haitians of all political parties that I talked with felt that the constitution which they had now was unconstitutionally adopted. They felt that the old provision in the old constitution not allowing the sale of land was one of the bulwarks of their safety and security. All were very much opposed to that change in the constitution. They said they felt that the constitution was unconstitutionally adopted and how?

Well, I understand the fundamental law of Haiti calls for the constitution to be adopted by the legislative body, and this was adopted by a popular vote.

Was it or was it not the feeling among the groups whom you talked with that the methods of the adoption of this constitution and these regarding the ownership of land were to be laid to the occupation—occupation?

Yes, sir.

AN. We have now a record of nearly six years of the occupation, since the acknowledged establishment of general order. We have a record of which, assuming a renewal at the end of the first period, is a record where there be established in Haiti a true and centralized responsibility and agents there, whether in the employ of the Haitian Government or Government of the United States, if the American Government, agents, assiduously and in good faith pursued a sympathetic policy, always, as you suggested early in your testimony, to put forward the method of civil administration through civil advisers rather than military. Do you believe that we may secure the cooperation of the Haitian people in carrying out of such a policy?

I think it would be very largely secured, Senator. I do not see how the occupation of Haiti will secure 100 per cent cooperation, or maybe not perfect, but I think it would secure quite a large cooperation.

AN. I mean can we secure that measure of cooperation which is necessary to contribute substantially to the moral and material progress of the Haitian people during the 15 years of the treaty?

Will you let me answer it by making a statement?

AN. Certainly.

I think that if the right sort of man took charge of the right method of sympathetic and cooperative civil administration in Haiti, and there were to be a man of big caliber—I think that has been one of the things lacking in the present occupation there—and looking forward with this thing to the absolute restoration of Haitian independence at the end of that time, you would get the cooperation of all the elements in Haiti that are available while.

AN. Do you believe that at the end of 15 years, the Haitians, unaided, will assume the administration of the public services of the country?

That would depend, I think, on what took place in the 15 years. If the country went there and administered it for them, and got up and came back, they might be so weakened in that time that they could not take care of themselves.

AN. What you have in mind is that we should not administer for them, during that period?

With them, and their administrative powers should be continued until that withdrawal.

The CHAIRMAN. What would happen if the treaty were occupation withdrawn on 90 days' notice?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I have heard opinions on that. sanest opinions I have heard from natives would be that wise thing to do on 90 days' notice. In fact, I do not think from Haiti until the native constabulary or a national army is there to replace what you have. I do not think this generally, because the intelligent Haitian has no place in they are the most ignorant, and although some of the intelligent went in at first, they found they had no chance and no place stood aside. You would have to replace authority by Haitians.

The CHAIRMAN. If you were laying down in the most general for us to follow, would it be one like that suggested by Mr.

Mr. JOHNSON. If I had a program to lay out for Haiti looking to the quickest possible withdrawal of the United States as immediate as possible the withdrawal of the military as possible a withdrawal of even civilian rule or oversight able to do anything in Haiti unless we have the good will to know that. That is axiomatic, and I believe the best way to Haiti that we have no ultimate aims against her independence.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, you say the withdrawal as soon as

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Six months, one year, five years, ten years the treaty?

Mr. JOHNSON. Military withdrawal?

The CHAIRMAN. No. I am talking now of complete withdrawal was the phrase which you used.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. Well, I will put it into two parts as soon as possible and as prompt a civilian withdrawal.

The CHAIRMAN. Could you indicate a difference in time?

Mr. JOHNSON. This treaty now has five years to run, has

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should venture that we could get out of way in a year and that we ought to be able to get out at the of the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you do with the service of Mr. JOHNSON. Of the debt?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I do not know that we have made

The CHAIRMAN. Whether we have or not, we have under French debt, which, as you know, has not matured and not

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not really know we were assuming I knew we were to furnish a loan for Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. The major part of the loan is allocated the French debt.

Mr. JOHNSON. You mean the loan that was to have been have been expecting?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I think the negotiations are con

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not know that. I had given that up a lost hope.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it has been consummated, but loan goes for the payment of the French debt and the liquid claims. I think it is fair to say that nine-tenths of the from the loan now approaching consummation will go for would you assure the service of that loan?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that I am prepared to say pared to answer that question. That involves a good deal hand.

The CHAIRMAN. That is something which, of course—

Mr. JOHNSON. I was coming back merely to this proposition my opinion, the Haitians were capable of self-government.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I had in mind the service of the service of the Dominican debt, the service of the Ottoman debt, and all these debts which have been in default a

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask now, Where are we with the

The CHAIRMAN. The Dominican debt will be paid. I think is almost extinguished. The revenues last year and the a Santo Domingo that the debt is being paid off something like 20 ance of the expected time.

f the protocol for a loan, in part, reads as follows:

further agreed that the control by an officer or officers duly ap-he President of Haiti, upon nomination by the President of the s, for the collection and allocation of the hypothecated revenues, ded for during the life of the loan after the expiration of the aforeso as to make certain that adequate provision be made for the and interest of the loan."

nd imply that a contract between the bondholder and the debtor re that the revenues' control and the revenues be vested in the the President of the United States, even after the withdrawal of merican agents. I think, roughly speaking, the amortization of the ver a period of 13 years, whereas the extended treaty has 15
 . There is not any such provision, I think, for the allocation of this debt, as there was for the Dominican debt, where they took ove a certain sum of the revenues.

ODIE. There is one thing I would like to ask. You spoke of the roads. Did you look over the system of the roads yourself?

ON. I can not say, Senator—the system. I took the big highway Prince to Cape Haitien. That is a very good road.

ODIE. Do you feel that criticism of the work that has been done by on the roads was made with full knowledge of the work that had the marines?

ON. Yes; I think so. You mean the value of the work to the ODIE. Yes.

ON. I think so. As I looked at it, I think the value of that road be overestimated.

ODIE. Do you not think, in speaking of a military road as you do, ave value from an economic and commercial standpoint as well?

ON. Oh, yes. I think it has some, but I say that value can be l, I think, for Haiti. I mean by that that a road would be of mic advantage in some other country than it is in Haiti. This ghway, and you will find military trucks and automobiles travel ithout any speed limit. In fact, in some instances, the road is a the Haitian farmer. I went over the road and I saw an auto-a market woman. She was on one mule, and she had a horse with all her produce going to market, and her child was on and the horse got frightened and ran and scattered all her produce l of the road to the other. And when the farmers get their d, a donkey means a great deal to a Haitian farmer, and when bles come along, these poor people scramble up the sides of the down the declivities, trying to get out of the way. The road, as eat advantage to people who want to see Haiti, but I do not think uite that much to the Haitian farmer who is trying to get his e town. He has got no automobile. He goes on foot, with his in a trail one behind the other, and a mountain path would be nient to him almost than a road.

Would the same remark apply to the railroads? Have the rail-up the country to any extent, in developing it?

ON. Well, the railroad, as far as it goes, I think serves quite the railroad runs north as far as St. Marc, and then they have got one that shoots around the bay of Port au Prince down to the

Have they had any particular effect in opening up the country ortation of produce which otherwise would not have any way market.

ON. No; I do not think so. I think the traffic perhaps between Port au Prince would be perhaps just about as much as it is.

Did you make any investigation as to the condition of the lower s there?

ON. I did not investigate the courts, but I talked with some of the ere.

What was their opinion of the Haitian lower courts?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I talked with one man there who the courts, and he told me that the Haitians felt that they were to anything now, because they had no exclusive jurisdiction; they were interfered with always by the military authorities.

Mr. HOWE. Did you gather from what they told you that they interfered in the civil cases, that is to say as distinguished from criminal cases; I mean cases between plaintiff and defendant over property?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, I do not think I have got a distinct answer. I gathered that they interfered with cases that were in the hands of a man who would be exonerated by the civil courts, and that they would arrest him on that same charge.

Mr. HOWE. The thing I was more interested in, perhaps, was that being an abnormal condition under the intervention of the military. That being an abnormal condition under the intervention of the military, are the lower courts competent courts to decide—I mean, are there able enough men to decide questions of property between plaintiff and defendant?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think so. I just throw that out. I have no opinion.

Mr. HOWE. What I want to know is whether you had any inquiries about that branch. Did you have any time to inquire into that?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not specifically, but I am just giving a general answer. I think they are capable to handle—

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what the salaries of those judges are?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I do not. I did find out the salaries of the teachers. I did not look up the salaries of the judges.

Mr. HOWE. Would it be your opinion that if martial law were declared there, the Haitian lower courts could satisfactorily conduct the business of the gendarmerie to the end of preserving law and order in the country?

Mr. JOHNSON. I should think so.

Mr. HOWE. I mean after removing the element of division, the element of a bad element for any court?

Mr. JOHNSON. I was going to qualify it by that; yes.

Mr. HOWE. Is the Haitian system of lower courts capable of conducting the Haitian system of gendarmerie and administering justice, and preserving law and order?

Mr. JOHNSON. I should say that I think so.

Mr. HOWE. I have heard that the salaries of the lower courts, the de paix, are very low indeed, and that a proper and properly paid salary should not be induced by that salary to go on the bench of a judge.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Is it not your opinion that the justices of the peace, the de paix, ought to be well qualified men, as the judges that they would encounter?

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, he at least ought to be an honest man.

Mr. HOWE. It is a very important position, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; it is from that point of view. I do not know if there is any extraordinary ability to be a justice of the peace; it does not require any extraordinary ability.

Mr. HOWE. No; but he has got to be honest; he has got to be a man of honor, has he not?

Mr. JOHNSON. He has got to know some law and he has got to have some sense.

Mr. HOWE. And especially if he decides questions of the property of the people between poor people?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; but I do not know how far the de paix would go in property matters. I judge it would go to some amount, and that above a certain amount it would go to the higher courts.

Mr. HOWE. Would it not be a useful thing for anybody at the time of the withdrawal of the American occupation is decided by the Haitian Government can supply an adequate judiciary?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it would be a very good thing to have a judiciary.

Mr. ANGELL. Would you care to give us, without feeling any confidence, the substance of a conversation that you had with President Dartiguenave regarding the relations between the United States and the Haitian Government?

Mr. JOHNSON. I saw President Dartiguenave twice. I saw him, although I was well introduced to him, he was rather reserved. He was long generally. We talked without any interpreter. And was a little freer, and he confessed to me then that he had a very in getting along in any direction at all with the American occupation that they ignored him completely; that they ignored his council and then acting as a sort of cabinet; that they paid no attention to recommendations, and that whatever they decided was to go through in order to understand that it was to go through, and he talked in that way for half an hour.

When you say "they" are we to understand that he referred to the officials of the military occupation, or the American minister, or the officials, or all of them?

Yes. "They" was a comprehensive "they." It takes them all in. There is to be considerable dissatisfaction with our minister who was there

Mr. Bailly-Blanchard?

Yes.

Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, Mr. Ernest Angell, and Maj. Edwin
United States Marine Corps.

r. Chairman, Capt. Angell has here to-day a witness, Mr. Pilkington has had exceptional opportunities to observe conditions in suggestion would be to have Capt. Angell, who has talked with as I understand it, conduct the questioning at the outset.

. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

OF MR. H. M. PILKINGTON, TECHNICAL EXPERT,
IDENT AND MANAGER AMERICAN DEVELOPMENT
TI, NEW YORK, N. Y., AND PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI.

Mr. Pilkington, what is your occupation?

on. I am technical expert and vice president and manager of development Co. of Haiti.

You have been in Haiti?

on. Since 1918 practically up to the present.

What was the occasion which took you to Haiti, and what has business in Haiti?

on. I went there, originally, in an advisory capacity for the ts who control the Haitian-American Corporation.

What was the Haitian-American Corporation?

on. That being a company organized to take over the public g in Haiti, and to build a sugar mill and organize extensive he plains of the Cul de Sac and Leogane, these being the only aiti in which sugar is naturally grown on the same lands as it s of the French occupation, and the only districts in which system is in practical operation, as originally engineered by the s.

What was the date of your going to Haiti?

on. That was early in 1918.

Have you been practically continuously in Haiti since that on. I have been practically continuously in Haiti since that during that time easily a solid two years and a half of time

When did you come up from Haiti last?

on. I came up from Haiti last just before Christmas.

Of 1920?

on. Yes. During that particular trip I made a complete and of the physical properties of the corporation, and inasmuch of any industrial project in any country is dependent upon the of the people of that country, it was equally important for study of the psychology of all classes of the people.

investigations and studies of the country and the lands naturin contact with what we might call the lowest or the most primitive class, which is the laboring class or peasantry, this entirely illiterate and living in the most primitive manner, found that the thousands of people employed in field work on our many and various plantations extended over the territory, were invariably and without exception a completely ignorant, and completely amenable people. They are native cultivators of the ground and with a very slight outlay of very slight exercise of friendly discipline, they became plantation operators to the extent of planting, cultivating cane, and it will be fair to say that a very large percentage of people of this class, who migrated from Haiti to Cuba, were educated in this line by the Haitian-American Society. From Cuba were invariably to the purport that these men made the best cane cutters in Cuba.

I next made it my business to come in contact with the ruling or political class of the country, because, at base, every other enterprise is fundamentally dependent upon the laws of those laws in whatever country may be concerned. One of this Haitian-American Corporation was brought about in public directly and definitely upon assurance in Washington by people and competent officials, that the treaty between Haiti and the United States, in fact, to be a living thing. The large feature of the securities of this company, all of which floating capital, upon the implied bona fides of the United States in carrying out the basing of which was security for foreign capital. Upon this evident condition, because the development of a primary industry upon one thing and one thing only without which it cannot be, is, the bringing in of foreign capital. It is a manifest fact that it will not be risked in a country which does not extend the same security for the security of that capital. I became acquainted on these terms with what I have before called the ruling class, having had confidential interviews, which later ripened into an informal basis, the most agreeable basis, with President Dartiguenave, of his cabinet, his conseil d'etat, and practically all of the members of the Haitian class. I have been accorded what to me is considered of being invited to become a member of the Cercle B, a social club of Haiti, this invitation being extended by one of the most cultured, educated, and enlightened men I might meet anywhere.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you give the name of that gentleman, and the reason that I rather expect to call him as a witness when we come to the next session.

Mr. PILKINGTON. I would be glad to have appear on the stand this gentleman, Mr. George de Lespinasse, and in the meantime, an apology for not mentioning, for want of space, the names of the other Haitians, of whose acquaintance I am more than acquainted, of whom, or to any of whom, I am sure could be intrusted with the management of our own independent government, being fitted for this by their education, character, and political and diplomatic training. It is an invariable rule that the better class Haitian has had, and has received, education in the higher schools of Haiti, a further education in the conservatories.

There is not in Haiti what we would term a middle class, or American acceptance of the term. What corresponds to the middle class, called the commercial class, the traders who buy the products and export them to other countries, and those who maintain the plantations. This class is, of course, literate, and to a greater or lesser degree, educated. In all my two years or more intensive study in Haiti, I have found a single instance found an example of what we could rightly term a middle class. I say this broadly and in full knowledge of its purport to the members that I have seen and observed of the Haitian class. I present for the information of the committee, a photograph of one of these bandits who openly confessed to be torturing of Pvt. Lawrence, who was openly claimed to be eaten. It will be seen from this portrait that while the type, and of his like were unspeakable, that the type, ethnologically, was a vicious type.

the photograph of one of these Cacos who was concerned in and death of Lieut. Muth. The same observation will also apply to the gnomony of this man. Further evidence along this line of this has been frequently told me by enlisted men of the marines, in treatment that they have had at the hands of this class of people. told by enlisted men who have been lost in the hills from their and have wandered for days through the bandit territory in , that they have been concealed away from other Cacos in safety, and then forwarded on their way, that is in among this Cacos.

on gained at that time of the physical advantages of the country, the advantages of soil and light, and the prevalence of a large unsatisfactory field labor, were so favorable that in association with firm which controlled the majority of the stock of the Haitian corporation, I organized in Haiti, under the Haitian laws, a company, to comply in all respects with the existing laws development company, which was prepared with sufficient financial undertake and execute any form whatsoever of development work which would warrant a reasonable return upon the investment. rily elected under the law of Haiti to be the resident director e directly and personally responsible for the actions of this he law requires.

upon and before the formation of this company, I made an y of all Haiti, its physical conditions, not only of soil but of e possibilities of transportation, the mineral possibilities, and the tions affecting in any way the practical development and ex- ce country. The character of the country may be best described h are accredited to Napoleon, whose brother-in-law, Le Clere, ry governor of Haiti at the time that this country was France's sion, and one of the, if not the, finest colonies in all of the world. ere was making a report of conditions to his chief, Napoleon, and t kind of a country is Haiti. He seized a large sheet of foolscap, mpled it up in one hand, and throwing it on the table, said, "Haiti." In my opinion, no other description could so well ography of Haiti. With the exception of a few plains of rather the entire country is a mass of interlocking mountains, almost connecting valleys, many of which are so narrow that one may foot on one mountain and the other foot on the other mountain— e, being the bases.

means of intercommunication is nothing but trails of loose stones, try being practically of limestone formation. Over these trails the tiny farms with which the country is completely covered is e heads of women, or on the backs of the burros, to some market means and method of transportation is entirely satisfactory to their present state of evolution. They, in fact, universally com- zzy acts of the whites in destroying their nice, shady trails for making a wide, smooth road, on which their automobiles may s and scare them to death.

t to even the casual observer who merely sees Haiti from a pass- at the country is only at the present time an agricultural possi- s manifest that hillside agriculture must be very largely con- genital development of the country. This feature has been, one rely overlooked and neglected by every tentative exploitation in om the colonial times the plains only have been really cultivated, ized by their own writers as being a one-crop country—this coffee—and it is fair to say that even in this narrow sense there that can be rightly called coffee plantations, most of it being ultory manner, wild and always at some considerable elevation, rigation. Cotton has also been an extensive article of export, ion has never, up until the time of the United West Indies Cor- scientifically pursued. The cotton, which has heretofore been g grown wild in various parts of the country, and being picked and carried to the market in small quantities and exported in its may, therefore, from an industrial point of view, be considered tely primitive basis, and whatever development is done there must start, in two senses of the word, from the ground brings us to the very vital, basic principles which must govern, first, the control of the lands, and second, the possibility of peaceful and friendly possession and operation of these lands.

The first point—that is, the control of the lands—must be some form of exclusive ownership of these lands over long enough to allow for complete development of these lands and sufficient return for the money invested. At the present time there exist in Haiti any general system whatever of determining the ownership of these lands, there being a vast amount of territory which is Government land, but in any concession or lease involving alienation of Government lands there is always a requirement that they be under the supervision of the Government to determine what is and what is not Government land. The modus operandi of this survey consists of the district concerned, communicating with the judge de paix and with him going around through the district and getting the names of the various farmers, who may be squatters or who may be known to the Government, and whose land is theirs and whose is not theirs.

Mr. ANGELL. Are you speaking now of an actual survey made?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I am speaking of actual surveys, surveys in order to give these concessions that I mentioned. If you do not have them there you can not get it without proceeding in the following way: you will have a direct and definite bearing on the land laws.

As evidence of his ownership to a particular piece of land, the farmer shows what he thinks is a deed to that land. The Government, concerning land for which the sugar company has been interested, the farmer has proudly produced a bill of sale for a horse, believing that that was a deed to his property. Under the present system of disputed possession of a piece of land for 20 years is considered as proof of the land. Upon the death of a member of the family, the land there must always be a more or less elaborate funeral ceremony, of which are to them fairly heavy and are in a large number of cases by selling a small piece of this land which, as can readily be seen, complicated the already absurd conditions of ownership; so that in the absence of any system of records it is well nigh impossible to determine one has bought or leased a certain piece of land or not. A correct title to a piece of land must be based on a correct survey of the land; that is to say, a correct survey. Up to the present time there has been no official survey of Haiti, and one of the fundamental improvements brought about by the American occupation, which has been systematically conducted, has been a complete, up-to-date survey of triangulation and survey of all Haiti by officials lent by the United States Government—I think the department of the Geological Survey.

Mr. HOWE. Is this an accomplished fact?

Mr. PILKINGTON. An accomplished fact; yes. This work, if completed, would require a term of several more years, but it is an absolute physical impossibility for anybody to acquire the recorded ownership of a tract of land, except by the means of the parties interested as to the established boundaries of the tract in question.

This work has been begun and has been continued in the most scientific manner, starting from a regular base line, being accurately measured and remeasured on the plains of the country, and included the measuring and marking of all the visible points of the mountains—over the entire country. A large number of triangles have been triangulated and the angles closed as the surveyors start from the extension of these lines into all localities and all points of definite possession of the various tracts of land can be ascertained and recorded.

We now come to the laws concerning the holding of the land, and to say that the most serious thought in the mind of the Haitian is that the foreigner is going to get an actual, physical foothold in Haiti, which is a very small country, and in time force him out of an independence. I feel, from the standpoint of my experience with the people of Haiti, that it is perhaps the most important feeling to be considered by the native Haitians.

at there are vast tracts of land in Haiti, claimed to be and ly owned by various Haitians, on which they never set foot. I in many cases by Haitians that they own tracts in the north of e Cacos have always existed, upon which they have never dared unt of the lawless squatters, who are now occupying that land wn it through the mere fact of being there. It must be noted ition does not comply with the condition of the undisputed rritory such as a squatter clause in a law would imply. The tion of Haiti contains a provision for the acquiring of the itian land by foreigners. It is the claim of the Haitians that n is not constitutional; that it was not promulgated by their dy, and that it contains principles which are absolutely and aistic, and to which Haiti, as a body, would never and could his clause allows the ownership of Haitian land by foreigners, s it originally stands, go into any details. The Haitian Govern- constitution was enacted, some time in 1920—I do not remember pted, voted, and passed a law which purported to set forth the r which that clause was operative. These conditions were so dictory of the spirit of that clause that foreigners who had in vested in property in Haiti, and had been developing the same, e very much perturbed, and an instant protest was lodged with uthorities, and this offending law was temporarily suspended.

urse of my acquaintance with these people, and my travels over I can truly say that I have met with nothing but the utmost eeling, and cooperation of every class. The President has often e most heartfelt and feeling way his great sympathy and his ss to help any American enterprise which was based primarily Haiti. This spirit of cooperation I find in all the official class of . I will specify in particular with great pleasure the progressive t ability of the minister of public works, Louis Roy, whom I pable, courteous, intelligent, and a credit to his country. All ment of any kind whatever under any form of concession comes iction of the minister of public works, and the Haitian-American s, therefore, through its various utilities and industries, been ouch and subject to that department of the Government, and I oes not exist any single cause of complaint on that score. ist, however, a universal spirit of complaint and criticism on the nd action taken by various American officials in that country. e reasons for these complaints were a matter of very careful or it is self-evident that if officials who are carrying out the tion of a country are in continual friction with the officials of e purposes of that occupation will never be achieved. I found a ttitude of antagonism existing in all classes of society. The based in all cases that I could observe upon the application of orvée, especially in the building of roads in the north— The feeling you are speaking of is the feeling you found at the there, between 1918 and 1920?

on. Yes. This is all, of course, from the studies which I made ere, and is the result of actual studies, not just impressions. I iness while in Haiti to learn the vernacular of the country, and aintaining an intelligible conversation with the actual peasantry, ed directly with many of these people, principally mountaineers, all their lives in the mountains, coming down to the plains only oses. This class, as well as all other classes in Haiti, definitely wers in charge of the work on these roads with abuses of this to the actual details of these abuses, it was not of interest to me n detail, the important fact being that the attitude of mind back which was clearly shown was the important factor, not neces- t facts which brought about this state of mind. ght call the next class that had been concerned, and that com- occupation, would be the former Government clerk, as we might urse, in their former government everyone who had the requisite a government job. It is well known that many of these jobs eople who did not work at the jobs, but hired some other man r pay to do the work, and he pocketed the difference, but, at any e a vast number of people thrown out of employment by the coming of the American occupation, this, of course, but American occupation whatever, but furnishing a class of

The next class one might consider would be the educated. It is fair to say that their antagonism was due solely to friction between the members of the occupation forces and themselves as nearly as I can make out, coincident with the landing of American officers. Up to that time the American officers had no social intercourse with the Haitians, both in their families and during which, of course, they freely danced with the Haitians. The coming of the women of the occupation this peacefulness was completely upset, the women having a natural aversion to military training and method of thinking, to dancing and general social life with the Haitians, men or women; the husbands of these officers objecting for the same reason. Therefore, there came an exclusive social lute. The exclusive Haitian clubs, which formerly were frequented by officers—the American officers—as guests of the club, began to deteriorate in condition of affairs, and the American club, which eventually was frequented by officers of the occupation; at no time within my knowledge was this club received as guests any Haitians. In spite of this feeling of resentment by the Haitians of this condition of affairs, probably the most exclusive Haitian club, continued to receive guests but as members certain Americans and other who had confidence and trust, showing, to my mind, a marked courtesy in favor of the Haitians.

I might cite a case of direct abuse which I know contrary to the part, although one might call it trivial in itself, to the feeling of sentiment. There is among the many talented Haitians a finished musician, a graduate of a Paris conservatory of music, in which I had the pleasure of attending at this gentleman's house, of an instance which had occurred shortly before my coming, which was giving a private piano recital of his own compositions and their parents in his home. While playing these compositions, the guests were enjoying from their post on in his garden, which was with rocks from the neighboring dwelling, which was occupied by an officer. This stoning was so continuous and so dangerous that the guests were compelled to take flight, and he had to put out the house. He made complaint to the competent military authorities, and immediately took prompt action and offered to discipline the officer. The interposition of this gentleman himself punishment was personally became acquainted with this officer and found him to be an efficient, excellent soldier, with a very good record, this was one of many instances of the power of the demon rum, which caused great difficulties with which the commanding officer of the occupation country has to deal.

Mr. HOWE. Did it turn out that this officer himself had been stoned?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Yes; it did. It is easy to see what was brought about among the intellectual classes of Haitians. I noted that the better classes are intermarried to an extent that they can conceive, and therefore an injury to one is an injury to all.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear of that incident referred to in the report about that class, friends of this musician?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Yes; this incident thereafter being a discussion whenever the actions of the marines were complained of, pleasure and privilege to help this gentleman in his endeavor in having his works published by the music firm of Charles Hallé, New York. The Columbia Phonograph people have also been publishing his works, as have also the Aeolian Co., in making master records of his piano, which is by far the most expensive and the best of its kind, using only rolls made by the composers themselves. I was able to lessen in that particular case the unfortunate incident in general which a large proportion of the Haitians believe in. It is fair to say that, thanks to the personal living and the acquaintance of Americans who they have in their midst, this class of Haitians know that such things are not necessarily a common attribute.

We now come to what, in my mind, may be truly considered the most important source of complaint which the Haitians have against the American occupation.

ought to my attention by various prominent Haitians that there was a very serious import pending at the palace.

Q. You were in Haiti at that moment?

A. Yes; I was there. This information was brought to me in company in Haiti and personally told to me by a certain member of the Government. He told me personally that the existing contract between the National Bank of Haiti and the Government of Haiti, being up and about to be discussed and a certain clause modified to the mutual advantage of the National Bank of Haiti and of the Government of Haiti.

Q. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that this was the matter which was brought before the committee?

A. Yes, Mr. Farnham, the first witness before the committee.

Q. According to my informant, a draft containing all these conditions was to be submitted to the President for his signature. The President's refusal to sign this document, the financial adviser, who, I understand, is an employee of Haiti, attached to the department of finance, refused to further discuss the pending budget for the year, implying that he would not go further in the matter until the President of Haiti had given his consent. Upon his continued refusal the salaries of the President and his officials were stopped.

Q. This is the financial adviser you are talking about?

A. Yes, Mr. Bailly-Blanchard. President Dartiguenave still refused, and that Col. Russell, the chief of the military forces, upon whom the President Dartiguenave depended, the financial adviser, Mr. Russell, by this time had apparently arrogated to himself functions which are not defined in the treaty, and Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, who is the financial adviser of the United States Government as far as Haiti is concerned, is in direct defiance with President Dartiguenave, in defiance of all laws and ethics, a financial matter, of course, necessarily being under the jurisdiction of the department of finance and its minister, the President, in the name of the Government of the United States, refused to sign that contract as it stood.

Q. Whether justified or not by facts which do not appear and have not been explained, to my knowledge, either to the Haitian people or to me, is, to my direct knowledge, an insurmountable obstacle to any agreement between the United States Government and the Haitian people, and it is, I think, finally explained publicly, and if unwarranted, openly apologized for. It is a fact, which is evident to the observation of any part of the world, that the smaller a nation, or the more ignorant of people, or the more insignificant an individual is, the more he is in his actual rights, and the more exigent he is in anything which touches his personal pride, and of all races in the world it is no doubt the case that the feeling is strongest in the Latins, and they are the people who most insist upon these rights and of this amour propre. It may be, and I am certainly like to personally know, that we, an enlightened people, an advanced Nation in the world, as we freely admit ourselves on the part of direct representatives to act in a manner which, at least to the eyes of the open observer, appears to be nothing but brigandage. Upon knowledge of this act becoming public, an instant and a storm was filed by all the responsible interests in Haiti, not only native and foreign. This insistence by the American Government was not new, but has never been explained, as heretofore said, nor within the knowledge of anybody with whom I am acquainted. If future reconstruction, of course, must be predicated upon the consent of the people, and equally, of course, must be administered by a committee. Until apology for and reparation of another great outstanding wrong, such a constitutional assembly will be almost impossible to call. I refer to the act described to me personally by certain witnesses at the time as a physical driving out by force of the deputies.

Q. I can confidently say, irrespective of the actual pros and cons, that the feeling which actuated this general protest concerning the revised bank contract was based on the fact that the bank had appeared as a court of ultimate resort in this question of a like nature, and by his apparent usurpation of power by him under the treaty, in connection with his forcing of a universal feeling of distrust and a lack of confidence in the government might be called upon to take in connection with the final action.

Mr. ANGELL. At this point I should like to offer in connection with the verbatim protest of the American, foreign, and Haitian business interests in Haiti against this proposed action, taken on July 30, 1920, the material portions of which are the last paragraph.

(The protest referred to is here printed in full, as follows.)

"The protest printed below, against article 15 of the contract of withdrawal, was sent to the Haitian secretary of finance on July 30, 1920.

"The undersigned bankers, merchants, and representatives of the branches of the financial and commercial activities in Haiti, to submit to the high appreciation of the secretary of finance the following consideration:

"They have been advised from certain sources that the following actions have been made to the Government of Haiti.

"1. That a law be immediately voted by which to regulate the importation or exportation of all money not Haitian, foreign money which, in the opinion of the financial authorities, is sufficient for the needs of commerce.

"2. That in the charter of the Banque Nationale de Haiti there be inserted an article giving power to the financial authorities the Banque Nationale de la Republique d'Haiti to take in connection with the importation or exportation of non-Haitian moneys.

"The undersigned declare that the adoption of such a law, whatever form it may be, would be of a nature generally to protect the collective interests of the Haitian people and the financial authorities would be dangerous to substitute the will of a single person, who he might be, however honorable, however infallible, for the law which regulates the movements of the monetary circulation in Haiti.

"It would be more dangerous yet to introduce in the charter of the Banque Nationale de la Republique d'Haiti a clause which would establish a sort of monopoly in the foreign money market, which is the principal base of the operations of high commerce in Haiti, the exclusive privilege of emission of bank notes. Such a law, in the hands of all other bankers and merchants its humble tribute to the government and its caprices.

Senator ODDIE. How does the price of silver per ounce compare with the price of silver per ounce in the world markets?

Mr. PILKINGTON. There is no price per ounce. There is no silver at all.

Senator ODDIE. I mean the silver that can be bought in the world. Mr. PILKINGTON. The silver that is bought in the world is in the form of coins that have been hoarded here and there.

Senator ODDIE. On what basis do they sell per ounce?

Mr. PILKINGTON. They do not sell it per ounce. Nobody sells it there. There is no industry there. It is a raw, primitive country. They do not go and buy silver per ounce.

Senator ODDIE. You spoke of the value per ounce?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Not the value per ounce.

Senator ODDIE. Of old coins?

Mr. PILKINGTON. These silver coins have a value for souvenirs, but in fact the few that do come in from the natives have been hoarded by the natives have been acquired by the natives for other body else, and they make them up into neck chains, v you have to pay more than the face value of the coin to get it. It cannot be obtained at the bank, the coins in circulation being nickel.

L. Let me put the question to you in another way. Do you think the effect of the business men, which has just been offered in the record, you referred, was based to any considerable degree on a fear by the business men that the effect of the operation of the proposed clause would be to interrupt by such a legal monopoly the free play of foreign exchange pending for its normal free play upon the uninterrupted right of export of foreign money, and that such interruption of the free play of exchange would have been detrimental to the individual interests of the business men and business houses and detrimental to the general trade of Haiti?

MR. GREGG. Such an attitude was the generally voiced opinion of every one I communicated on the subject.

L. Is it your understanding that subsequently the salaries of the members of the cabinet, and other Government officials thus suspended for the year 1920, as you have testified, were finally paid by the financial administration?

MR. GREGG. Yes.

L. And if so, when?

MR. GREGG. I do not remember when. It was commonly stated that the salaries were resumed and that the United States Government receded from its position.

L. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer in the record a document which passed between the Haitian Government, the American Legation to Haiti, the civilian treaty officials, and directly between the Haitian Government and the American Government in Washington on this subject. The correspondence which I am introducing now also includes several letters from the Haitian Government on the occasion of this proposed convention to be given to the National Bank of Haiti, emanating from the British and Italian Legations to the Haitian Government. The document referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

On the occasion of the Haitian National Assembly on August 4, 1920, the President of the Republic of Haiti and the Haitian minister of finance laid before the assembly the course of the American financial adviser which had made it impossible to submit to the assembly accounts and budgets in accordance with the convention of Haiti and the Haiti-American convention. The statement of the financial adviser is taken from the official Haitian gazette, the Moniteur, of August 10, 1920:

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT.

On the occasion of the council of state, on account of unforeseen circumstances it was not possible for the Government of the Republic to present to you the report of the session of your high assembly which closes to-day (August 19). The general accounts of the receipts and expenditures for 1918-1919 and the budget for 1920-21, in accordance with the constitution.

Only an exceptional case, the gravity of which will not escape you. In the full details from the report which the secretary of finance will submit to you, in which it will be shown that the responsibilities do not fall on the executive power * * *.

For every people there come moments when it must know how to endure and to suffer. Are we facing one of those moments? The attitude of the Haitian people, calm and dignified, persuades me that, marching with the Government of the Republic, there is no suffering which is not to undergo to safeguard and secure the triumph of its rights.

DARTIGUENAVE.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE.

On the occasion of the council of state, article 116 of the constitution prescribed the following paragraph: "The general accounts and the budgets prescribed by article 116 must be submitted to the legislative body by the secretary of finance not later than eight days after the opening of the legislative session."

And article 2 of the American-Haitian convention of stipulates in its second paragraph: "The President of Haiti shall be a civil servant attached to the ministry of finance. The financial adviser shall lend effective aid in the prosecution of his work. The adviser shall work out a system of public accounting, shall supervise the revenues and in their adjustment to expenditures * * *

Since February of this year (1920) the secretaries of the ministry, in order to conform to the letter of article 116 of the convention, to assure continuity of public service in the matter of the budgets, set to work at the preparation of the budgets for 1920-21.

By a dispatch dated March 22, 1920, the department of finance drafted budgets to Mr. A. J. Maumus, acting financial adviser, for study by that official. But the acting adviser replied to the letter of March 29: "I suggest that, in view of the early departure of Mr. McIlhenny, the financial adviser, measures be taken to permit the said draft budgets between the different offices (of the financial adviser) to permit him to take part in the study."

Nevertheless, the regular session was opened on the Monday, April 5, 1920. Mr. John McIlhenny, the titular financial adviser, sent in the United States since October, 1919, on a final mission to the Haitian Government, prolonged his stay in America, detained by the unmountable difficulties in the accomplishment of his mission (the securing of a loan on the New York market). Since on the other hand, the Haitian Government could not overcome these difficulties, and on the other hand, the Haitian Government at Port au Prince was absolutely necessary for the preparation of the budgets in conformity with the constitution and the Haitian-American Convention, the Haitian Government deemed it essential to ask him to return to Port au Prince for this purpose. The Government in so doing secured the good services of the financial adviser, and Mr. McIlhenny returned from the United States on the 1st of June. The legislature had already been in session since the 1st of May.

About June 15 the adviser began the study of the budgets. The conference lasted about 12 days and in the course of this time, after some cuts, modifications, and discussions, the following budgets were agreed upon:

1. Ways and means.
2. Foreign relations.
3. Finance and commerce.
4. Interior.

On Monday, July 12, 1920, at 3.30, the hour agreed upon for the meeting of the ministers and the adviser, the ministers met to continue the study of the budgets, which they wanted to finish quickly * * *.

Between 4 and 5 o'clock the secretary of finance received a letter from the adviser which read: "I find myself obliged to stop all study of the budgets for the present. The study of the budgets is of considerable importance for the welfare of the country and the Haitian Government, and I have finally settled according to the recommendations made by the Haitian Government."

"Please accept, Mr. Secretary, the assurance of my respect."

Such an unanticipated and unjustifiable decision on the part of the financial adviser, an official attached to the ministry of finance, caused the Haitian Government profound surprise and warranted dissatisfaction. * * *

On July 13 the department of finance replied to the adviser as follows:

"I beg to acknowledge your letter of July 12, in which you state that you are obliged, etc. * * *"

To the SECRETARY OF FINANCE:

I have the honor to inform you that I have been instructed by the Government of Haiti in view of the continual delay in obtaining the consent of the Government to the transfer to the new bank of the management agreed upon between the Government of the United States and the City Bank, the Government of the United States has authorized the National Bank of the Republic of Haiti to continue the French contract at present existing without amendment.

I desire urgently to draw your attention to the fact that it is desirable in the interest of the Haitian people that the Government should give its immediate consent to the proposed modification and to accept the transfer of the bank rather than to continue to continue with its present clauses.

Jo

Mr. ANGELL. I would like to introduce at this time a protest, made direct to President Wilson, dated August 9, 1919. (The communication referred to is to be filed with the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Continue, Mr. Pilkington.

Mr. PILKINGTON. In connection with complaints concerning the financial adviser, it is well to record—

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. McIlhenny?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Yes. It is well to record a reiteration of the Government of Haiti that their constitutional body for the management of the counting of moneys, called the Chambre des Comptes, in the occupation, the Government of Haiti, therefore, cannot be responsible for no means whatever of knowing or of keeping track of— the French language, the expenditures of the country, all of which are left entirely in the hands of the individual who at the present time occupies the position of financial adviser.

Another very large element of annoyance, at least among the business interests of Haiti, has been occasioned by the change of the customs tariff. When the receiver general and his assistants came into office they found in existence a schedule of tariffs, which had been in existence for many years and under which they operated. This tariff is explained by the Haitian Government as being a tariff having never been revised by themselves and never been in a normal condition.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that at no time was the H

TON. I mean they had not as yet brought that up to date. They did it as time went on to keep it in line. I will show several instances. This tariff is in many particulars practically obsolete in its details. Take the specific case of automobiles, there is no more vital or urgent to business in Haiti or to progress than the automobile.

AN. To what extent were they used before the occupation?

TON. Before the occupation there was no business at all, and I think the automobile was there at all before the occupation.

AN. You mean it was not possible to use automobiles before the occupation?

TON. No; it was not possible. You see, the automobile now is used, over the few roads that they have and almost entirely for military purposes, and, of course, for military purposes.

AN. You mean there were no roads before the occupation?

TON. No; not to amount to anything.

AN. So it would be immaterial whether the tariff permitted their use or not?

TON. Yes; but at that time, as I was going on to say, the carriage was the vehicle, and that was not a vehicle of commerce, but distinctly a vehicle and was, therefore, charged with a high rate of duty. When custom officials applied the rates, as contemplated by this tariff, and that together with various surcharges and surtaxes, which the Government has from time to time put on the original taxes, the importation of an automobile of any kind into Haiti cost practically 28 per cent duty.

AN. The receiver general and his representatives enforced the tariff existing?

TON. Did they enforce them?

AN. They did when they collected that 28 per cent?

TON. Oh, yes; they enforced them; indeed, they did.

AN. What would you have had them do?

TON. Do just that; but I am going on to that still. This rate was based upon the clause of the tariff schedule referring to pleasure vehicles. It has been the subject for frequent complaints, and it has been proposed many times by various people to reduce this to 10 per cent.

AN. Another instance which will also illustrate the idiosyncracies of this tariff. It is a fact that in purchasing hardware articles, or when confronted with an almost infinite scale of prices charged by shopkeepers. On looking into this matter I was shown a specific instance in Port au Prince, in which he presented as exhibits the bill of lading of a great gross of small screw eyes, such as are used in hanging pictures by. The name in French of such a screw eye is a piton. His bill of lading these were called piton pour tableaux, screw eyes. His bill showed that he had paid for his great gross of screw eyes and he paid a duty on these insignificant screw eyes of more than the total cost of a great gross of screw eyes to over $10, the same as a bill for 5 and 10 cent store six for a nickel.

AN. In connection with the question, I was shown the tariff schedule applying to piton or hooks for awnings, appearing in the schedule as pitons. These are hand-forged hooks, which are driven into the wall.

AN. I think we will take your word for it that there are these in the tariff. Now, will you tell me what the receiver general did to remove them?

TON. This instance was merely illustrative of many incongruities in the tariff schedule which have brought forth much friction and much added to the receiver general and the collector.

AN. Why was there no friction before the receiver general was appointed?

TON. That would come in the inside politics of Haiti before I get to that.

AN. You did not arrive until the occupation?

TON. No.

AN. Had you ever heard that the duties were enforced according to the tariff on the several collectors of the various ports?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Such a condition I am led to believe throughout, perhaps, the entire history of Haiti.

The CHAIRMAN. The foreign importer in Haiti was not the tariff, then, until the receiver general applied it equally.

Mr. PILKINGTON. That is a fact.

Mr. ANGELL. In this very connection I would like to mention a letter from the American minister in Port au Prince, Government, dated August 19, in which the demand is made that the Government shall immediately repeal certain laws, one of which is on motor vehicles, and the reply thereto of the Haitian Government, the same date, the 21st of August, in which it appears, if the statements be true, that on May 14, 1919, the Haitian Government, operating through the conseil d'etat, the legislature had voted a law fixing a low duty on automobiles imported. The receiver objected to by the American receiver general, on the grounds that the duties were too low, and he then proposed a duty of 10 per cent. The Haitian authority, consisting of the conseil d'etat, brought down the duty to 7 per cent; that thereafter the American legation, the financial adviser general, refused to acknowledge or admit the validity of the law because it did not meet apparently their wishes, and they insisted on a tax of 20 per cent on automobiles.

(The correspondence referred to is on file with the clerk.)

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean that, in the first instance, the receiver general demanded a reduction of duties while by inference at least the Haitian Government objected to it?

Mr. ANGELL. The minister demanded and the receiver general objected to the low duty was too low.

The CHAIRMAN. The minister's letter demanded a reduction of duties.

Mr. ANGELL. No, sir; he demanded the repeal of the law.

Mr. PILKINGTON. I may say for your information that the receiver general reduced to 7 per cent a large importation of automobiles from America who paid the duty of 7 per cent on automobiles. A long time subsequent to that the customhouse, the receiver general, or whoever was the competent authority, demanded that the importer should pay the difference, which, as I say, totalled 13 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, if you will give us the instances of conflict between the receiver general and the financial adviser, any between either or both of those and the American minister, we are interested.

Mr. PILKINGTON. Well, I can not give you any of those instances, but I know they worked in complete accord.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought that some time ago you said that the receiver general had asked for an amendment to the tariff act, and the financial adviser objected.

Mr. PILKINGTON. No; I did not say that. I say the receiver general, Maumus, said to me that at many times he had requested a revision of that tax. Now, I do not know that he did it, but I suppose that, of course, the financial adviser—

The CHAIRMAN. So far as you know, there is a close cooperation between the American authorities?

Mr. PILKINGTON. So far as I know, there is, in that respect, and furthermore, and I would like to have it go on the record, that I have never had any instance had the slightest intimation that there has been any infraction of honesty in any way, shape, or manner in the American occupation. That is quite important, because that is the thing; and if the Haitians do not even bring up any complaint, that means that it does not exist; and if there was any infraction, I would tell it.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as you know, the legation, the receiver general, and the office of the financial adviser have cooperated?

Mr. PILKINGTON. As far as I know, that is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. Have those civil officers been able to maintain cordiality with the commandant of the gendarmerie and the marines?

ON. No; there is a very evident conflict between the different coordinated elements of the American occupation.

N. Now, if you will just answer my question, I will put my point.

ON. All right, let us cut that out, then.

N. I asked the question regarding the relations between these authorities, and you answered that they cordially cooperated, so far

ON. As far as I know, they have.

N. I asked then if there was equally cordial cooperation between the military officers or the commandant of the marines and that of the gendarmerie, and I understood you to say no.

ON. No; there apparently is not.

N. Can you give instances of friction or a lack of cooperation, general impression?

ON. That is more a general impression. I can cite one case very serious. It is said and generally believed in Port au Prince immediately after the protest of the business people of Haiti against the enforcing of the President's signature, Col. Russell, the American representative—

N. Enforcing his signature of what?

ON. Of this clause granting a monopoly on the importation of the National Bank of Haiti. Col. Russell is said to have been incensed at being implicated in this attempted forcing of his signature, and to have remarked that he would never take action without the authority of his superior officer.

N. Do you feel that there should be a single chief and responsibility for the American officials in Haiti?

ON. I was going to take that up in detail in a suggested plan

N. If you will answer my question—

ON. I will certainly do that, and any number of them. I am not sure of some such method, in principle, is the only way to carry out the occupation of Haiti.

N. In short that military, administrative functions, civil actions, in so far as Americans have to do with them, diplomatic relations between the American and the Haitian Governments—all should be under the principal American representative in Haiti?

ON. I would say yes to that, with the possible amendment of the functions of a minister or an ambassador to a country should be limited, but strictly within their definite legal limitations, and that

N. Have you any precedents in mind where over any considerable foreign Government has been represented by a diplomatic agent who was independent of the administrative agents lent under authority of the Government by which they were employed?

ON. I have not in just that form; no.

N. The precedents are the other way, are they not?

ON. They are; yes; but I believe, after a careful study of the situation of the Haitian people in particular, that such a contemplated arrangement would immediately fall into a certain phase of their psychology, mentally antagonistic to them. They, primarily and fundamentally, this absolute, deep-rooted antagonism to the mere thought of the control of affairs by even one individual. Now, the vesting of administrative functions which ordinarily are carried out along a certain line and which they well know, in a person who also has more or less to do in the way of advice, over civil functions, would look to them as military control.

N. Then let me ask you this: Conceive that the minister made known to the Haitian Government which the principal administration was being conducted by the President of the United States declined to enter into, would you deal with that anomaly?

ON. The way I would meet that, my idea of that whole problem, I mentally say would be this: Let us say for the purpose of argument suspend, not abrogate, the treaty—

The CHAIRMAN. Upon what assumption do you say that?
Mr. PILKINGTON. On the assumption of this plan which you must remember that the radicals are demanding a treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you consider that as being with possibility?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Well, I think what I say later will prove.
The CHAIRMAN. Go ahead.

Mr. PILKINGTON. We will look at it in this way, because that at the present time they are, from the ground up, a thing. Now, the policy, I am quite sure, worth considering. United States to apparently, at least, put the entire responsibility up to Haiti. Now, the way that could be done—

The CHAIRMAN. What would you do with the loan just now?

Mr. PILKINGTON. That will have to be attended to, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you a plan worked out?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Yes; that is what I refer to.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you reduce it to the form of a report and give it to the committee?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I will, indeed; I will be very glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I would rather you would do that.

Mr. PILKINGTON. All right; we will not mention it in the thought of doing such a thing.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not believe I would go into an error.

Now, let me ask you another question. What, in your opinion, would happen if we abrogated the treaty, withdraw the customs marines, and left no one there except the receiver general?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I take it for granted that you mean a treaty over which the receiver general has jurisdiction; otherwise the receiver general would not be left there.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, he would be there under the present treaty. There are precedents for that.

Mr. PILKINGTON. Could you abrogate the treaty and negotiate without another agreement? Anyhow, I gather what you consider a condition utterly impossible at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I do not conceive of the possibility of doing so in that country at the present day getting together with the bankers to produce a form of government which would satisfy the bankers with whom I am associated at the present time. The bankers, ways, and who were associated with me in this company, considering the floating of that loan, the original loan, well, of course, that I would be the ultimate court of decision, and if they would ask my opinion I would instantly, under any condition, advise the investing of one cent in the occupation such as you have predicated.

The CHAIRMAN. In which merely the customs would be under an American officer?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean that it is not possible to be aided, at this time successfully to maintain order and to have a government?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Absolutely. There is no question about it. In connection I might say that I have definitely been told by the Haitians in practically just so many words.

The CHAIRMAN. Would they avow that publicly?

Mr. PILKINGTON. They would without doubt, I have no doubt, very glad to give a list of the names of the leading people.

The CHAIRMAN. I said publicly, because it has been said by Haitian business men who hold that opinion privately and not publicly.

Mr. PILKINGTON. I think I would like to cover that subject along with some other things. I have that perfectly well.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you believe that if the American occupation, so called, military and civil, were coordinated to a single chief, and that if the occupation undertaken not only the discharge of its duties under the terms of the agreement to secure the good will and accord of the Haitians, that at the end of a year or two they can secure that cooperation and accord from the Haitians?

STON. I would willingly and freely stake everything on the state they would, under the condition of confidence, supreme confidence, and equal to whom you refer; but the crux of that whole thing is whether which you maintain that military supervision, we will say—without the word "control," because if you use the word "control" it is off.

MAN. You believe, then, that the centralization of responsibility is STON. Yes.

MAN. But you believe that it is no less necessary to find the right post of chief responsibility?

STON. That is your only chance of success. Everything depends on Latin race and the Latin temperament demand a direct personal touch which can be furnished by nothing else.

MAN. Are there any men who have served there—Americans—who are necessary to fill that place?

STON. Well, I do not recall anybody who has ever been in any official capacity there that really ought to be intrusted with that. I hope that if you can get under the skin, we will say, of certain people, that they will enlighten you to a very large extent on that

MAN. In your judgment, ought the present officials, Maumus and others, to remain in the service or not?

STON. I would not have any objection, and I think no Haitian would have any objection to the retention of Mr. Maumus. Although he is from the State of so-called nigger haters, he is a man who has very much to do to his duty as he has seen it, and has not meddled with anything which has been handicapped by this absurd tariff. He has never openly been troubled on the self-pride of the Haitians, but it is my earnest hope that, although I have the highest regard for the ability of Col. Williams, the personalities of both him and Mr. McIlhenny, I am absolutely certain that either of those three men—

MAN. You have only named two.

STON. Yes; but I am going on to say that as long as Col. Russell, Mr. McIlhenny, the financial adviser, who has arranged the occupation; Mr. McIlhenny, the financial adviser, who has arranged the occupation; Mr. Bailly-Blanchard, the three who are in the minds of the Haitians, their greatest sanctity of government—as long as they are retained there, in whatever form, you are in trouble. Further back in the record I have explained why, and I am sure that insult was brought to these people, and is not explained, and I am sure that it may be true, and until they are either explained or—

MAN. Let me continue on in my own way, because we will have to wait a few minutes.

STON. I will be very glad to.

MAN. Is there no American officer who has served in a place of military or civil, in which he came into close contact with the Haitians, and has their good will or who left the island with their good will?

STON. There is Col. Wise. He is the one we all have in mind. He is the head of the gendarmerie.

MAN. From the beginning?

STON. Not from the beginning; no.

MAN. I have here the names of four gendarmerie commanders—Mr. Wise, and McDougal.

STON. He is the present commander.

MAN. Do you care to pass any comment on any others than Wise?

STON. I have no direct personal knowledge of the administration of Col. Wise, and I have a very large fund of—

MAN. Were you there during Williams's time?

STON. No; I was there since 1918.

MAN. That was from May 1, 1918, to July, 1919?

STON. Well, nothing special was heard of him.

MAN. Butler was before that time.

Mr. PILKINGTON. The opinions of the people themselves are necessary in this thing. As regards the people themselves, there is no question but that they apparently tolerated has been Wise thought of there. When it comes to a question of Wise the responsibilities and the native constabulary, we will have to which I would be very loath to decide offhand.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that in a revised scheme of single, coordinated responsibility should rest in the hands of a military man, or in the hands of a civilian?

Mr. PILKINGTON. Absolutely a civilian. If there is any capacity whatsoever his function will have to be fully disguised in definite collaboration and suggestion with himself that he does not appear as a marine officer.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee reassembled at 2.30 o'clock p. m., pursuant to recess.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, Mr. Pilkington, let me ask you whether you think that the military forces of the United States would, in your opinion, be wise for the future in Haiti?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I believe a mutually satisfactory arrangement could be made in collaboration with the Haitians whereby an adequate gendarmerie or national army, to maintain law and order, could be put into being my belief here reiterated that any form of force imposed by the United States will be resented.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you believe that law and order can be maintained necessary to protect the collection of Haitian customs duties might be pledged for existing or future loans, and to protect foreign capital in Haiti, by a native force?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I think it is possible.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that that is a possibility in the then what period of time and under what form of transition?

Mr. PILKINGTON. It is my opinion that an organization of a national army, as previously existing in Haiti, could, with the aid and in connection with the existing gendarmerie, become a force for the purposes you mention in a period of two years after the establishment of a constitutional assembly and Government in Haiti.

Mr. ANGELL. What do you mean in your answer with reference to transition with the existing gendarmerie?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I mean that in this question, as in the case of the loan, the issue is going to Haiti with the avowed intention of bringing about an essential desideratum, namely, a condition of mutual confidence and agreed upon plan of collaboration in general which, in connection with a definite agreement by the United States Government, would be completely withdrawn from Haiti, such withdrawal to be completed within a period defined by satisfactory guaranty from the United States Government and people as to stability. If a loan is desired, a mutually satisfactory guaranty must be furnished by the Haitian Government for this loan.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that the loan could be secured from the point of view of investors and the United States Government during the life of the loan all our military forces and our military equipment would be withdrawn from Haiti?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I feel that any guaranty as to the stability of the Government which would satisfy your committee would be sufficient, provided some nominee of the investor—that is, a man who supplies the loan—be empowered to control the Government.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you think that the control of the customs and the revenue would be sufficient guaranty to the investor and to this Government?

Mr. PILKINGTON. In connection with the guaranty of the United States to maintain the program as set out above.

Mr. ANGELL. Then, if I understand you correctly, you would require sufficient guaranty of the Haitian Government and the United States Government for general control over the customs by the United States, and sufficient control of Haitian affairs to satisfy the investor and the United States Government?

GRON. I do; and in that connection I would like to call attention to the external loan. French investors took up that loan freely at a time when Haiti had no such assurance of internal stability as she has now, and they not in connection with that loan have control over the customs and the treasury.

Q. How long a period do you think, in your judgment, would be required to build up an independent native Haitian police or military force capable of maintaining law and order?

GRON. I have already testified to that.

Q. No; the period of time.

GRON. Two years; but that two years must begin after they have established a new Government and a representative constitutional assembly.

Q. Would it be your idea, then, that during this two year period you have suggested, the American military forces, at present the only ones, should be gradually withdrawn, and the Americans who are now in Haiti, the gendarmerie should be gradually supplanted by native forces?

GRON. I do, that point being already agreed in the treaty, as far as the military force is concerned.

Q. Will you state what you believe to be the minimum requirements for a Commissioner to represent the United States with the Haitian Government?

GRON. May I interrupt on this? Before we leave the last branch of the treaty, Mr. Pilkington, what satisfactory guarantee of stability by the Haitian Government do you suggest?

GRON. I should expect to obtain from the various political factions in Haiti, including the present Government, and the Union Patriotique, a declaration of intention to collaborate, and, as far as possible, hold themselves responsible to execute whatever measures may be necessary and advisable for the organization of such a military body as has been before mentioned, and to reform the present unsatisfactory court system and legal procedures in Haiti, so that the laws may be in such a form that they may be easily executed, in order to maintain a condition of law and order, and to be maintained. In other words, the Haitian people, and their Government, to conduct the frank and open manner in which they are being approached by the American Government, through your committee, must, and will, be equally frank and equally open in proof of the claims they so justly make, and so widely make.

Q. On what do you base your belief that the courts can satisfactorily maintain the law?

GRON. The courts in Haiti are presumably operating in conformity with the code of Napoleon, which is, as we know, a perfectly satisfactory code of laws for people of that race and temperament. There is a large number of well-trained lawyers in Haiti, who have, as I have previously testified, not only a good Haitian law education, but have education resulting from studies in Europe. These men, I am perfectly confident, if protected in their various functions, bring about a state of law and order and reform in the courts.

Q. Is there anything before the time of the American occupation to which you have no confidence of yours?

GRON. Yes. The history of former administrations in Haiti, as it is, in connection with the actual viva voce accounts of those administrations, is the only basis upon which one might judge that question, shows that Haiti has had chief executives who have shown not only ability and energy, but a strong desire for law and order and for everything that would lead to a better government.

I will again state, as I have heretofore put in the testimony, that the present time Haiti has in the person of Sudre Dartiguenave an administrator whom I feel any nation might be proud. Whatever may be the facts in connection with the incident referred to in previous testimony, that is the incident leading up to the stoppage of the pay of the army, that took an attitude which, in the light of facts existing at the time, was a gross ordering on heroism.

Q. Do you not believe that it is highly important for the population of Haiti to have safely and honestly administered lower courts from which the people sometimes derive their only knowledge of the courts? Is not that so?

GRON. Yes.

cers and enlisted men of the Marine Corps, stationed in Haiti, anxious to state that as regards their true and legitimate interests, they have proved themselves to be as good and efficient a branch of the army as have ever in my experience been acquainted with. All kinds of kind or condition in any part of the world, banded together, and required, whether justly or unjustly, to undertake work which is out of their line, will at times do things which are not especially commendable, and which they are doing if allowed to confine their efforts to the normal.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Pilkington, all through your testimony you have emphasized very strongly the necessity for cooperation between the Haitians with the Americans in any future work to be done there. I want to ask you frankly whether you believe that such an operation can be secured which you say is necessary to the success of all due respect to the plans of the committee and the Haitians, if the committee spends a period of only a few days, as at Port au Prince, and a few more days in the other parts of the country.

Mr. PILKINGTON. No; I am quite confident that there is a mutually satisfactory status in any such time as that as long as it is necessary that they limit their time in any such way, and that it will be highly desirable that they in some way either continue to work or they would come back again, or resume with those same negotiations in this country, because, to cover any one of these quite considerable ceremonies, which those people are very fond of, inasmuch as they, without any question at all, now bring up a great time in their relations with the United States of America, and have in their midst an actual, fair representative body of the people, intellectuals, empowered to do something, and with the intelligence and willingness to achieve this result at whatever time it may be necessary.

Mr. ANGELL. Your answer seems to imply, possibly, a misunderstanding of what the function and powers of this committee are in Haiti. It is not, if I understand the purpose correctly, to negotiate with the Haitian Government or with the Haitian representatives, but the question of the occupancy and administration of the Republic is the question of the forces and representatives. Now, bearing in mind that at least my understanding of the purpose and intention of the committee is to Haiti, and looking ultimately only and exclusively to the Senate of the United States, do you believe that there is any question of cooperation on the part of Haitians in the future, or a period of time as I have indicated only be devoted to Haiti?

Mr. PILKINGTON. I am quite sure that it is physically, absolutely necessary for practically complete harmony between the Haitians to assemble from different parts of Haiti. I am sure that the majority of representative Haitians will be in the country to greet you, there will be undoubtedly some who will have to be excused after you have arrived, and whose moral support will be extremely necessary. There also will be public functions, and the committee will be expected in diplomatic form to take part in the course, their own masters as to what they do or what they do not. I think that invitations they will accept or what they will not accept, and that they will retain functions which, in my opinion, every Haitian will accept as a form of the undoubted respect and the undoubted confidence which the people have toward this committee which is now going to Haiti. I think, of course, suggest, which is already without any doubt in the minds of the committee and in the plans of the Haitians, the ability and advisability of conforming very strictly to the diplomatic usages in reference to the existing Government. I think only will show the real respect due to the actual Haitian Government who has been at all times loyal to his originally stated good intentions, but such action on the part of the committee, that if they, in turn, come into power and are true to their word, the best to maintain a form of government agreeable and acceptable to the peoples, they, in their turn, will be granted such prefer-

REPORT ON THE OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Port au Prince, Haiti.

Committee met, pursuant to the call of the chairman, at 2 o'clock p. m.,
American Legation, Port au Prince. Senator Medill McCormick presiding.
Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, Pomerene, and Jones.
Present: Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, counsel for the committee; Mr. Ernest representing the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society, the Nation for the Advancement of Colored People, and the Union Patrio-

MAN. Mr. Angell, if you are ready I will call the committee to order for announcement.

On the presence of Senators Pomerene, Oddie, and McCormick. published in Port au Prince, on the 24th of November, a communiappeared both in English and in French and which in part reads English:

"It is necessary to state that a committee of the Senate is the judge of the competence of the testimony which it admits to its records.
The committee seeks the calm and reasonable judgment of those who come competent to offer opinion upon the problem which it is studying and, an unbiased and unclouded statement of substantiated and proven facts who desire to state such facts.

The committee deems it unnecessary any further to assure the security of forming to these standards, as it does to deny that it would in undone perjury."

He then proceeded to interpret the French text of what I have just read, read, with that which has already appeared.

He then read the following:)

"Il est nécessaire de dire que la commission Senatoriale est juge du de la compétence des témoignages qu'elle admettra dans ses records.
Elle recherche les jugements calmes et raisonnables de ceux qui oser devant eux, compétent d'offrir une opinion sur les problèmes nents, et sous serment et une déclaration sans parti pris re faits appui par ceux qui désirent déclarer de tels faits.

"Elle pense qu'il n'est pas nécessaire d'assurer davantage les témoignaments de toute sécurité conformément à ces réglementations et aussi il ne fermera pas ses yeux et ne laissera pas passer des parju-

MAN. Are there witnesses to appear before the committee?

A. There are, sir. I desire to state that having only landed this morning we have had very little opportunity to interrogate the witnesses in advance not been able to go into the details of their testimony which I will report.

STATEMENT OF MR. JOSEPH VICTOR DELERME, LAWYER, AUX

Mr. ANGELL. Now continue.

Mr. DELERME. A company has been founded since 1885 days ago in the magazine of Robert Dutton & Co.

Mr. ANGELL. At Aux Cayes?

Mr. DELERME. At Aux Cayes. The company actively v

He asked me why I would be contented. I answered him that there was no complaint coming to Port au Prince and that I would come and see him if I had any complaint there. He left his desk with these words, "I will see you."

He made a motion toward me with his whip in his hands. He held the whip in front of his mouth and said words in English that I didn't understand. I pushed the whip out of the way and left him in the corner and the opposite corner went to sit down.

Q. MERENE. Let me ask a question there. The witness said that he saw him in the evening this lieutenant was under the influence of liquor. Is the witness claiming that he was under the influence of liquor at this time? Was he about midnight?

A. MERENE. He was drunk that night, and it was his habit to be drunk.

Q. MAN. "I don't know if he was drunk later."

A. MERENE. He left his corner where he was and came over to me. He held the whip in his mouth that time with his whip. With my hand I took the head of the whip and also hit him in the mouth. With his right hand, which was the same as such an awful blow in the back of the neck that I fell into the arms of the gendarmes who were there. Immediately he gave orders to put me in prison.

I told him that he was a coward, because if he was not a coward he would not take advantage of being armed and having the gendarmes with him. I even told him that if he was a man he would only have to fight me and I would show him that I would give him back the blows that he gave me. When I went down into the street after having been ordered to go, I found there Emile Sendral, Henri Sendral, Antoine Ferrez, and Albert, all of whom accompanied me to prison. It was 3 o'clock in the afternoon. By good luck I found in Port au Prince Mr. Henri Sendral. He told me what he saw, if he did not see me taken to the prison at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, if he did not accompany me to the prison with the gendarmes. He said the cell was so narrow that I could not walk 3 paces.

Q. MERENE. In the afternoon the préfet of the arrondissement went to find me to release me from prison. They came to the prison Sunday, the 7th, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. They told me that Lieutenant Clermont wanted to see me to take a drink with me at his house. It was understood that he would liberate me. I refused to drink with him under those conditions, saying that he could leave me for 20 years under those conditions. I told me Sergt. Max Raymond, who was in charge of the prison, to take me to his house. I answered him that he could only carry me to his house by means of 20 gendarmes.

Q. MERENE. At 7 o'clock at night Sergt. Raymond and Lieut. Kinney first came to shake hands with me. I answered him by way of those people that I would not give him my hand. I told him that I would not give him mine.

Q. MERENE. On Sunday at 7.15 in the evening, I was granted my liberty; I was re-proposed to the magistrate communal and the préfet to permit the fire department.

Q. MERENE. Was there any trial of the charge against the witness?

A. MERENE. No.

Q. MERENE. It was dismissed without trial?

A. MERENE. He said no complaint was filed against him at that time.

Q. MERENE. Answer the question. Let me ask another question: Did you make any report to this officer's superior?

A. MERENE. Yes.

Q. MERENE. To whom and when?

A. MERENE. This happened on Sunday, and by the post on Monday I wrote to the president of the Republic and to the chief of the gendarmes.

Q. MERENE. Who was the chief of the gendarmes?

A. MERENE. Gen. McDougall.

Q. MERENE. Was there any complaint lodged against you at the time of your arrest?

A. MERENE. Never.

Q. MERENE. That is all.

Q. MAN. I have no further questions to ask the witness. Are you satisfied?

A. MERENE. Who, if anybody, was present in the office of the gendarmerie when you were there for the day after the company was drilling? Who was in the gendarmerie when you arrived with Lieut. Clermont?

Mr. DELERME. Lieut. Clermont and First Sergt. Liatu his interpreter. But in the street there were people who them Mr. Henri Sendral, who is present here. We talked

TESTIMONY OF MR. MARC DUCHESNE, PLANTER, HINCHE, HAITI.

L. What is your name?

SNE. Marc Duchesne.

L. Where do you live?

SNE. Hinche; at the bottom of Hinche.

L. How long have you lived there?

SNE. I have lived there 14 years.

L. What is your occupation?

SNE. I am a planter; a cultivator.

L. Were you living in Hinche in October, 1917?

SNE. Oh, yes.

L. What were you doing at that time?

SNE. In the month of October I worked.

L. Were you married?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; I was married.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have a farm of your own?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you own this plantation at this time?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you working on that plantation during that time?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; I worked.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell us very briefly the events during the 10th and 11th of October, 1917, at Hinche?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes. I found myself in my house in Hinche at 10 o'clock in the evening; my wife was sick. I went to the house at Port au Prince. He was at Hinche at that time. I told him that my wife was sick.

Mr. ANGELL. On the 10th and 11th of October, who was the gendarmerie commandant at Hinche?

Mr. DUCHESNE. It was Capt. Doxey. When I told him that my wife was sick, he examined my wife. He told me to return to his office, he gave me remedies. I took the doctor at his house and went to my house. Arriving there at midnight—I took the remedies to give to my mother. I heard some noise—

Mr. ANGELL. When you say you gave it to your mother, did you give it to her to prepare for your wife?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes. Immediately I heard a noise in my house.

Mr. ANGELL. How far was your house from Capt. Doxey's house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Thirty paces distant.

Mr. ANGELL. What was that noise, if you know?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I heard the sound of rocks hitting on the wall of the quarter. I stayed in my house without going out.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear any shot?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And from where did these shots come, if you know?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No, no.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you remain then at your house from the 10th to the 11th? Did you come back the second time from the doctor's until the 11th?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes. I did not go out. I stayed in my house all night.

Mr. ANGELL. What happened on the following morning?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The next day after, at 6 o'clock in the morning, I came to my house.

Mr. ANGELL. What did he say?

Mr. DUCHESNE. He told me that Capt. Doxey asked me to go to the gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you do?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I went immediately to the bureau of the gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. Whom did you find there?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I found Capt. Doxey and Sergt. Beck.

Mr. ANGELL. What did Capt. Doxey say to you?

Mr. DUCHESNE. He said, "Have you heard all of this during the night?"

Mr. ANGELL. What did you say?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I answered him yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What did the captain say in reply to your answer? What conversation took place between you?

Mr. DUCHESNE. After answering him "yes," he asked me to go to the gendarmerie and bring him my help.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you say?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I answered him that it was not prudent to go at that time.

Mr. ANGELL. Give the rest of the conversation briefly.

Mr. DUCHESNE. It was just as I told you.

Mr. ANGELL. Continue. Then what happened after that?

Mr. DUCHESNE. After I told him it was not prudent to go, he asked me if I could tell him where he could find the gendarmerie. I answered him that Saul Peralte could then making a survey. Capt. Doxey knew that Saul could be placed very well. He then asked me if I could give him some one and Saul Peralte for him. I then answered him that Saul Peralte was, who would go and find him for him.

Q. Do you know the name of this son-in-law?

ANS. Yes; he is called Phenix Woolley. So he made Phenix go to the bureau of the gendarmerie, and he ordered him to go.

Q. Ordered whom? The witness?

ANS. No. Capt. Doxey ordered him to go and find his father-in-law.

Q. Did you see the gendarmes go to find Phenix Woolley?

ANS. No.

Q. Did you see this Phenix Woolley start?

ANS. From the bureau of the gendarmerie I saw him go.

Q. Then what did you do, briefly?

ANS. In the interval I stayed at the bureau of the gendarmerie.

Q. Until what time?

ANS. Until 10 o'clock in the morning.

Q. What day?

ANS. Thursday.

Q. The date, if you know it?

ANS. No. Thursday, the 11th of October.

Q. And what happened in the morning then at this time?

ANS. In the interval they called all of the citizens to the bureau.

Q. What happened then in the morning, at 6 o'clock in the morning?

ANS. At 6 o'clock I was at the bureau of the gendarmerie.

Q. Proceed with your story.

ANS. Capt. Doxey again asked for me, if I could tell him where Charles Peralte or Joseph.

Q. What did you reply?

ANS. I told him that these men could be found either in their habitation in the country.

Q. Did you see any gendarmes start out then, or hear any orders given to start out?

ANS. I heard the orders passed to the gendarmes to go and find Peralte and Joseph.

Q. Orders given by whom?

ANS. By Capt. Doxey.

Q. And where was this?

ANS. In the bureau of the gendarmerie.

Q. What time did you leave, then, the gendarmerie?

ANS. To go to my house.

MEBENE. Let me make a suggestion. What is it you intend to do?

Q. I am giving the events immediately preceding the arrest and of this man under which he worked for three years at forced labor.

MAN. Very well. Go ahead.

ANS. At 10 o'clock in the morning Capt. Doxey gave orders to all the gendarmes to go to their houses.

Q. Now come as quickly as possible to the facts of your arrest.

ANS. At 10 o'clock everybody went to their houses. At 1 o'clock a gendarme came and call me.

Q. Where were you at that time?

ANS. At my house.

Q. How long had you been there?

ANS. From 10 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock.

Q. What did the gendarme do?

ANS. He told me that the captain called for me.

Q. Did you go with the gendarme?

ANS. Yes. The gendarme said he was going to call other indi-

Q. What did you do then?

ANS. I immediately went to the bureau of the gendarmerie.

Q. Whom did you find there?

ANS. Again Capt. Doxey.

Mr. ANGELL. Any other marine or gendarmerie officer?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No. It was Capt. Doxey and his lieutenant.

Mr. ANGELL. What happened then?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Again Capt. Doxey asked me the same questions and I gave him the same answers to him. Immediately he ordered Sergt. prison.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear him give the order?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; it was in my presence, to my face.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was this order given?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The bureau of the gendarmerie.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you taken to prison then?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Immediately conducted to prison.

Mr. ANGELL. To prison where?

Mr. DUCHESNE. In Hinche.

Mr. ANGELL. How long did you remain in that prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I stayed 11 days.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there any written charge made against you?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know on what charge you were taken to these 11 days in the prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; even until now I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there others in prison with you at that time?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Arriving at the prison, I found Saul Peralte, Olegat Joseph, Orvil St. Vil, Lhomond St. Vil, and other notables of Hinche.

Mr. ANGELL. How many others were there?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Oh, I couldn't count them. There were more than the population.

Mr. ANGELL. How many were confined with you?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The prison was full. I didn't count them. 60. I can give you the names of those I know.

Mr. ANGELL. You say you remained 11 days in prison. What was the end of those 11 days?

Mr. DUCHESNE. After those 11 days—Monday, the 22d of October, in the morning—I saw open the door of the prison and the officers.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know who any of those officers were?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; I know some of their names.

Mr. ANGELL. Give them.

Mr. DUCHESNE. Maj. Ankrum.

Mr. ANGELL. Any others?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Capt. Torrey.

Mr. ANGELL. And what happened then?

Mr. DUCHESNE. These officers came with chains, handcuffs.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see these?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; with my own eyes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you taken then?

Mr. DUCHESNE. They called Saul Peralte, Charlamagne, and me. They chained us.

Mr. ANGELL. How?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The arms behind the back, like this [imitates].

Mr. ANGELL. Were you chained one to another?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; three together. Charlamagne Peralte in the middle, and me on the right.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you taken?

Mr. DUCHESNE. From Hinche to Ouanaminthe on foot.

Mr. ANGELL. And what was done with you when you got there?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Arriving Wednesday, the 24th of October, at night, they placed us in prison.

Mr. ANGELL. How long did it take you to go from Hinche to Ouanaminthe?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Three days.

Mr. ANGELL. You started on what day?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Monday, the 22d of October, at 6 o'clock.

Mr. ANGELL. You got there on Wednesday, the 24th?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The 24th, at 8 o'clock at night.

Now tell briefly what happened to you the night of your arrival in Ouanaminthe.

NE. At midnight the sergeant of the gendarmerie—

Do you know his name?

NE. No; I haven't got his name—came and got me.

You were still in the prison?

SNE. Yes; manacled—chained. This sergeant conducted me to use of Gen. Hooker.

Who was there?

NE. There was Col. Hooker and several other American officers.

Do you know the names of any of these other American officers?

SNE. Yes. There was Maj. Ankrum, Capt. Torrey, and Capt.

Any others?

NE. Lieut. Winfree.

How do you know the names of these officers?

NE. After I was prisoner for awhile I came to know their names.

Did you see these same officers afterwards?

NE. Yes.

Tell briefly what happened at the time with these officers.

NE. Arriving in the presence of these officers, Capt. Hooker asked

Do you refer now to Capt. Hooker or this Col. Hooker that you fore?

NE. No, no; Col. Hooker.

When you say "he" who do you mean?

NE. Col. Hooker.

What happened then?

NE. Then he interrogated us one after the other. When he was gating one prisoner he was sent back to the prison.

Were you condemned at that time in January, 1918, to a further ?

NE. Arriving in prison they placed me in a convict costume. The o'clock they put me out to work.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you ever tried, either in October 1918, before any military court or any Haitian court?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

 ESNE. No; no; never.

Mr. HOWE. When was the last time Col. Hooker interrogated you; January, 1918?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; January 18, 1918.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what day in January?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't remember.

Mr. HOWE. Was that in Col. Hooker's house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. In what town?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The town of Ouanaminthe.

Mr. HOWE. Was Charlemagne Peralte interrogated at the same time with you?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; but not together—separately.

Mr. HOWE. Were you present during the interrogation of Charlemagne Peralte?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; I was outside.

Mr. HOWE. Were you interrogated before or after Charlemagne?

Mr. DUCHESNE. After.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know what happened to Charlemagne?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. Was he sentenced to prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; he was dressed in convict costume like me.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether any charge was brought against Charlemagne?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; I don't know.

Mr. HOWE. Would you say that no charge was brought against Charlemagne?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; I don't know myself.

Mr. HOWE. Did you talk with Charlemagne after he was interrogated?

Mr. DUCHESNE. When we were dressed in convict costume we found each other in the same cell.

Mr. HOWE. Did Charlemagne tell you how long he was to go to prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether Charlemagne was convicted for attack on Capt. Doxey's house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. Do you know whether you were ever charged with attack on Capt. Doxey's house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. What was the name of the officer in charge of the prison at Ouanaminthe when you got there?

Mr. DUCHESNE. A sergeant of gendarmes, Elie Justin.

Mr. HOWE. What American officer was in charge of the prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; it was not an American.

Mr. HOWE. Was not there an American in charge of that prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. Was there during your three years in prison any American officer in command and charge at that prison?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Mr. HOWE. Did you see Col. Hooker or Capt. Torrey or Maj. Ankrum during the time you were in prison at Ouanaminthe?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes, sir; I very often saw Col. Hooker.

Mr. HOWE. Did you talk with him while you were in prison at Ouanaminthe?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No, no.

Mr. HOWE. I have no more questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he a man of property?

Mr. ANGELL. Have you a farm or any money?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I have my property at Hinche; yes. At this moment I have nothing. There is not anything that is left.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you still own your land at Hinche?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he ever make any complaint to the Haitian Government about his condition or his confinement?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No. When I had my provisional liberty I wrote to the President of Haiti and to the chief of the occupation.

Mr. ANGELL. Col. Russell is that?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know. To the chief of the occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you copies of your letters?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No. I never received a reply.

l. Did you write to the chief of occupation and to the President September, 1920?

ESNE. No; it was in November, I believe. I don't remember very MAN. Did you consult a lawyer about your difficulties?

ESNE. No, never.

NES. How long did that throwing of rocks and shooting continue if he was sick?

ESNE. About half an hour. From midnight till 12.30, then it was

NES. Were there many shots fired?

ESNE. No.

NES. How many?

ESNE. I don't know; I can't tell you.

MAN. Do you know who fired the shots or threw the rocks?

ESNE. No.

MAN. Did you hear who was charged with having committed these ESNE. When I was in prison in Hinche I found several inhabitants. Six; they continued them in prison together with the population. Inhabitants we understood it was a man named Gabriel who had head of several men that caused this brigandage.

NES. Did you hear any voices?

ESNE. No.

NES. Were any people killed?

ESNE. Yes; the day after in the morning. When I went to the gendarmerie I saw an individual dead at the side of the office of the

NES. Who was he?

ESNE. I don't know.

NES. Did he live there in that community?

ESNE. I can't tell you.

NES. Was he a Haitian or an American?

ESNE. A Haitian.

NES. How long had he been dead?

ESNE. I don't know.

NES. Did you hear when he was killed?

ESNE. No.

NES. Did you hear who killed him?

ESNE. No.

NES. Did you make any inquiries about those things?

ESNE. No; I was in prison since that time.

NES. Were you under arrest at that time, the next morning after ESNE. The firing was at midnight and I was arrested the same day, in the afternoon.

NES. You saw this man lying dead at 9 o'clock in the morning?

ESNE. At 6 o'clock in the morning in going from my house to the gendarmerie when the captain had called for me the first time.

NES. Then you saw that body?

ESNE. Yes; on the ground.

NES. And you never saw that man before?

ESNE. No.

NES. You don't know now who he was?

ESNE. No.

NES. You never made any inquiry about it?

ESNE. No.

NES. Was anyone else killed or wounded besides that man?

ESNE. Yes. Among the inhabitants there in prison there was one wounded.

NES. When was he wounded?

ESNE. I don't know.

NES. Did you ever inquire about that man?

ESNE. No.

NES. Who was he?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know his name.

Senator JONES. Did he live there in that town?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; it was an inhabitant from the country.

Senator JONES. How far from the town?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know his habitation. He was from the country.

Senator JONES. What was his name?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know his name.

Senator JONES. He was in prison with you and Peralte?

Mr. DUCHESNE. He was in prison but he was locked up in a cell. I not permitted to go and see him in his cell.

Senator JONES. He was arrested at the same time you were?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Senator JONES. When was he arrested?

Mr. DUCHESNE. He arrived in prison the day after, Friday.

Senator JONES. Arrived from where?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know.

Senator JONES. What was he charged with having done?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know.

Senator JONES. Where was he wounded? I mean at what place was wounded?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know very well.

Senator JONES. Was he wounded in the night at the colonel's house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No; I don't know.

Senator JONES. Was anyone else wounded at that time?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I don't know anything about it. It was him only. I see this man because he was in prison with me.

Senator JONES. How far were you from the colonel's house at the time the shooting was going on and the rocks were being thrown?

Mr. DUCHESNE. About 30 paces or so.

Senator JONES. Did you hear voices?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Senator JONES. Did you hear the rocks plainly? Did they make much noise?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Yes; I heard the rocks.

Senator JONES. And that kept up for half an hour?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Half an hour; yes.

Senator JONES. More or less how many shots did you hear fired?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I heard only several pistol shots, revolver shots, and from the house of Capt. Doxey.

Senator JONES. Oh, you were near enough to know where the rocks were being thrown from and where the shots were being fired from?

Mr. DUCHESNE. The rocks came thrown against the house.

Senator JONES. How do you know the shots were fired from the house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. In the house of Capt. Doxey it was easy to understand that.

Senator JONES. How do you know that the shots were being fired from the house of Capt. Doxey?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Because of the manner in which I heard the shots. It is not to find where shots are coming from when you hear them from the inside of the house.

Senator JONES. What was there about it that caused you to believe they were coming from the inside of the house?

Mr. DUCHESNE. By the sound of the echo. There are two different sounds. There is a difference in shots fired in the open air from one fired inside.

Senator JONES. Were you in bed when that firing commenced?

Mr. DUCHESNE. My wife was in bed, but I was on my feet in my room.

Senator JONES. Did you go to bed after the shooting was over?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Oh, yes.

Senator JONES. Did you go to sleep?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Senator JONES. You didn't hear any more noise during the night?

Mr. DUCHESNE. No.

Senator JONES. Why didn't you go to sleep?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I laid down but I couldn't sleep.

Senator JONES. At what hour did you get up in the morning?

Mr. DUCHESNE. I was up at 5.30.

Senator JONES. How close do you live to other people?

Mr. DUCHESNE. Several paces, 5 or 6 paces.

NES. There were several houses near yours?

ESNE. Yes.

NES. Did you talk to anybody during the morning about the occurrence that night?

ESNE. No.

NES. What time was it that you first talked with the officer on the morning of the occurrence?

ESNE. At 6 o'clock in the morning.

NES. Did he come to your house?

ESNE. No. By a gendarme who called me.

NES. Were you up when the gendarme came?

ESNE. I was sitting down drinking my coffee.

NES. Had you seen any of your neighbors around that morning?

ESNE. No; I didn't have time to see the neighbors.

NES. Were any other neighbors notified to come and talk with the ESNE. Yes.

NES. Did you talk with any of them?

ESNE. No.

NES. Did you inquire of any of these people as to who were thrown out of the house?

ESNE. No, no.

NES. Do you know now who threw the rocks at the house?

ESNE. Oh, it was Gabriel.

NES. Just one person threw those rocks at the house?

ESNE. No; he was at the head of several men.

NES. Where were those men from?

ESNE. They are from the arrondissement of Hinche.

NES. How did you find out that it was Gabriel?

ESNE. There were several inhabitants from the country were in the house. They were sent with me to Ouanaminthe. There were six.

NES. Did they tell you that Gabriel was in the party that night?

ESNE. Yes.

NES. Did they know who that man was that was killed?

ESNE. Oh, I don't know. I did not ask that.

L. I would like to make a general statement as to the difficulty of the situation here. Mr. Sylvain, the head of the Union Patriotique, is at the head of the table. It is not so much by way of specific testimony of specific facts that he wishes to make this brief statement. It is necessary to have him sworn, unless you wish to have him

MAN. Shall we hear him to-day?

L. It will only take 5 minutes.

(McCormick here resumed the chair.)

STATEMENT OF MR. GEORGES SYLVAIN, PORT AU PRINCE, HAITI.

N. Members of the commission, I am very pleased to be able to speak with you to-day. It is the first time since this morning that I have been given the opportunity. You will excuse me, because I had the regret of the manifestation that took place this morning; because I am a native of that party.

MEMBER. What party?

L. Because I was allied with that.

N. Because I am the administrative and the representative of the people. I profited by the circumstances to wish you welcome in the Union Patriotique, with the hope that the Haitian people will draw from the presence of the senatorial commission the greatest benefit from your presence in the future, and the recognition of the justice of their cause. On account of the brevity of the time that you are going to pass among us, we cannot but expect the greatest of good will bring before you all the witnesses present to you the justice of our cause. Those who would be most affected by you live a long way from this city in the country, where has been heavily the repression against the cacos.

statement, regardless of the fact whether they were or were not peaceful citizens, were confronted with the same intolerable situation, and that situation which was made by intimidation and terrorizing continues to exist even now. It is thus that it is almost impossible for bringing them here even on the eve of your arrival. The military occupation under the cover of the martial law, has prevented witnesses from coming, those who are disposed to do so.

Senator POMERENE. Who are the witnesses, and where are they located—these witnesses whom you say have been prevented by the martial law?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I will cite you most particularly the victims of the regime Hinche, Maissade, Los Caobas. I can not call to mind the names of a single one who was permitted to come here. I can not go into the detail and mention the names of 1 or 5 or 20 witnesses.

Senator POMERENE. Why, then, does he make the statement that the situation prevented their coming here?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I will give you, then, the sort of measures which were taken to prevent such people from coming here. I tell you that those are the measures of the general orders, or orders of the general, which are taken in this country. When an inhabitant has need of coming to Port au Prince it is necessary he ask permission, and this permission is not easily accorded to him. He finds on leaving his house several gendarmes, who interrogate him, who present to him all sorts of difficulties, and, even so, the road are not easy. The families who had the most means are ruined. To live at Port au Prince several days you must make expenditures. At this moment difficulties of communication with the capital for the country there are so great that to be remotely in communication with them it is necessary to send them a special messenger. Add to all this the tendency to false rumors, which they are in the position to control and which suffice to prevent them from leaving. It is impossible, then, when it is necessary, for us to present to you testimony of importance there, where the bulk of the atrocities were committed. We are compelled—

Senator POMERENE. Can you give the names of any single witness who asked permission of the occupation to come here and who was denied that permission?

Dr. SYLVAIN. It is not in that regard that I testified before the committee that the occupation had prevented the coming of witnesses. I have said that I have enumerated the conditions of all sorts. As I come to the direct question we have asked—foreseeing these different steps to prevent their coming—we have asked of the senatorial commission that it put through a general declaration to reassure that population and to convince it that if those who have suffered come to testify before the commission they would have nothing to fear when the commission has finally withdrawn and they would be themselves in the presence again of the same military authorities. The declaration did not arrive in season to facilitate the labors of the commission.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask another question, and I want a direct answer if I can get it. Do you know of any witness, and can you give him name who wants to come before this commission and who is not permitted to come?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I can say to the commission that we had a series of witnesses. The CHAIRMAN. That is not an answer to the question.

Senator POMERENE. Put that question again to him.

(The question was again put by the interpreter.)

Dr. SYLVAIN. Several witnesses were to have been brought; certain to Merese Woolley and Jean Gilles.

Senator POMERENE. Give their addresses.

The CHAIRMAN. What is their address?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Those men are at Hinche.

Senator POMERENE. Have you any statements made by them, or affidavits?

Dr. SYLVAIN. They have sent us depositions before a notary, which we have here to present. On the eve of your coming, when I went to the telegraph office, there was no communication with Hinche.

The CHAIRMAN. On what day did you go to the telegraph bureau?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I can not give you the exact day, but two or three days before the arrival of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. To what bureau did you go?

Dr. SYLVAIN. To the bureau of lands and telegraphs in Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. It is five minutes to 6. I think we had better receive the depositions and suspend until 9 a. m.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until 9 a. m. November 30, 1921.)

INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Port au Prince, Haiti.

Committee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 9 o'clock a. m., Senator [redacted] presiding.

Senators McCormick, Pomerene, Oddie, and Jones.

Present: Messrs. Walter Bruce Howe and Mr. Ernest Angell, in their capacities as heretofore indicated.

MCCORMICK. In order to correct inaccurate English and French ver-statement published in behalf of the committee under date of [redacted], 1921, I read the correct English and French versions of the statements as follows:

It is unnecessary to state that a committee of the Senate is the judge of the truth and the competence of the testimony which it admits to its committee seeks the calm and reasonable judgment of those who come competent to offer opinion upon the problem which it is studying, and,

an unbiased and unclouded statement of substantiated and proven facts who desire to state such facts.

Committee deems it unnecessary any further to assure the security conforming to these standards, as it does to deny that it would in anywise condone perjury."

Il n'est pas nécessaire de dire que la commission sénatoriale est juge du de la compétence des témoignages qu'elle admetta dans ses records.
Elle a recherché les jugements calmes et raisonnables de ceux qui se sont présentés devant eux, compétent d'offrir une opinion sur les problèmes posés, et, sous serment et une déclaration sans parti pris de faits et d'œuvres à l'appui par ceux qui ont désiré déclarer de tels faits.

Il ne pense qu'il n'est pas nécessaire d'assurer d'avantage les témoignages par tout de sécurité conformément à ces réglementations et aussi

MAN. The committee will come to order. You may proceed with the testimony of Mr. Angell.

TESTIMONY OF DR. GEORGE SYLVAIN, PORT AU PRINCE—Resumed.

DR. SYLVAIN. I told you at our meeting yesterday that we were unable to bring before the commission many of the witnesses which were very important to hear. At Port au Prince we have only a certain category of witnesses, being in the center of the country, we enjoy a little more than does the population of the interior. It is for this reason we brought you yesterday the witnesses in other localities, Mr. Delorme of Port-au-Prince, for example, was produced because it was the question of a recent war which proved that even until this moment the same procedure continues to bear upon our population in the provinces. We brought down here a former inhabitant of Hinche, because since he was at Port au Prince he was able to give you information upon things which occurred in that region.

MAN. Who was that witness?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Duchesne.

Dr. SYLVAIN. For the others, Mr. Boco was a witness at Port au Prince could give you information upon very grave facts relative to the burning of Port au Prince. I take this occasion to say to the commission a word about the attempts at intimidation, upon the terror which runs particularly in the regions of the northeast, and apropos of this I make allusion to certain culties which will prevent the populations of Hinche, Maissade, Les Caobas, Le La Source, St. Michel, Fort Liberte, from coming to Port au Prince. In addition to the great misery, which exists among this population, the treatment of the occupation or other hindrances which the agents of the occupation, particularly those who work as spies, have multiplied to hinder the sincere independent witnesses that arrive before the commission, I am unable, at the moment, to bring before the commission the precise facts to edify, because they were called unexpectedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Called unexpectedly, when? What?

The INTERPRETER. Because he was asked to produce them unexpectedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Asked by whom?

The INTERPRETER. The commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Does he mean this committee?

Mr. ANGELL. Can I explain your question to him, Senator? I don't think he understands.

(The interpreter spoke to the witness in French.)

Dr. SYLVAIN. Because of the requests made yesterday to designate the names of the persons.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness is a lawyer, isn't he?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been in the practice of the law here?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Since the age of 21 years, and I am now 54. I have a great number of house letters written from everywhere, telling me why witnesses don't come here.

The CHAIRMAN. Letters from whom?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The people who wish to give testimony, and who wish to see the witnesses come.

The CHAIRMAN. He said he has a letter from some one, as I understand.

The INTERPRETER. Letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, from whom are these letters? Who are the writers of them and their addresses?

Dr. SYLVAIN. They were written to me, and I will place them before the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, the letters themselves?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; read them.

Dr. SYLVAIN. It is very delicate to read before a public audience letters of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Witnesses must know the facts about which they are testifying here. We can not accept statements of that character and be content with them. What this committee wants are the facts in the case. We can not have with no predilections one way or the other, but we want the evidence.

Dr. SYLVAIN. I have so well understood that; I received letters to request the committee to go to these places.

The CHAIRMAN. What places?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Particularly those places that I designated just a moment ago. For this reason I wish particularly to draw the attention of the commission to the present insecurity of those who would have come to testify and who live in that country. There is no guaranty at all for them against the persecution which may be exercised against them, because of their testimony, after the departure of the commission of investigation. Up to the present moment no guaranty has not been given to them.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask a question there. I shall ask some other questions a little later on. Who of these witnesses says that he fears persecution if he comes before this committee?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I am going to read several lines of some letters that I have.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask. Does this whole letter pertain to this subject?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then read the whole letter. Or can the interpreter read it, I suggest the interpreter read it, and he can translate it to us as he reads.

IN. There are certain parts of the letter which do not concern this point, which do not need to be read before a public audience. The mass under the commission.

L. May I suggest, I have had an opportunity to examine one or two letters, some of them are very long, it would take a long time to read them to the committee. It is the intention of Mr. Sylvain to offer the letter to the committee, but reading only the parts that particularly

MAN. Very well. My objection is to taking an excerpt from a letter and reading it to this committee as though it were the whole of the letter. I would advise counsel here what a great injustice may be done to the committee by now misleading it may be to the committee.

L. He intends to file the whole of the letter with the committee—

MAN. Very well.

IN (reading):

My grand reflections of the things which have passed here at Fort Maitland, the unlimited atrocities which have been published and put into effect martial law, therefore I fear to take up the question of this committee. For me, as for others, if while I am testifying the plans and misdemeanors of the occupation they say to arrest me, what might I take? Alas, the occupation has done in the occupation of Haiti extraordinary cruelties. The Haitians of this place are delivered up to the occupation. The only ones who have need of existence are the ones who tell lies against their fellow citizens."

MAN. Let me get that. Who is ready to tell lies about their fellow

McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, let me interrupt to address a question to the witness and then to the witness. These are charges of a general and atrocious character. Does the witness intend to submit evidence of this sort without sustaining affidavits of any character, without evidence of any character, without specific instances of acts and dates? I would counsel answer first, and then will the stenographer read my question, to the interpreter?

MAN. It is a very pertinent inquiry.

L. Subject to the difficulty under which I have inevitably found myself having arrived yesterday and having so many people to get in, I will say in answer to the question that according to my best knowledge, after having talked this matter over briefly with Mr. Sylvain, I am trying to give to the committee now primarily in answer to the question put to him yesterday afternoon, along this line by members of the committee, the best facts which he has at his disposition at the moment to my knowledge, not so much facts of cruelties, atrocities, such as have been mentioned in these letters, but the state of mind of the population in these regions. That, given that state of mind, people do not feel that they are coming down here and present themselves before the committee. All I have to say is that I view primarily to urgently requesting the committee or some other body to make a personal tour of inspection in these back areas of the country and thereby acquire at first hand information concerning that country, and in the limits of time they can spend there hear testimony on matters of fact which may be brought up against the occupation.

MAN. Now, let me suggest to counsel, as well as to the witness, that the committee has come here with an open mind on this subject. We want to hear the best we can get it, and I am satisfied that every member of this committee expects to make a report based upon the facts. We can not make a report based on charges. The difficulty with the situation here, as it seems to me, if I speak individually now—is this, that witnesses apparently assume that the committee must accept at par declarations or charges which are made without proof. If I understand this witness correctly, he says in the first place that the writer of this letter is terrorized; in the second place, he says that if witnesses come, that there will be other witnesses—I assume he means that some will lie about these things. We can not assume that the witnesses here have absolutely disregarded every principle of military law, and that they, as a whole, are responsible for these conditions. We have seen violations of the military or civil law by any one of these witnesses, the privates or the gendarmes, we are most anxious to hear that. We can not assume that the people do not want any cruelties toward any of these people down here. But we must have evidence of these facts, and I have been hoping that the witness would be able to give us something concrete. I still hope so. I think what I have said, as well as what Senator McCormick has said, should be read to this witness, so that he may understand exactly what we want. We want the facts. We do not want alone these charges, or we do not want mere opinions as to what may exist back here in the hills sometimes. We want the facts.

Mr. ANGELL. May I say in that connection, Senator, that the witness is making these statements of alleged abuses on the part of the occupiers on the idea that he is personally testifying thereto and offering proof. By reading these letters from people back in the interior as the best evidence obtainable under the circumstances—martial law, the poverty of the people, the difficulties of transportation—to show their state of mind, in order that you gentlemen may, if possible, go back to some of these country districts.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you a question. That statement can be very satisfying to the mind of even counsel here. This witness is an expert lawyer, an advocate. He knows conditions here. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the witnesses themselves can not be produced, there is a question of taking affidavits or written statements, from each of these witnesses, that they know these facts, etc. And the committee should be furnished with that kind of evidence, it seems to me. Even assuming that there is this feeling of terror, I am not passing judgment upon that now—we ought to have more than mere rumors or mere allegations.

Mr. ANGELL. In answer to that statement, with which I must entirely agree, I wish to say that this witness and others have actual affidavits in support of these facts; that this is simply a general, introductory statement by the witness, not so much to prove the idea of offering specific evidence himself, but showing the state of mind of the populace.

Senator McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I think if we will stop now, in order to permit the stenographer to read by installments what has been said by the witness and the chairman to the witness, that he may understand the point of the statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator McCormick is entirely right, and I ask now that the notes of what Senator McCormick as well as myself have said may be read to the witness.

(The record, as directed, was then read to the witness by the stenographer.)

The CHAIRMAN. In view of these statements, let the witness proceed, if he has anything further to say.

Dr. SYLVAIN. We are in accord with the commission that it is facts that should be presented. I am not a witness, but everything that I say may be supported by direct testimony of those who have written to me. I have only the right to insist that the senatorial commission will go directly to those who may have given this testimony. I have designated the region of the northeast because there that there has been the most cases of atrocities.

The CHAIRMAN. Designate the localities.

Dr. SYLVAIN. Hinche, Maissade, Los Caobas, Thomonde, Mire Balais, La Source, St. Michel, Ouanaminthe, Fort Liberté.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let him give the witnesses at each one of these places where he says we can get this testimony sustaining the charges.

Mr. SYLVAIN. I have here 21 files for Maissade alone, and I shall have the honor to put before the commission a long list for each locality. These are documents which I have here are sworn to before notaries. We have also a witness—very important—whom we wish to have heard to the commission of inquiry, but he is at this moment in prison, condemned to hard labor. It is Mr. Joli Bois Fils, a newspaper man, condemned to death by the press. Mr. Joli Bois Fils knows many facts and knows also many names. I desire this commission to make use of its power to cause Mr. Joli Bois Fils to appear before them.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask the witness a few questions. How did you learn that this committee was coming to the island?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I could not tell the exact date that we knew that the commission was coming. We did not know officially that the commission was coming until last week, by publication of Col. Russell.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not the fact known here in the island that the commission would come as soon as the senatorial duties at Washington would permit to come, and was not that fact known a number of weeks ago?

Dr. SYLVAIN. It was only a rumor, which other rumors denied.

The CHAIRMAN. Who first suggested here in the island this investigation?

- AIN. It was the Union Patriotique, by the memorandum of its delegation demanded that the senatorial commission come to Haiti.
- ERMAN. When was the Union Patriotique organized?
- AIN. November of last year.
- ERMAN. Who were the moving spirits in its organization?
- AIN. It is the delegate administrator, who is in your presence, Mr. Luvain.
- ERMAN. How many members are there in this union?
- AIN. We may estimate the number at 16,000 adherents throughout the country.
- ERMAN. On what do you base that estimate?
- AIN. Because we have committees in nearly all the communes of the country. These committees constitute the directing element.
- ERMAN. How often do they meet?
- AIN. That depends upon the locality.
- ERMAN. How often do they meet here in Port au Prince?
- AIN. Regularly every week.
- ERMAN. How many members are there in Port au Prince?
- AIN. The population may say in its generality that the membership is large.
- ERMAN. I am not asking what the population say. I want your own estimate.
- AIN. One may have an idea of the numerical importance of our organization from the manifestation which was organized yesterday entirely by the Union Patriotique.
- ERMAN. Have you a constitution or by-laws showing the principles of the organization?
- AIN. Yes.
- ERMAN. Will you furnish a copy for the record?
- AIN. I have none before me at this moment, but I will give one to you.
- ERMAN. What are the conditions of membership in this organization?
- AIN. In order to be an active member it is necessary to adhere to the principles proposed by the association and to participate in its action.
- ERMAN. How is this organization financed?
- AIN. By the dues of members. One gourd a month. And by extraordinary subscriptions.
- ERMAN. How much money has been collected from the membership?
- AIN. In the absence of the treasurer, and not wishing to give a sum that may not be entirely exact, I can not say at this moment.
- ERMAN. Give us the approximate amount.
- AIN. I avow that I can not furnish it personally.
- ERMAN. Can you get that information for us?
- AIN. I can, and I do not wish to give an approximate sum, because I want to be entirely exact; but if the commission desire I will give it this afternoon when I shall have seen the treasurer. I add that at all times the Union Patriotique has wished to have the necessary funds it has found them in the country itself.
- ERMAN. Very well. The committee desires that information and I am sure you will get it for us.
- AIN. I wish to ask the commission as soon as possible if they will make the necessary disposition to hear the witness, Joli Bois, who is in prison.
- ERMAN. We will take that up and decide that later. The witness has been heard in addition to the membership fee of a gourd a month, there are also ordinary subscriptions—I think that was the phrase that he used. From what source have these subscriptions come?
- AIN. Always from the Haitian people. In addressing themselves to their members or to our adherents.
- ERMAN. Has any money come from the United States?
- AIN. No; never.
- ERMAN. Who has employed the counsel representing the party?
- AIN. The Union Patriotique, in accord with the associations in the country. These are the ones who are in favor of the Haitian cause, notably the Society for the Liberation of Haiti and the Dominican Republic.
- ERMAN. Where is that society located?
- AIN. In New York.
- ERMAN. And who are the members of that society?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Moorfield Storey is the president; Mrs. Weed, the secretary. We have also Mr. Gruening, who is one of the members of the committee of this society; and Mr. Robert Herrick is treasurer.

The CHAIRMAN. If you know, who has been financing the activities of the society?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I don't know in a precise way, but I think it is the public of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me go to another matter now. Have you a statement which will show to this committee the number of members from the various communes or arrondissement of the island?

Dr. SYLVAIN. We can make this, but we had not thought it necessary to do it up to this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Do these various committees in these different localities report to the principal office here the number of members in each locality?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Each week the committee of Port au Prince, which is the central committee, sends out circulars to the members of the various committees in the Province to render an accounting of the acts of the week, and to give them general or particular instructions. Nearly every week we receive answers to these circulars, in which the members of these various committees tell us the things that pass in their localities.

The CHAIRMAN. Do they report the amount of money collected or disbursed?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The values collected when there is a call for funds from the central committee are sent to Port au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. On behalf of the committee, I want to ask witness to furnish us a statement as to the membership in each of these localities, and the amount of money which has been received, and disbursements, if they can furnish it, and I want particularly to know the amount of money which the Central Union here has received from these outlying districts, as well as from its own membership.

Dr. SYLVAIN. This will be a bit long, because the localities are scattered.

The CHAIRMAN. But there must be some record here if your statement is correct that moneys are received and membership dues paid, etc. There must be some financial statement which can be furnished to this committee.

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes. That will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, just another matter. Has any money been sent to this Union Patriotique from the New York society or other societies in the State?

Dr. SYLVAIN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Now let me go to another matter. When did the Union Patriotique begin its activities looking to the organization for yesterday's proceedings?

Dr. SYLVAIN. As soon as the Union Patriotique knew officially that the mission was going to arrive it practically organized the manifestation, but took care to prepare the population to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the committee on arrangements?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The administrator delegate was at the head of the procession, but all of their members led their concours.

The CHAIRMAN. What outside help was used there, if any, in organizing the demonstration?

Dr. SYLVAIN. No outside aid.

The CHAIRMAN. Who prepared the banners which were displayed yesterday?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The committee of the Union Patriotique.

The CHAIRMAN. Name the committee.

Dr. SYLVAIN. We have the names and we will give them along with a list of our statistics, but I can not remember them all at once.

Mr. ANGELL. That is in the record already, at the end of the Haitian Memorandum. The names of the committee are all in the record already, following the relation of the Haitian members.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give us statements showing copies of all of the banners which were displayed on the street?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The newspapers have reproduced them, but if the committee desires we can give them a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. We want a complete statement, and I want to know what suggested these different banners.

Dr. SYLVAIN. It was the committee who made these inscriptions.

The CHAIRMAN. Who paid the expense of it?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The committee.

IRMAN. How many members of the Union Patriotique were engaged in the activities of yesterday?

AIN. All of the Union Patriotique.

IRMAN. There were a large number of people there; in fact, most of who were not members of the Union Patriotique who came out to

AIN. It was the population, which sympathized with the Union Patri-

IRMAN. Were not a large part of these people who were on the street with the present administration of the Haitian Government; I Haitian administration?

AIN. There might have been, since it was a national manifestation addressed to all Haitians; but we did not apply ourselves to render of the opinions of the people in the manifestation.

IRMAN. The treaty which was made between the United States and the Government was ratified by your proper constitutional authorities, AIN. The treaty which was voted under pressure from the agents of the United States Government.

IRMAN. Now, that is a bare assertion. Let me have your proof of

AIN. We have for one part the testimony which was produced before the senatorial commission at Washington, the secret records of the Navy Department published in newspapers of the United States, and the testimony which the committee reserve to produce before the senatorial commission. There is one member of our committee who is especially charged to develop this point of the commission. It is Mr. Pauleus Sannon, one of the delegates to the United States, former minister of exterior relations at the time the treaty was IRMAN. Another matter. What paper in the United States was it that published this statement to the effect that the Navy Department secreted the result of this election was due to the activities of the United States Government?

AIN. Will you repeat your question, please?

IRMAN. Perhaps I can put it shorter. Just strike that out. The committee had a moment ago, when asked for evidence as to the activities of the United States Government in this election, in substance, that his proof was the publication in a paper printed in the United States, which disclosed the secret records of the Navy Department would prove it. I asked for the paper that was?

AIN. There were several papers which we received, but especially the New York Herald and America, a Catholic journal.

ELL. I think you may have misunderstood the previous testimony of the committee.

IRMAN. If I did, I would like to be corrected.

ELL. He said the proof of this lay, as he understood it, in testimony before the committee in Washington, and reproduced in some papers of the United States.

IRMAN. I would like to see the evidence showing that the Navy Department attempted in any way to influence this election here.

AIN. As to that which concerns the Haitians, we have in addition the testimony of Pauleus Sannon, whom I have just named to you, who was one of the members charged to negotiate with the United States, Senator Pouget, who was the member of the senatorial commission upon the treaty. We are ready to read before the commission, if the commission wishes.

IRMAN. The committee would like to be advised as to the activities of the Navy Department or any other department of the American Government which was responsible for this election, if that is true. Now, another ELL. The interpreter asks is this the treaty or the election?

IRMAN. I had in mind—and I think my question will show, that I was asking about the election. Now, let us not have any misunderstanding

AIN. What election?

ELL. We started out by talking about the ratification of the treaty, and then what Mr. Sylvain referred to.

IRMAN. I spoke about the election.

Mr. ANGELL. The witness asks what election.

The CHAIRMAN. The election at the time of the ratification of this constitution, as I understand it. The vote on the constitution.

Mr. ANGELL. They are separate events. A month apart.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the witness make any explanation he wants about the matter. I may not have this in the proper sequence.

Mr. ANGELL. Future witnesses are prepared, sir, to testify specifically those points.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Sylvain was not presenting himself as a witness.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, another matter. Who was responsible for this banner "Shall Haiti be your Congo?"

Dr. SYLVAIN. It was the committee of the Union Patriotique.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that done to arouse prejudice on the part of the people here in the island against the United States?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Not at all. On the contrary, this was done with the aim showing to the senatorial commission that the Haitian people hoped for that, following the spirit of justice and impartiality of the senatorial commission, it may not be thus.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew, did you not, that there was no such sentiment in the United States?

Dr. SYLVAIN. If I judge by the conduct of those who have been called to represent it here, under the last administration of the United States, we may be in some doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. Who prepared this banner "Shall Haiti be your Belgium?"

Dr. SYLVAIN. It was always the committee, and in the same spirit.

The CHAIRMAN. And who prepared this, "Shall Haiti be your Ireland?"

Dr. SYLVAIN. The same answer. The committee, in the same spirit.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you expect that banners of that kind would influence or control the judgment of the committee?

Dr. SYLVAIN. How control the spirit of the committee. We can not influence or control the spirit of the committee since we have confidence in the committee to repair injustice and wrongs which we bring to their notice.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to say now for the committee that it can not be influenced by banners or propaganda, but it can be influenced by evidence and facts. Now, let me make this suggestion: In view of your statement that you did not expect to influence the committee by those signs, is it not a fact that one of your purposes was to arouse your own people?

Dr. SYLVAIN. No. The commission upon its debarment has received the people a reception so sympathetic that a response to this question should already have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. I desire to say for the committee that its members fully appreciate its generous whole-hearted reception, which was given to you people here, and we shall take pleasure in making full report in behalf to the Senate and to the people of the United States. This commission only desires the good of the people of Haiti, and the questions which it asks are for the sole purpose of eliciting the truth, whatever it may be.

Another question. It has been said to some of us that in this Union Patriotique there were one or more candidates for the presidency of Haiti. Is that true?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I should say to the commission that the Union Patriotique has constituted itself with the determination not to concern itself with the politics of any party or any person. They take up only questions of patrie. An article of our organization makes this a formal condition of participation in the affairs of the association. However, as we have among us men who have occupied eminent positions in politics, it may be that among them, if they were called by the vote of their fellow citizens to the presidency of the country, would accept willingly. Therefore, to reply in a precise way to this question, I will say to the honorable Senators that the association does not recognize any candidate for the presidency.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it opposed to the present Haitian administration in the island?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Emphatically, no; because we concern ourselves only with questions of national interest.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, another question. I assume that the witness states that prior to the American occupation here there was a very great disorder.

IN. Does your question concern the Haitian administration or the situation of the country?

ERMAN. I am referring to the entire situation here in the country. Put it in another way: Prior to the American occupancy, is it not true that there was a great deal of disorder in the island?

IN. At certain times; yes.

ERMAN. And at times there were revolutions?

IN. Yes.

ERMAN. And this disorder and these revolutions led to the danger of loss of property?

IN. One must know if you speak of foreigners or Haitians.

ERMAN. Well, describe either one. I am not concerned about that.

IN. As far as foreigners were concerned; no.

McCORMICK. These gentlemen who are standing in the chamber, I think it a matter of courtesy to the committee, if nothing else, ought to keep silence during the interrogation of a witness.

ERMAN. The suggestion is very good. Of course, we understand that those who are here do not intend to disturb us, but there is a constant low whispering that interferes both with the witness and the Senators.

IN. I permit myself upon this subject to say to the commission that I have heard that this session was public, the interested ones and the people in general, would have desired that the audience would have been in a place large enough to prevent this little inconvenience, but those who are listening at this time can not fail to defer to the suggestion of the commission.

ERMAN. Oh, there was certainly no discourtesy intended at all. I think it is the usual caution. It happens in our own committee rooms, and is very precautionary.

ERMAN. There was, prior to the American occupancy, danger to life and property in the island, was there not?

IN. I said a moment ago that as to that which concerns foreigners, it is impossible to have two parties fight one against the other—and that only of Haiti but of all countries in the world—without there being some fighting the combatants.

ERMAN. Let me be a little more specific. For a number of years the Haitian Government and the Haitian Government had a good deal of trouble with the Cacos known as the Cacos in the northern part of the island; isn't that

IN. It is true.

ERMAN. And the revolutionists generally started up in the northern part of the island among the Cacos, did they not?

IN. Yes. There were no Cacos, if it were not in that part of the island.

ERMAN. The revolutionists generally combined with the Cacos, did they not?

IN. It was the Cacos themselves who were the revolutionists.

ERMAN. And they, to a large extent, controlled your Government at that time, is that not so?

IN. No. When a Government was formed of former Caco chiefs, the Government was sympathetic with its partisans.

ERMAN. When do you mean that the Government was in the control of the Cacos? What was the period?

IN. The Government was never under the power of Caco chiefs. The Caco chiefs, men, who were able to make use of Cacos to arrive, once in power would have a certain gratitude for the Cacos forces which they had but once becoming chief of the Republic they could not remain dependent upon the Cacos.

ONES. How did the Cacos aid anyone in gaining control of the Government?

IN. It was not just anyone. It was only the men who had had no political place.

ONES. Well, how did the Caco organization aid anyone in getting into political place?

IN. Because they were the people of the mountains, or the inhabitants which were difficult to penetrate, who could thus organize themselves more easily than other revolutionaries. This situation gave them a discipline and an organization and a solidarity which permitted them to organize more easily for military action than others.

Senator JONES. Was control of the Government secured through military action?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Certainly. It was not the control of the Government. It was the support given to political chiefs who wished to arrive at the presidency.

Senator JONES. What sort of support?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Military support.

Senator JONES. Do you mean to say that prior to the American occupation that your Government was controlled by people who got into power by the military occupations?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Do you want to return to that sort of condition?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Certainly not.

Senator JONES. Well, how do you expect to have your Government run if the American occupation should cease? Would it not revert to that same condition which you have just referred to?

Dr. SYLVAIN. We have—I speak of the Haitian progressives—we have always hoped to have only civil government. It is the aspiration of the Haitian people. The military occupation of the United States has only served to turn us away from these aspirations. And one may regret that upon this point it has retarded us in our normal evolution. Therefore, we believe that the presence of the military occupation, as long as it is here, is a hindrance to the progress of the Haitian people toward a civilization which we shall give ourselves, and it is one of the very strong reasons which brings us to insist to the people and the Senate of the United States, in order that Haitians should be relieved of the military occupation as soon as possible, which can do no good for our country.

Senator JONES. Have you any assurance that the methods of governing your country would be different from what they were before the treaty with the United States?

Dr. SYLVAIN. We have experience. There have been several Haitian governments which have progressed in a normal road of civilization only since people are young one may not reasonably demand of them to realize in a few years the political and social situation which in all the great civilized States of the world has necessitated centuries of struggle and trial.

Senator JONES. Would it be necessary to continue those struggles and trials if the United States would no longer take part in your affairs here?

Dr. SYLVAIN. These struggles and these trials have always been continuous in all countries as a consequence of our conditions as men. We are not at this point placed in conditions other than those of other countries. We do not desire these struggles and trials, and we shall make all our efforts to avoid them, but we can not guarantee that in spite of our good will that we shall meet them. All that we can say is that we have in our country elements of civilization which permit us to dispense with the tutelage of other nations.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me make a suggestion now, and I mean it very seriously. The interpreter here has a very hard job, as everybody recognizes, and he, of course, wants to interpret correctly, and we want him to do so. I think he is as a general rule doing so. If there is any exception taken to any of his interpretations let that be by counsel and not by others interfering. You have three or four it only confuses and delays. Counsel, of course, is correct if the interpreter makes a mistake. If counsel feels that the interpreter has misconstrued something that has been said, we want the counsel to do so. Not other witnesses. Because if you have two or three breaking out it is confusing to everybody. Proceed.

Senator JONES. Has there been any change among the people of the island since the treaty with the United States with respect to their ability to manage their own affairs?

Dr. SYLVAIN. There certainly has been, if we take into view all of the changes for the worse, due to the administration and the control of the United States. However, we hope that the change for the worse will not have been deep enough to definitely ruin the elements of progress which were already constituted in the organization of the Haitian people.

Senator JONES. What organization of the Haitian people do you refer to?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I make allusion in one part to the education already given to the Haitian people. The experience which has come to it, and in a certain way to its degree of intellectual and moral development.

NES. When did that development take place?

N. In the course of our history. We have more than a century

NES. Prior to the treaty with the United States, those who wanted rol of the government, aroused the people and brought on revothey not?

N. We have had, since our constitution as a nation, the misforn power citizens who were too often supported by military force.
t is explained by the circumstances under which we won our indewas the military chiefs who made the war of independence. It that they should have been the first chiefs of the Haitian state.
r, that practice continued, but we have aspired more and more il government. It is thus that we have had recently presidents ic who were not military men. We have had a right to believe, ng more and more this disposition, that the Haitian people shall ognizing the superiority of civil government over military govern-

NES. When did you have a president elected without military aid?

N. We have had recently, as I told you, Mr. Michel Orestes, a e bar of Port au Prince, who arrived at the presidency without pressure. Before him we had Mr. Tancred Auguste, a farmer, d planter, who also arrived at the presidency without military

NES. How were they elected?

N. By a Haitian national assembly, formed of the chamber of the senate. I can cite also to the commission, among those who recent period, and military men who arrived without military
a. Tirzias Augustin Simon Sam.

NES. When was the last president elected with military aid?

N. I may cite the present president, since it was known without his time that he was elected by military aid, by the military occu-United States.

NES. You are going to have some one else tell us about all that,

N. Yes. I cited to you a moment ago Mr. Pouget, who was sena-ne of the election of the President.

NES. Who was the previous President elected with military aid?

N. The President who preceded the present President, President laume Sam.

NES. What was his name?

N. Vilbrun Guillaume Sam.

NES. How long did he serve as President?

N. Several months.

NES. What caused the termination of his term?

N. What terminated the end of his reign was a matter of public MAN. I think under the circumstances, we will suspend now until that hour will suit everybody, and we will resume at that time.

ee is doing this out of regard for the interpreter. We realize al task it is.

legations who desire to discuss the present situation?

MAN. Let us proceed with the examination. Senator Jones, will with your examination?

NES. How long was Mr. Sam President?

N. Which Sam? There were two Sams—Mr. Tirzias Simon Sam run Guillaume Sam.

Senator JONES. Well, when were they President? Give it for both of them. When were they President?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Tirzias Simon Sam was President after President E. Polite, in March, 1896. He remained President until 1902. He served all his term as President. Mr. Vilbrun Guillaume Sam was from March, 1915, July of the same year.

Senator JONES. Who preceded him?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Davilmart Theodore.

Senator JONES. And how long was he President?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Several months also. October, 1914, to March, 1915.

Senator JONES. How did he get out of office?

Dr. SYLVAIN. By a revolution.

Senator JONES. Who preceded him?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Orestes Zamor.

Senator JONES. How long was he President?

Dr. SYLVAIN. From February, 1914, to October, 1914.

Senator JONES. How did he get out of office?

Dr. SYLVAIN. By a taking up of arms.

Senator JONES. What you call a revolution?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. How many people were killed in that revolution?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I can not say exactly, but there was no enormous number.

Senator JONES. Who preceded him?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Michel Orestes.

Senator JONES. How long was he President?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Ten months.

Senator JONES. How did he get out of office?

Dr. SYLVAIN. By a revolution which put into power Orestes Zamor.

Senator JONES. Who preceded this man?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Tancred Auguste.

Senator JONES. How long was he in office?

Dr. SYLVAIN. About 10 months also.

Senator JONES. Did a revolution put him out?

Dr. SYLVAIN. He died while in power, of a sickness.

Senator JONES. Who preceded him?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Mr. Cincinnatus Leconte.

Senator JONES. How long was he President?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Eleven months.

Senator JONES. What put him out of office?

Dr. SYLVAIN. An accident. The National Palace exploded, and he died in explosion.

Senator JONES. Do you know what caused the explosion?

Dr. SYLVAIN. No. They say that it followed a natural explosion of the powder magazine which was in the palace, which contained powder B.

Senator JONES. Was the powder magazine in the capitol?

Dr. SYLVAIN. It was in the palace itself, in the courtyard of the palace, deground, under the palace.

(Senator McCormick here took the chair.)

Senator JONES. Why was it kept there?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Because it was to furnish the troops who were stationed at the palace.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Mr. Angell, I have suggested that on this part there should not be interruptions of the counsel or the interpreter is not customary to prompt witnesses before a Senate committee.

Senator JONES. Before the American intervention, what was the condition of the roads throughout the country?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The condition of the roads was that the Haitian administration kept them in the best possible state, according to their resources. They did continually work for their amelioration, and they had from that time projects with foreign companies tending to this amelioration.

Senator JONES. Were the roads in good condition?

Dr. SYLVAIN. There were parts which were in good condition, and parts which were not.

Senator JONES. What about the streets of Port au Prince?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The streets were good, and you may, up to the present, verify the good effect. Since the occupation nothing more has been done.

Q. All of these streets were paved before the occupation, were

A. There was a contract in course of execution, which was completed in short time after the occupation.

Q. What sort of a system of schools did you have before the

A. Do you speak of the special schools or the schools throughout the administration of the country?

A. Both.

Q. The general organization of the schools of the country includes public and the private schools, and the State prescribed a program throughout the country for the schools, both public and private.

Q. Were those rules lived up to? Were the schools conducted according to that program?

A. Yes. There are three degrees of instruction—the superior secondary school, and the primary school.

Q. And the children all go to school, do they?

A. The greater portion, because instruction is obligatory.

Q. Let me ask the witness a question, will you, Senator? If I, for example, to the north, put 100 adult peasants, men and women, to the test, many of them will be able to read and write?

A. That depends upon the region.

Q. Well, if I begin asking the questions 10 kilometers north of the capitol, until I reach the cape and ask the question of 100 men and 100

A. I have said that that depends upon the region. If you take it from the capitol and some a greater distance from the capitol, it is probable that the responses will be very different from those which might be obtained in regions which have been devastated by the American military occupation. For example, in all the region where there took place the revolution and the repression by the military occupation it is certain that for years they could not have been able to give instruction as before; in those places you will find a very large proportion illiterate.

Q. Just a moment. Let me point out to the witness that in the question to adults—grown people—the education of the last generation would make very little difference. If the witness does not care to answer the question directly, I will not press it.

A. Independently of the instruction they have received at the capitol, it is a state of mind which maintains its instruction, even though the primary, by the general state of the country. A peasant who has received elementary instruction sufficient for the peasant to take care of his family gives you an impression of an illiterate person.

Q. I have not any desire, let me say to counsel, to press this question. The witness does not care to answer it directly. I am seeking from the witness the literacy of the total adult population of the country. It is impossible to make the direct answer, I will not ask for the direct

A. I think, Senator, we might, subject to your approval, leave the question to the other members of the Union Patriotique, who has prepared a report to leave with the committee on just such subjects. Mr. Sylvain has interested himself with the idea of being a formal witness in any sense

Q. I will discontinue my examination.

Q. How long have you had compulsory education in this country?

A. Exactly, I believe it is, since 1864, because at that time we had a law in and Minister Dubois, who made a reform in public instruction, and the situation is much the same as exists at the present time.

Q. Have the children all been going to school since 1864?

A. All the children; no; but a large proportion of the children.

Q. What proportion of the children go to school and have been attending during these years of compulsory education?

A. It may be estimated on the whole for the cities, 50 per cent, and for the country 20 per cent. There is still another proposition. There are the children left out among families who do not go either to public or private schools, which augments the proportion.

Q. How long does the law require that they shall attend school

Dr. SYLVAIN. That depends upon the schools. For the primary school shorter time than for the secondary schools, because there are fewer classes go through according to program. Schools of primary instruction give education for four years and schools of secondary education for eight or nine years.

Senator JONES. And how many months during each year are these sessions?

Dr. SYLVAIN. There are two months of vacation each year, and then the days and public ceremonies during the year.

Senator JONES. Then, for 10 months in the year you have schools all over the country, do you?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. And the children are attending about in the proportion you gave a while ago?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. And that has been going on since about 1864?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Well, the people ought to be pretty well educated, do they?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I said that was the proportion for the inhabitants of a city may say that it is a country that in proportion to the number of inhabitants from the time at which they arrive as a people, free and independent, the high rank among educated people.

Senator JONES. How are the schools now?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I don't understand very well.

Senator JONES. Are the schools as good now as they were before the American occupation?

Dr. SYLVAIN. The occupation has had no effect upon the functioning of schools, except, as I said before, in those portions of the country which have sorely tried one may say that the situation is less good, because the civil authorities who have functioned by virtue of the convention and contrary to the terms of this convention, have not ceased to thwart the Haitian Government which concerns the funds necessary for the functioning of the schools, and the accumulation of the material and the schoolhouses, as well as for the training of professors.

Senator JONES. The American occupation has nothing to do with the schools, has it?

Dr. SYLVAIN. There has been to my knowledge, at Port au Prince, a superintendent of public instruction, who was not, it is well understood, a military functionary, who was a sort of civil functionary outside of the military, but the superintendent of public instruction has done nothing for the schools which is appreciable. It is not astonishing, because it appears he has more to learn from the high Haitian functionaries and the public instruction than he could give in any instance whatever. It is thus that, recognizing that he was not an expert in the law, he commenced studying at our law school, and then commenced to study. He was interrupted because he had to return to the States, where I hope he has finished his studies.

Senator JONES. You say that only 50 per cent of the children in the country go to school. Do not the others go? If not, why not?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Either because their relatives have a false idea of the fashion in which their children should be clothed, and because of their preference to keep their children at home, or because one part of them is forced to send their children at a very early age to apprenticeship at work in order to have at an early age the means of a livelihood.

Senator JONES. During what years are the children required to attend school?

Dr. SYLVAIN. From the age of 7 years, but more often they commence at an earlier age.

Senator JONES. How many years after they are required to begin attending school must they continue to attend school each year, under the law?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I have told you that the primary instruction lasts four years, the secondary instruction from eight to nine years.

Senator JONES. That would make 12 or 13 years of school?

Dr. SYLVAIN. All together.

Senator JONES. And the children must begin attending school at the age of 7?

Dr. SYLVAIN. That is the age at which they should commence, but even before that they commence.

ES. Then they must attend school for 10 or 15 years after they are e, then?

. No.
ES. Well, then, what age are they permitted not to attend school?

. There is no age at which they are permitted to not go to school.

ES. Well, how does the law require them to attend then? At they quit school and not attend school?

. The law does not prescribe the time at which they must quit ram does prescribe a certain time during which they should follow gram.

ES. Now, you understand that that answer is inconsistent with are the provisions of your compulsory law? You are a lawyer?

minimum number of years that the children must go to school?

. There are two degrees of education.

ES. Repeat my question, please.

on was repeated to the witness by the interpreter.)

. If it is a child who takes only primary education, he may 12 years.

ES. It is optional with the child whether it will take primary
?

. It is the families who decide that.

ES. They decide when the children will start to school, do they?

. No; there is an age from which they must start to school, but them before that time. As soon as a child can follow the class;
ve infantile schools.

ES. How much schooling must a child get? What is your com-r education?

. Four years. I have told you four years for primary instruction.

ES. And all the children must attend for four years?

. For the primary school.

ES. Then are they required to go to any school after the primary

. No.
ES. Well, then, you have only four years of compulsory education,

. It is the primary school which has compulsory education.
e are secondary State schools.

ES. I am trying to get at the compulsory period of them all.
to understand that your compulsory period for going to school our years of primary school, is that it?

. Yes.
ES. And beyond that there is no compulsory law at all?

. As I was going to say to you, there are no secondary State the child may continue his primary status.

ES. But he is not required to do it. I don't want a speech. I er to my question. Is the child required to attend any school ary school? Are they required to go to any school after the or not? You need not make a speech in answer to that question.
er that yes or no.

. No.
ES. Now, then, they start in at 7, or perhaps a little before 7, required to go to school four years only; that is, until they are of age, and then there is no compulsory law after that?

. No.
ES. And only about half the children in the towns attend the se four years?

. That is the proportion.

ES. Why is not the other portion required to attend for these

. I have already answered.

ES. Take the period of time, say, of 50 years prior to the occu-any political revolutions did you have in Haiti?

. You are asking for the history of Haiti. But, any way, I may as possible, but you may know that, taking them President by

ES. You mean to say that practically every new President came tution?

Dr. SYLVAIN. No; I have not said that. Will you please read your question? (The question was read by the stenographer, as follows: "Take the past time, say, of 50 years prior to the occupation, how many political revolutions did you have in Haiti?")

Dr. SYLVAIN. In order to respond I shall have to reflect, in order to remember the names of the Presidents. Without saying, however, that each of those incidents came to power by means of a revolution.

Senator JONES. There were a number of revolutions, were there not?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. And there were revolutions started which did not occur there were a number of those, weren't there?

Dr. SYLVAIN. There were certain attempts, as happen in all countries, call them revolutions, but in the United States they have another name, as in countries of Europe.

Senator JONES. What other name do they have in the United States?

Dr. SYLVAIN. They call them riots, uprisings, affrays.

Senator JONES. In these revolutions here in Haiti, what is done? What they do? Do they just simply have an uprising in one section of the country?

Dr. SYLVAIN. For instance, when the governmental authorities violate the law the citizens, after having ascertained that by using legal means they cannot obtain justice, call the population to arms to recover their violated rights. They engage then in battle with the governmental forces, and either the governmental forces overpower them or else it is the governmental forces that are beaten. If in all parts of the country they gain the upper hand, the Government is forced to retire, and a call is made upon the population in all parts of the country to send their delegates to the capital, which delegates characterize the Government, after having proceeded with the election of the Chamber of Deputies or the General Assembly, which names a new President of the Republic and which gives sometimes a new constitution.

Senator JONES. Did not your laws provide for change of government at intervals?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Then why did not the people change their officials unlawfully, instead of by revolution?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I have already explained to you that the revolutions were provoked only by the bad actions of the Government. They tried to correct these bad actions by legal measures, at first. Then, after seeing the Government, taking advantage of its authority, did not execute the laws, were forced to take up arms.

Senator JONES. Then your Government has very frequently been a bad government?

Dr. SYLVAIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Well, now, what reason have you to believe that if the American occupation were withdrawn that you would have any better Government than you had in the past?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I believe the experience would have benefited the Haitian people. When they have seen that the domination of foreigners did not do for them either more prosperity or better education or the general amelioration of their situation they will understand that it would be better to have a Government, directed by a different class of men from those which there have been in the habit of placing in power.

Senator JONES. I don't understand what he means. Then, it is your judgment that if the people of Haiti had an opportunity to absolutely control their affairs they would have a better Government than they did have prior to American occupation?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I think so.

Senator JONES. And you think so solely by reason of the lessons that are learned during the American occupation?

Dr. SYLVAIN. I think so, first, for the reason and also because people change naturally with the times.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Angell, if the memoirs are not ready, the member of the committee might rise. Mr. Interpreter, will you announce that the committee will meet to-morrow at 2. In the meantime the chairman of the committee, the president of the commission, will remain for a few minutes to read the memoirs to be placed in the committee's hands by Mr. Angell.

N. Mr. Interpreter, will you say that I have received the eight sonally read all of them. The other members of the commission, ed in making independent investigations, have not been able to problems. In my judgment, after conversing with Mr. Angell, seem to me such as we can discuss informally and personally, mit me to converse in French and not in English—the official e I formally adjourn the session of the commission, ask counsel, he cares to say anything before the record for to-day is closed.

Thank you, Senator, for the opportunity. I do wish to make uest. We made a request yesterday, or the day before, for the f Mr. Jolibois, now in prison, and it was stated at that time by siding that a decision would be taken as to whether or not Mr.
be brought from prison to appear here as a witness, and, if so, ould like to ask if any decision has been taken, and, if so, in whether he will be heard to-morrow.

N. I think no decision has been taken. I left the matter with pers of the commission when I parted company with them.
are going to meet informally this afternoon to consider several among them.

We consider Mr. Jolibois as a very important witness.

N. Do you want to say anything about the priest?

Yes. One other matter also. We have here a priest, a French s lived a great many years in the islands, working among the s come from a long distance at considerable inconvenience to ent himself voluntarily as a witness before the committee. I efly with this priest and regard him as an important witness.
that he must, if humanly possible, leave at 6 o'clock to-morrow witness this afternoon.

N. That is not possible. Will you give the stenographer the address of the priest, in order that we may notify him at what heard to-morrow morning?

Mr. ANGELL. The priest is here now.

The CHAIRMAN. But I have told you he can not be heard this afternoon. I will consult the other members of the commission about their plans for the full meeting of the commission to-morrow morning.

Mr. ANGELL. I have his name, but I have not at this instant his address.

The CHAIRMAN. That you can obtain. Give the stenographer his name.

Mr. ANGELL. His name is Le Sidaner. He can be reached at the Arc de Triomphe, the Copal Palace.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Interpreter, will you announce that, having received from Mr. Angell, the counsel, the information that he has a witness who wishes called to-morrow, the session of the commission is adjourned for to-morrow until 9.30 to-morrow morning?

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until 9.30 a. m., Friday, December 1, 1900.)

INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Port au Prince, Haiti.

Committee resumed its hearing pursuant to adjournment, at 9.30 a. m.
Senators Pomerene, Oddie, and Jones, Senator Pomerene presiding.
Present: Mr. Howe and Mr. Angell.

CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Senator McCormick, our witness is detained in another branch of the investigation which we are conducting on the island, as the other members of the committee were on the island. Now, proceed with the first witness. Let him be sworn.
The witness suggest that the witness give his full name, his location, length of time he has been on the island, and the length of time he has been officiating and then proceed with his statement.

WITNESS: ABBE LOUIS MARIE LE SIDANER, PRIEST, THOMAZEAU, HAITI.

Q. Give your full name, where you are located, your occupation, and how long you have been in that occupation on the island of Haiti.

A. Abbe Louis Marie le Sidaner, curé of Thomazeau; 16 years

Q. You are a French citizen?

A. Yes.

Q. Born in France?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are the priest at Thomazeau?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been the priest at Thomazeau?

A. Five years and a half.

Q. And to what territory do your activities extend?

A. The commune of Thomazeau.

Q. And how large an area is that?

A. Does the father speak English?

A. No.

Q. How large an area is that?

A. I do not know the extent of the commune.

Q. Have you been familiar with the sentiment and the life of the Commune of Thomazeau during the past five and a half years?

A. All of the priests in the communes here live intimately with the people.

Q. Will you tell us briefly and exactly what were the sentiments of the commune of Thomazeau at the time of the American occupation and landing in 1915?

A. The people were very peaceable in this place and full of confidence. They were in full sympathy with the American occupation.

Q. Did they or did they not have confidence in the Americans Gendarmerie organized by the Americans?

A. At the beginning they had full confidence.

Q. Now, will you tell us what are their sentiments toward the American occupation at the present time?

A. They no longer have confidence.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you tell us briefly, if you can, why there has been a change in their sentiments?

Father LE SIDANER. Because of certain cruelties which were committed in the mountains of Crochus especially.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that in your parish?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes; in my parish.

Mr. ANGELL. To what do you refer when you speak of cruelties?

Father LE SIDANER. It came about in this way: Fulfilling my ministry in Crochus, several parishoners came to me crying, denouncing crimes which had been committed toward their husbands. I told them that I wished to take statements in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. Cruelties committed by whom?

Father LE SIDANER. They said that these cruelties were committed by marines and gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make any personal investigation yourself?

Father LE SIDANER. I gathered certain honorable witnesses whom I know to be perfectly reliable.

Mr. ANGELL. Were these witnesses parishoners that you had known yourself?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes; I knew them perfectly and knew them to be perfectly honorable.

Mr. ANGELL. Did these cruelties of which you speak relate to the burning of houses in the region of the Crochus?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes; in the Crochus itself.

The CHAIRMAN. What is that?

Mr. ANGELL. That is the name of a little place—Crochus.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you tell us now what you know yourself—that is, what you have seen and heard yourself—of the burning of houses at Les Crochus?

Father LE SIDANER. Personally, I saw after the fire the houses still smoking.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the approximate date of this event?

Father LE SIDANER. I can not say exactly, but it was the first two weeks of August, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. How many houses?

Father LE SIDANER. I didn't count them exactly, but I believe there were about 250 or 300 houses.

Mr. ANGELL. To whom did these houses belong?

Father LE SIDANER. These houses belonged to inhabitants who lived there.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the occupation of these inhabitants?

Father LE SIDANER. Agriculturalists.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, so that we get the situation: Were these houses in a little village or town or were they scattered throughout the country over what amount of territory?

Mr. ANGELL. Were these houses all close together in a single village, or were they scattered about over the countryside?

Father LE SIDANER. It was all over a region.

The CHAIRMAN. How large a region? Give us some notion about it.

Father LE SIDANER. The dimensions are very difficult to give, since it was in the mountains, and it is very difficult to give the size of the region.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you give us some approximate idea; that is, was it from one end of the region to the other, 5 kilometers or 20 kilometers?

Father LE SIDANER. About 5 kilometers, I should say.

Mr. ANGELL. You mean from one end of the region to the other?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you yourself see these 250 or 300 houses which you just stated were burned?

Father LE SIDANER. I saw them still smoking.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you make a personal tour through this whole region and see these several houses burning, or after having been burned?

Father LE SIDANER. I saw all the houses burn and some of them still smoking.

Mr. ANGELL. Tell us what you know, if anything, of the person or persons who burned or were responsible for the burning of these houses.

Father LE SIDANER. It was a company of marines and Haitian gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Commanded by whom, if you know?

Father LE SIDANER. By one named Wedor.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, read that. I don't think he has that all.

(The record was read by the stenographer.)

The CHAIRMAN. Give his full name, and rank, and location.

Father LE SIDANER. I know no more than that.

Q. Do you know this Lieut. Wedor personally?

SIDANER. Yes; he came to my house afterwards to make excuses.

Q. How long a time after the burning did Lieut. Wedor come there?

SIDANER. I don't know exactly how many days, but I think it was a few days that followed the burning.

Q. Where was your house?

SIDANER. My house was in the center itself of the burning.

Q. Was your house burned?

SIDANER. Yes.

Q. Was your chapel and presbytery burned?

SIDANER. Yes. As were all other houses. No houses remained.

Q. What did Lieut. Wedor say to you on the occasion of his visit?

SIDANER. I don't remember exactly his words, but I do recall that he made excuses.

Q. Excuses for what?

SIDANER. Excuses for having burned the chapel, which he said he had burned as a chapel.

Q. Did he say anything to you about the burning of other houses in the region?

SIDANER. It is more than a year and a half ago, and I don't remember his words.

Q. Do you remember whether or not he did say anything about the burning of other houses in the region?

SIDANER. He spoke of them, but I don't recall his words. I re-

Q. Reproached him with what?

SIDANER. For having burned these houses unnecessarily.

Q. Now, let me suggest, you are simply giving conclusions, "He made excuses" and "I reproached him." Give us as nearly as you can the substance of those excuses, and what you said to him in those remarks, so that we can understand that as an American lawyer. Under our practice we want the substance.

Yes.

Q. Let me say, explain to him, if he doesn't remember the substance of it, under the rules of practice as we have them.

SIDANER. I have already said that I don't know his exact words.

Q. If you are unable to give us the exact words, will you give us the substance of what he said on that occasion?

SIDANER. I don't know exactly his words. I know only that he made excuses to me. That is all I recall.

Q. When you say that he made excuses to you, do you or do you not mean that he made excuses for having burned or caused the burning of other houses in the region at that time?

SIDANER. No. It was because he had put fire into my presbytery and he excused himself for that.

Q. What reason did he give for the burning of the houses?

SIDANER. I don't recall his excuses. He was sent there against

Q. Were there any Cacos in that region at that time?

SIDANER. There had been Cacos the day before and the day pre-

Q. Were these Cacos persons living in that region in those houses who were burned?

SIDANER. No; these Cacos were refugees from Mire Ballais.

Q. What were they doing up there, those Cacos?

SIDANER. They were hiding there only.

Q. Hiding in these houses that were burned?

SIDANER. No; they were hiding in the woods.

Q. Did the lieutenant give any reason for burning the houses?

SIDANER. It was because the Cacos were there. That is the only reason.

Q. Did you make up at that time a list of the houses burned?

SIDANER. I did not make the list, but a list has been sent. Here

It was not made by him. I will not offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. How many does it show?

Father LE SIDANER. I didn't count exactly, but I believe there are about .

The CHAIRMAN. Who prepared this list for him?

Father LE SIDANER. This list was prepared by a chief of the chapel.

Mr. ANGELL. Is this a religious officer under your authority?

Father LE SIDANER. No; it is a Haitian who is sacristan.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it prepared at your request or under your direction?

Father LE SIDANER. No. I did not know that the list was being prepared; it was sent to me without my knowledge.

Mr. ANGELL. Does this list give the names of the owners whose houses were burned and the number of houses in each case burned?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes; perfectly.

Senator JONES. You believe it to be a correct list, do you?

Father LE SIDANER. The list is correct.

Mr. ANGELL. Do the committee care to accept that list?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. ANGELL. As made under the circumstances?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

(The list above referred to and presented by the witness is on file with the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Just in that connection, ask him this one question. Has he gone over this list carefully, and does he recall that any or all of these houses were in fact burned?

Father LE SIDANER. I have personally examined the list, and nearly all were burned.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know many or all of the persons whose names appear on this list?

Father LE SIDANER. I don't know all of them, but I know a large part of them.

The CHAIRMAN. That we may understand this more fully, does that party to give the names of the owners or occupants or their location or address? Other words, was there a tenant or something of that kind?

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell us whether these names appearing here are the names of the owners or of the tenants of these houses?

Father LE SIDANER. Ordinarily, they are all owners.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the number, if you knew, even approximately, of the Cacos who had appeared in this region the day before the burning of these houses?

Father LE SIDANER. I don't know the exact number, but it was a band of Benoit Batrville, who had passed by there the day before.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see him or see this band?

Father LE SIDANER. No; I did not see him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he may any inquiry, or did any of the people living in that vicinity tell him how many there were, or approximately how many there were?

Father LE SIDANER. The people of the place came and told me that the band had been there.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, that doesn't answer the question. Did they tell you how many there were, approximately?

Father LE SIDANER. No. They told me only that it was a band of Benoit Batrville.

Mr. ANGELL. Were all these houses burned at the same time? That is, within a period of a day or so, if you know?

Father LE SIDANER. All on the same day.

Mr. ANGELL. Were these houses situated so close together that the fire could have spread by natural causes merely from one house to another?

Father LE SIDANER. They were in various groups, and fire was put in one group.

Mr. ANGELL. That doesn't answer my question. Were the houses situated so close together that it would have been possible for the fire to have spread from one group of houses to another group?

Father LE SIDANER. That is to say, that when fire was put to one house it could have caught the other houses in the same group?

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, spread to the other houses by means of sparks.

Father LE SIDANER. Yes; they wanted it to spread.

The CHAIRMAN. Another question in that connection. How many groups of houses were there?

SIDANER. I can not tell the number of groups.

MAN. Well, you can tell approximately. We are not asking the SIDANER. It is very difficult to say. In the mountains it is very MAN. Were there 5 or 10 or 15 or 20?

SIDANER. Oh, there were at least 20 groups.

NES. What kind of houses were they?

SIDANER. They were houses covered with grass.

NES. How large was each house?

SIDANER. Ordinarily the houses in the mountains are about 30

NES. Of what material are the walls made?

SIDANER. The walls are made, as it is said in the country, in

NES. Is that the size generally of those houses, 12 by 30?

SIDANER. Ordinarily, those are the dimensions of the houses of the NES. How many people live in a house?

SIDANER. That depends upon the families. There are families who

NES. Are those houses divided into rooms?

SIDANER. Ordinarily into two rooms.

NES. How are they furnished?

SIDANER. More or less well furnished, according to the means

NES. What became of the furniture that was in these houses when SIDANER. According to the declarations of the inhabitants, the NES. Do you mean that it was taken by the gendarmerie and carried SIDANER. Yes. It was taken away. That is to say, it was stolen.

NES. Where was it taken to?

SIDANER. I don't know.

NES. Did you see the gendarmerie there?

SIDANER. No; they had gone. I didn't get there until sometime

NES. How many of them were there, according to the report of SIDANER. I did not ask how many there were there, or if I did

NES. Were they Haitians or Americans?

SIDANER. Haitians and Americans.

NES. How many Americans?

SIDANER. I can not say.

NES. What became of the people after their houses were burned?

SIDANER. The people were dispersed; terrified.

NES. Where did they go to?

SIDANER. In the woods.

NES. Did they come back and rebuild the houses?

SIDANER. It was about eight months later when I went to France,

NES. Did the gendarmes have any wagons to take away the fur-

SIDANER. No.

NES. Do you believe that those gendarmes carried away all the SIDANER. No; not the furniture, but the articles which were

NES. What became of the furniture?

SIDANER. The furniture was burned in the houses.

NES. Did the inhabitants try to save any of the furniture?

SIDANER. The inhabitants had fled.

NES. From whom did you gain your information about this occur-

Father LE SIDANER. From the inhabitants, the victims themselves.

Senator JONES. How far away had they gone?

Father LE SIDANER. In the woods and ravines around there where they were hidden.

Senator JONES. Did you go out where they were?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes.

Senator JONES. How long did they stay out in the woods?

Father LE SIDANER. They stayed out in the woods several months. Some of them returned, but the rest stayed out in the woods during several months.

Senator JONES. Why didn't they come back immediately? What were they afraid of?

Father LE SIDANER. They were terrified. They were afraid of a return by the gendarmes.

Senator JONES. Where had the gendarmes gone?

Father LE SIDANER. After the fire?

Senator JONES. Yes.

Father LE SIDANER. They returned to Mire Bealais probably.

Senator JONES. How far away is that?

Father LE SIDANER. Two hours on horseback.

The CHAIRMAN. Where was Father Le Sidaner when his house and chapel were burned?

Father LE SIDANER. I was in Thomazeau itself.

The CHAIRMAN. In the home?

Father LE SIDANER. At my house at Thomazeau.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say anything to these men who burned your house and chapel at that time?

Father LE SIDANER. No. I was not there at the time. I have my house at Thomazeau, or my principal house. I have a house and chapel in the district of Crochus.

The CHAIRMAN. How far were you from this village of Crochus at the time of the burning?

Father LE SIDANER. It is about four hours on horseback.

The CHAIRMAN. Was your house and chapel in one of these groups of houses that was burned?

Father LE SIDANER. Separated in a big courtyard.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the people in that vicinity afraid of the Cacos?

Father LE SIDANER. They were not in the Cacos. They were afraid of the Cacos also.

The CHAIRMAN. While the Cacos were in that vicinity did they remain there?

Father LE SIDANER. In this connection, I have an explanation to make. I had said to the people of this region that when the Cacos came there to the American authorities, either at Thomazeau or at Mire Bealais, that the Cacos were there, in order to show that they did not make common cause with the Cacos.

Senator JONES. What did the Cacos do when they were there?

Father LE SIDANER. They did nothing bad. They did no harm.

Senator JONES. What was the occasion for the Cacos being there?

Father LE SIDANER. They had been driven out of Mire Balais and were hiding there.

Senator JONES. They were hiding in this village or this group of houses?

Father LE SIDANER. No; they had made a camp there.

Senator JONES. Where had they made their camp?

Father LE SIDANER. At a place called Marain, just before the chapel.

Senator JONES. How close to the chapel was that camp?

Father LE SIDANER. Just in front of the chapel. Only the road separated them.

Senator JONES. What sort of a camp did they make?

Father LE SIDANER. They just slept and ate there under the trees.

The CHAIRMAN. How long after or before the marines and gendarmes arrived did you learn that the Cacos were in that vicinity?

Father LE SIDANER. It was several days before the fire I had given the order to go and to notify.

The CHAIRMAN. Given whom the order?

Father LE SIDANER. The inhabitants, who had come and notified me.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they tell you about how many Cacos there were?

Father LE SIDANER. No. They only told me it was a band of Benoit.

ERMAN. Did you ask this informant how many were there?

E SIDANER. No, I did not ask.

ERMAN. Did not you think it was important that the American forces gendarmerie should know how many were there?

E SIDANER. The one who went to notify them must have told them there were.

ERMAN. Did you not want to know how many there were there when he told you?

E SIDANER. I did not think to ask him. He told me it was a band of ERMAN. How many marines and gendarmerie came?

E SIDANER. I said awhile ago that I did not recall the exact number it was in the sixties.

ERMAN. Where did the Cacos get their food supplies which they ate near the chapel?

E SIDANER. They made requisition upon the inhabitants, stealing a good deal there, as was the custom.

ERMAN. And did the inhabitants there give food supplies to the Cacos?

E SIDANER. They were obliged to. The Cacos did not ask for it.

ERMAN. Were any of these people paid for this food supplies by the government? Don't they do that?

E SIDANER. No.

ERMAN. Had the Cacos been there before?

E SIDANER. No, no, never.

ERMAN. Did some of your people sympathize with the Cacos?

E SIDANER. No, not one. On the contrary.

ERMAN. Did not Lieut. Wedor say to you that the reason for the burnings of places was that the Cacos were being sheltered or supplied by the E SIDANER. No; he did not give me any reason. I don't recall exactly. I reproached him for having put fire without asking for information.

ERMAN. What did Lieut. Wedor say to that?

E SIDANER. I don't recall exactly what he said beyond that. I talked a few minutes—not more.

ERMAN. Lieut. Wedor or the American forces offered to rebuild this house, did they not?

E SIDANER. No; and I did not ask either.

ERMAN. Are you opposed to the Americans continuing here on the

E SIDANER. No.

ERMAN. Do you want them to remain here?

E SIDANER. That is a question which I am not competent to answer. I do good and inspire confidence in all these people, which is necessary, in such a way that this population may return to their country in peace and continue to work without fear of being again molested by the Cacos or other authorities.

ERMAN. Did these Cacos have any horses with them or burros.

E SIDANER. Some of them had horses, and in order to get away they took their horses everywhere they had gone.

ERMAN. Did they take saddles also?

E SIDANER. They didn't tell me. The inhabitants didn't complain of anything stolen from by the Cacos, outside of foodstuffs.

ERMAN. Before the American forces came here, did the Cacos come in contact with the people in your section?

E SIDANER. No; perhaps in the past before my time, but in my time not at all.

ERMAN. They did, however, do a great deal of stealing and cause a great deal of rioting and disturbance throughout the island here, did they not, during the American occupation?

E SIDANER. Before the occupation there were no Cacos in my country, in my time there.

ERMAN. That does not answer my question. I did not limit my question to your time. I said throughout the island.

E SIDANER. I do not know for the past, not having been in charge of the island at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. You know that as a matter of general information, do you not? As to matters in the island prior thereto?

Father LE SIDANER. What conditions? I can't answer that question. I do not know the Cacos before.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I will not press that any further.

Senator JONES. What do these Cacos do, and why do they call them Cacos? Father LE SIDANER. I can not answer that question. I am a foreigner and do not know why they call them Cacos.

Senator JONES. What do the Cacos do?

Father LE SIDANER. They don't exist any more. But they made war among the Cacos there were those who made war purely and simply, and with them there were many people who formed in groups to pillage and so on. Those I do not call Cacos, in my opinion. They are thieves.

The CHAIRMAN. Didn't the political leaders or some of the political leaders join forces with the Cacos at different times during the revolutions in the island?

Father LE SIDANER. I don't know. I am not informed on that question. I have seen the Cacos in the mountains; that is all. I have never seen any of the city people with them at all; never.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it understood among the American forces and the gendarmerie that the people in this burned region sympathized with the Cacos?

Father LE SIDANER. That is to say, if I understand that, they were not informed. It is that I reproached them for; because I myself, exactly, as I reported to the authorities, Haitian and American, as often as I saw them in Crochus and in all of the Commune of Thomazeau there were no Cacos at all. The Cacos which they found in the mountains of Crochus were forced to the commune, coming from Mira Balais or Los Coabas. At Crochus I was after making an investigation myself, that there were not more than a dozen of our bad people who were joined with the band of Cacos.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that you say that you think there were more than a dozen of your people who joined with a band of Cacos?

Father LE SIDANER. There were not more than a dozen whom I knew of the Cacos. That is one dozen in 6,000 people.

Senator JONES. Where do those 12 live?

Father LE SIDANER. This dozen were rather vagabonds, having no precise place to live, and I myself denounced them to the gendarmerie.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you give their names to the gendarmerie or to the marines?

Father LE SIDANER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me ask you another question: Do not you feel that whatever was done there was done under the orders of Lieut. Wedor, a matter of military necessity, and not because there was any malice or animosity of destruction toward the people?

Father LE SIDANER. I can not judge the sentiments, the intimate sentiments of Lieut. Wedor. That for which I reproached him was to have burned, caused to have burned, the houses of the population absolutely peaceable, without asking any information previously.

Senator JONES. How do you know that he did not ask for information previously?

Father LE SIDANER. I know because he set the fire upon his arrival.

Senator JONES. Who told you that that is what he did?

Father LE SIDANER. The inhabitants themselves.

Senator JONES. Did they tell you that he had no information regarding the presence there of the Cacos?

Father LE SIDANER. I have just said exactly that it was the inhabitants themselves, from the places burned—

Senator JONES. Were the inhabitants there when you returned and saw the houses?

Mr. ANGELL. Pardon me, he has not finished his answer.

Father LE SIDANER. Who themselves sent one of the notables to the proper authorities of Mira Balais that the Cacos were there in their houses and they did that in order to do their duty and show that they did not make common cause with the Cacos.

Senator JONES. Why did not the people there run the Cacos away themselves?

Father LE SIDANER. With what? They were not armed and they were peaceable people; very peaceable. They had not the habitude of arms.

Senator JONES. Have you any idea how many Cacos there were there?

SIDANER. No. I have told you that it was a band of Benoit, but of the band of Benoit changed from time to time as to its number. I had never seen the band of Benoit. The largest band that I Crochus was 17.

DDIE. I want to ask if some of those Cacos that you say were in might not have been part of the band of Benoit, or sympathizers and?

SIDANER. I don't know to which band of Benoit they belonged. they were vagabonds who profited by these orders to pillage and DDIE. Might not they have been the ones who burned the houses e?

SIDANER. No; they did not exist at that time. It was later.

DDIE. Don't you believe that the Cacos had a practice of trying to lizers in the various villages?

SIDANER. Yes; by big promises; but they never succeeded in this DDIE. Would not they have desired, in the case of members which have secured, to keep it secret from the other inhabitants of the SIDANER. No; that could not exist. That would have been always

MAN. Is that all?

DDIE. I have nothing further to ask this witness.

MAN. Call the next witness.

L. I offer in evidence the list that the witness had.

MAN. Yes.

L. Your name is Polidor St. Pierre?

ERRE. Polidor St. Pierre.

L. You were born at St. Marc?

ERRE. At St. Marc.

L. North of Port au Prince on the coast?

ERRE. Upon the coast north of Port au Prince.

L. Where do you live?

ERRE. At St. Marc.

L. How long have you lived in St. Marc—all your life?

ERRE. Since my birth.

L. What was your occupation in 1918?

ERRE. I was clerk in the justice court.

L. Is that still your occupation?

ERRE. No.

MAN. He was at what time?

L. In 1918, sir. And you were clerk of the justice court in Jan-

ERRE. Yes.

L. In your capacity as clerk of this court were you, in general, a legal procedure in that court?

ERRE. Naturally.

L. Now, will you tell us—confining your story to what you yourself d heard—will you tell us the story of your arrest at St. Marc?

ERRE. You see it is with indignation that I tell you this. It was uary, 1919, I was at my house after leaving the court. I saw endarmerie sergeant, who told me that Capt. Brown asked for me.

L. Do you know the full name of this Capt. Brown?

ERRE. I know his name is Brown; that is all.

L. Who was Capt. Brown?

ERRE. He was the captain at St. Marc.

L. Captain of what?

ERRE. Captain of the gendarmerie.

L. Was he an American?

ERRE. Yes.

L. Continue.

ERRE. I arrived at his private house. He had me conducted to Mr. ANGELL. By whom?

Mr. St. PIERRE. The same sergeant. Arriving there he put me in iron hand and foot, and hanged me. I passed five days hung thus without food or drinking.

Mr. ANGELL. How were you hung up?

Mr. St. PIERRE. By the aid of a cord over one of the rafters of the prison.

Mr. ANGELL. Were your hands or feet tied during this period?

Mr. St. PIERRE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did the rope by which you say you were hung up—was it attached to your body?

Mr. St. PIERRE. They attached it to the chains of the handcuffs.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you still on your wrists the marks of these handcuffs?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you show them to the committee, if they care to see?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. There are other scars on his body, and this is so important that I will do it all at one time, I think. What happened at the end of this period when you say you were strung up?

Mr. St. PIERRE. The next morning this same Brown entered into prison.

Mr. ANGELL. You say the next morning. Do you mean the morning after you were taken to prison?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Continue.

Mr. St. PIERRE. He entered, and he caused to be boiled a can of water then they took me and put me in a basin of cold water.

Mr. ANGELL. What was done with this can of hot water?

Mr. St. PIERRE. They put it on the fire.

Mr. ANGELL. What was done with it afterwards?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Afterwards they took a can of kerosene and a funnel, and he put in my mouth to make me drink the water, and I had three teeth broken.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they pour this water down this funnel thus put into your mouth?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was the person who did that, if you know?

Mr. St. PIERRE. It was Brown and the gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Brown in the room at the time this actually was done?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Naturally, he was there.

Mr. ANGELL. How many gendarmes were there?

Mr. St. PIERRE. There were four.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the names of those gendarmes?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Give them.

Mr. St. PIERRE. André Jean Baptiste, Kernison Raymond, Charlemagne Perceval.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this Capt. Brown in the room all the time while this punishment was going on of putting this funnel in your mouth and pouring water down?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; because it was he who caused it to be done.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear him give orders to the gendarmes to do this?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us what was said.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell us now the words which Capt. Brown was giving any such orders to these four gendarmes?

Mr. St. PIERRE. I was so indisposed that I could not understand his words, only I heard him say this, "Kill him."

Mr. ANGELL. Are those the only words that you can remember?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. These four gendarmes were all Haitians?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; Haitians.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Capt. Brown of the marine force or of the gendarmerie?

Mr. St. PIERRE. He was the captain of the gendarmerie at St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. At this point may I just suggest to the committee that in the already considerable testimony in the record, the testimony of Mr. Evans, Capt. Fitzgerald Brown, in command of the prison at St. Marc in January 1919?

What happened after you say this water was poured down your mouth through this funnel?

Mr. St. PIERRE. After he caused to be heated a big, hot iron.

Was it this same day or another day?

RE. Two days afterwards; which he placed upon various parts

You say "he." Whom do you mean?

RE. Capt. Brown.

Where were you when you say he applied this hot iron to of your body?

RE. In prison.

Whereabouts in the prison?

RE. One of the rooms of the prison.

Was it a cell in which you were confined?

RE. Yes; in a cell.

How large was this cell, approximately? Was it as large as

AN. Is that important?

I was trying to find out whether there was room for other peo-

AN. Put that question direct.

Were there other persons present at the time you say Capt. this hot iron to your body?

RE. Yes; there were several.

Who, if you can say?

RE. Men and women.

You don't understand my purpose. I asked you what persons, if ne particular room at the time when this was done to you.

RE. The prisoners; men and women prisoners.

About how many?

RE. About 20 in that room.

And we are to understand that these approximately 20 per- plication of this hot iron to your body?

RE. Yes, naturally.

What time of day did this happen?

RE. At 12 midday.

AN. Were these men and women inhabitants of that vicinity, ive their names?

Were any or all of these 20 prisoners men and women who t this time inhabitants of St. Marc?

RE. Of St. Marc and of the city and the country.

Can you give the names of any of those 20 persons?

RE. Yes.

How many names can you remember?

AN. And let me suggest if he knows where they are living now, sent addresses.

You have given me on this sheet of paper two names. Will you

RE. Idora Donacien, and Mede, a man.

Do you know where this woman and this man live now?

RE. Yes; the woman is at St. Marc and the man is here in Could you give us some description of the—

AN. What is he in the prison here for?

RE. He was condemned at St. Marc and I think they sent him

Condemned by what tribunal?

RE. The court of the first instance; at that time the civil court. That is the Haitian court.

RE. Yes.

And he is serving now in a Haitian prison?

AN. What was the charge against him on which he was con-

RE. He was a gendarme.

You have not understood my question. On what charge was RE. Because of a man whom he had killed while he was a

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell us how Idora Donacien, the woman at St. Marc, could be found? That is to say, the house where she lives in St. Marc?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. She lives in the city of St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell us where in the city, what house?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. In the Rue Marine.

Mr. ANGELL. And you believe she is now in St. Marc?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. I think so.

Mr. ANGELL. These are the only names which you can remember of the persons whom you say were in the room at that time?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember now whether or not you knew or rec- any other of those 20; that is, at that time if you know any others of the

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes; at that time.

Mr. ANGELL. Besides these two?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And have you now forgotten their names?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes; since I stayed in prison six months the others had to go home.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me suggest there is one very important matter that you have not touched on. What was the charge against him? What trial did he have?

Mr. ANGELL. I will come to it. Were you tried—

The CHAIRMAN. Put the question first. What charge was made against

Mr. ANGELL. What charge, if any, was made against you at the time you put in prison?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Capt. Brown himself said that a theft had been committed at St. Marc, and I was among the number.

The CHAIRMAN. Public funds, was it?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the charge written, so far as you know?

The CHAIRMAN. Try to find out what kind of a theft; the stealing of Mr. ANGELL. Did you see any written charge against you?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. None.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, tell us what this theft was of which you were being concerned with.

Mr. ST. PIERRE. The theft of money.

Mr. ANGELL. From where and at what time?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. It was the 24th of December.

Mr. ANGELL. Of what year?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. You say you were imprisoned—

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; there is a mistake there of some kind. He was arrested on January 3, 1919. It could not have been for theft committed December, 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. You have just said you were put in prison in January. Then the theft to which you have referred could not have been committed December, 1919.

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Now, from whom was this money stolen, if you were charged?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes; Capt. Brown afterwards said it was another.

Mr. ANGELL. I asked you from whom was the charge that you had money?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. From a man named Daniel.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was the theft alleged to have taken place?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. At St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. And a theft from the house of this Mr. Daniel?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was anyone ever actually tried for this theft from Mr. Daniel?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know his name?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Give it.

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Christian, he is called.

Mr. ANGELL. Was he at St. Marc?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was he tried?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. In the criminal court at St. Marc

ANGELL. When if you know?

ST. PIERRE. I don't know exactly the year.

ANGELL. Give it approximately as near as you can. Was it in 1920.

ST. PIERRE. I think it was in 1919.

ANGELL. And do you know what sentence he received?

ST. PIERRE. I was sick at that time.

ANGELL. Do you know now what the sentence was imposed on this man?

ST. PIERRE. He was liberated.

ANGELL. Was he found guilty, or was he acquitted of the charge of having from Daniel?

ST. PIERRE. He was acquitted by the jury.

CHAIRMAN. You said something about his being burned with this iron. Is what parts of his person.

ANGELL. I will have it put in the record by his question and answers, and I want him to show those marks.

ANGELL. Was anybody ever convicted of that crime?

ANGELL. Do you know, yes or no, whether or not any person was ever convicted of having stolen this money from Daniel?

ST. PIERRE. Yes; because Capt. Brown brought the money to the prison presence, declaring it was Christian who stole it.

ANGELL. Do you know whether any person was tried before a court and guilty of having stolen this money?

ST. PIERRE. No.

ANGELL. Now, will you tell us the number of places on your body where this hot iron was applied by Capt. Brown. Tell us first approximately number of places and then describe briefly the parts of your body.

ST. PIERRE. I can not tell, because I would have to undress.

CHAIRMAN. Let him indicate by pointing. Stand up and indicate with fingers where.

ANGELL. Tell us generally where the iron was applied.

ST. PIERRE. All over my body. On the back and on the legs.

ANGELL. Were these several applications made at the same time?

ST. PIERRE. Yes.

ANGELL. Did you receive medical treatment for these burns at the time, after your liberation from prison?

ST. PIERRE. While I was in prison; yes.

ANGELL. Were these several applications made at the same time?

ST. PIERRE. Yes.

ANGELL. Did you receive medical treatment for these burns at the time, after your liberation from prison?

ST. PIERRE. While I was in prison; yes.

ANGELL. Did you receive any medical treatment afterwards?

ST. PIERRE. Yes; afterwards; by Capt. Brown.

ANGELL. You say that you received medical treatment by Capt. Brown himself?

ST. PIERRE. Yes. When he found that I was not guilty.

ANGELL. Did you receive medical treatment from any doctor?

ST. PIERRE. A doctor of the gendarmerie.

ANGELL. Do you know what his name is?

ST. PIERRE. I have forgotten his name.

ANGELL. Where did he live?

ST. PIERRE. I believe he is here at Port au Prince.

ANGELL. Where did he live at the time that he gave the medical treatment?

ST. PIERRE. He was a gendarme at St. Maro.

ANGELL. This gendarme was a doctor. Tell us briefly the nature of the medical treatment which you received, either from Capt. Brown or from this gendarme doctor.

ST. PIERRE. They gave me treatment every two or three days. They gave me dressings every two or three days, and Capt. Brown told me that as I was perfectly healed he would put me at liberty.

ANGELL. Have you tried to locate this gendarme doctor recently?

ST. PIERRE. No.

ANGELL. When did you come to Port au Prince?

ST. PIERRE. Wednesday.

Mr. ANGELL. And what did you come down here for?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. To place my case before the investigating committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If he locates this doctor or finds out where he is, to furnish the names for the committee.

Mr. ANGELL. I have a written statement by the doctor, signed by him on stamped paper here, and I was just about to ask him whether the name signed here he can state whether that is the name.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all right.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you state whether or not this gendarme doctor is Claymore Lamer?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. It was after I came out of prison that I consulted Claymore Lamer, because I was still suffering.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did Dr. Claymore Lamer live?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. He was living at St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. Does he still live there?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes; but he is not in St. Marc. He is in France.

The CHAIRMAN. What is this statement you have, Mr. Angell?

Mr. ANGELL. The statement is technically a medical description of the condition in which the doctor claims to have found the body of Mr. St. Pierre.

The CHAIRMAN. What is its date?

Mr. ANGELL. June 13, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. At whose instance was this procured; do you know?

Mr. ANGELL. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Who handed you this?

Mr. ANGELL. This is a folio of several papers handed to me by a French gentleman here.

The CHAIRMAN. By whom? Let us trace it down.

Mr. ANGELL. It was handed up to me this morning. I was trying to find which one it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Who is there here who knows about it? Let us see if we can.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you want to excuse this witness now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; I simply want to trace it down. You said it was handed to you?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, is there anybody in the audience who handed it to you or who knows who handed it to you?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; it is Mr. Thoby, the gentleman down there, who handed it to me. I had forgotten which one of them it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Just for the record here now give us the full name of how he got possession of it.

Mr. ANGELL. Perceval Thoby. Mr. Thoby says it was not he who handed it to me, but he can tell me who did.

The CHAIRMAN. Let him tell who gave it to him.

Mr. THOBY. When I went to St. Marc, in February, 1919, a relative of Polidor came to me and asked me to go to Port au Prince and get Mr. Lamer released.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not answer my question. Let us be brief.

Mr. ANGELL. Just tell me who handed me this dossier. Who gave the dossier to me?

Mr. THOBY. This dossier had been given to two others and that is all in it. I brought them to Mr. Lamer.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know who gave the dossier to me this morning?

Mr. THOBY. This morning?

Mr. ANGELL. Who handed me the dossier?

Mr. THOBY. Mr. Nau.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, so as to hurry it along, does this give a description of the wounds?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; it is a technical medical description.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it under oath, or simply a signed statement?

Mr. ANGELL. It is a signed statement on stamped paper, but I never saw it until this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you read it over; so that you can say how it corresponds to the description he gives of his own injuries?

Mr. ANGELL. Generally speaking, yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You desire to incorporate this?

ANGELL. I do. I ask to offer this in evidence.

CHAIRMAN. Very well.

The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

ANGELL. Can you remember during what period of time you received from Dr. Claymore Lamer?

St. PIERRE. Immediately after coming out of prison, for I was sick.

ANGELL. And for what period of time thereafter?

St. PIERRE. No.

ANGELL. During what period of time after your liberation did Dr. Clay-Lamer give you physical attention?

St. PIERRE. During seven months.

ANGELL. Can you tell us in what prison in Port Au Prince Mede is now held?

St. PIERRE. I don't know the prisons of Port Au Prince.

CHAIRMAN. What is the man's first name?

St. PIERRE. Medelus Valet.

ANGELL. Can you remember now the approximate date or time that you freed from prison?

St. PIERRE. It was in June, but I can not recall the date.

ANGELL. June of what year?

St. PIERRE. June, 1919.

ANGELL. The doctor's certificate is dated June 13, 1919?

CHAIRMAN. Is that in French?

ANGELL. Yes, sir.

CHAIRMAN. Let me see it, will you?

ANGELL. During this period, from January to June, were you confined all that time in the prison of St. Marc?

St. PIERRE. Yes.

ANGELL. Did you at any time during that period, from January to June, see any foreigner or foreigners confined in that prison?

St. PIERRE. Those who were in prison—the men and women who were ANGELL. You don't understand my question. I said, do you know any foreigners—were there any foreigner or foreigners among the prisoners in prison at that time?

St. PIERRE. Yes. One foreigner.

ANGELL. Who was he, if you know?

St. PIERRE. It was Pastor Evans, who was present at all this scene.

CHAIRMAN. Does he mean by this that he saw this iron applied?

ANGELL. Do you know the first name of Pastor Evans?

St. PIERRE. No. Evans only.

ANGELL. Did Mr. Evans speak French and Creole?

St. PIERRE. No. He spoke English only.

ANGELL. Do you know whether or not he is the pastor who has been at least six times in Haiti working among the people?

St. PIERRE. Yes.

ANGELL. Can you state whether or not Pastor Evans was present among the prisoners who witnessed the application of this hot iron by Capt. Lamer?

St. PIERRE. No; he was closed in another cell.

ANGELL. Did you make any complaint when you were released from prison?

St. PIERRE. No. While I was in prison.

ANGELL. To whom did you make the complaint, if any?

St. PIERRE. I made the complaint first to the President of the Republic, then to the Minister of the Interior.

ANGELL. Did you do that verbally or in writing?

St. PIERRE. No; my relatives in writing to the minister of justice and to the minister of the interior.

ANGELL. Were these complaints—

CHAIRMAN. To identify this, let him say what relatives. Give their names and in what form this complaint was made, and the names. There may not have been changes in these different ministers. Give the names of the ministers to whom these complaints were made.

ANGELL. Tell us now the names of the relatives by whom the complaints were made, you say, to the President of the Republic.

St. PIERRE. Mr. Christian Noel.

Mr. ANGELL. Is Christian Noel a relative of yours?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What relation?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes; he is my nephew, the son of my sister.

Mr. ANGELL. Where does he live?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. In St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. Does he live at St. Marc now?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the date of the complaint which you say to the President of the Republic.

Mr. ST. PIERRE. I don't know. I was in prison. Mr. Perceval took some steps on my behalf with the minister of justice and the minister interior.

Mr. ANGELL. And when did Mr. Thoby take these steps, if you know it before you were liberated from prison, or afterwards?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Before my liberation.

Mr. ANGELL. Tell us briefly the circumstances under which you were released from prison in June, 1919.

Mr. ST. PIERRE. After many steps had been taken by Mr. Thoby: Capt. Brown sent me to the juge d'instruction, who put me at liberty having heard me or tried me.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ascertain at the time that you were put at liberty whether the juge d'instruction had in his possession or among the papers of your case any written charges? I will put it more simply. Do you know whether or not there was any written file? Was there a written file case?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Who had this file?

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the public files, do you?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; that is what I am trying to get at.

The CHAIRMAN. Ask him the question direct. Was it a public file?

Mr. ANGELL. Was it a public file?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it among the public records held by the juge d'instruction?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. I have only one document of the juge d'instruction.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you got that with you?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. I believe it is in that file.

Mr. ANGELL. I hand you file and ask you if you can pick out from among the papers in there the paper to which you refer. What is this paper? Are you now handling me?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. It is a copy of the ordinance which discharged me.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought it was an original record.

Mr. ANGELL. It is, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. He said it was a copy?

The INTERPRETER. A certified copy.

Mr. ANGELL. On duly stamped paper and authenticated.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to introduce it in the record?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give us the substance of it?

Mr. ANGELL. It was simply handed me this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be received in evidence, but meanwhile permit me to adjourn at the recess, if you will read it over, so you can give the substance of it for our guidance.

Mr. ANGELL. After you were put at liberty, did you have any conversation with Capt. Brown regarding any complaint made by you or in your name?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. No; never.

The CHAIRMAN. Your question was limited to after his release.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have any such conversation with him prior to your release?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. No; never. It was in prison.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you have any conversation with him on this subject while you were in prison?

Mr. ST. PIERRE. Yes. He came to the prison.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, find out when this was and who, if anybody, was present and then let him go on and tell it.

Mr. ANGELL. Was anybody present at any such conversation that you had th Capt. Brown while you were in the prison?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; the prisoners.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give us the names of any prisoners who were sent?

Mr. St. PIERRE. No; that is three years and I have forgotten.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the approximate date, if you can remember, of the conversation with the captain in the prison?

The CHAIRMAN. Let us not make a mistake about that. He does not mean three years, because he said he was arrested in January, 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. It is two and a half years ago, though. We are in December, 21, now.

The CHAIRMAN. I know, but this is toward his release, and he was there six months. Get the facts. I don't want any advantage taken of it in any way. I want the exact facts, whatever they are.

Mr. ANGELL. To come back to your answer a moment ago, calling your attention to the fact that you said just now that you could not remember these names, since all this took place three years ago.

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; I can not recall the names.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you mean to say that this conversation took place actually three years ago?

Mr. St. PIERRE. No; it is not three years.

Mr. ANGELL. Tell us what time it was, then.

Mr. St. PIERRE. It was in May, 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. Now tell us the conversation.

Mr. St. PIERRE. He came to the prison. He said to me that he was waiting til I was perfectly cured before putting me at liberty, only he had heard at my family had written letters for me, and if they continued he would not me.

Mr. ANGELL. Were those his words?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; his very words.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you remember any other words, if any, that he said?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; there were other words, but I can not recall them, for, I have told you, I was sick in prison.

Senator JONES. Did Capt. Brown speak French?

Mr. St. PIERRE. Yes; he speaks French.

Mr. ANGELL. I think that is all I have to ask the witness on direct examination.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now a quarter after 12. Just before we go to that, the committee has been furnished with a petition here presented by the engineers Porto Rico, and it may be incorporated in the record; and I suggest that the stenographer print the original and print the translation of it, also.

(The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Here is a letter from a physician with respect to this witness, which has already been incorporated in the record. The committee also has a memoir presented by certain physicians of Haiti, and this likewise may be incorporated in the record.

(The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

Mr. ANGELL. A similar document presented by an organization here, the Hait Cercle of Port Au Prince.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us what the character of it is.

Mr. ANGELL. Requesting full investigation by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be incorporated in the record.

(The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. I think now we will recess until 2 o'clock, and let us be here promptly. How many other witnesses have you here?

Mr. ANGELL. There are several others who are here who will be ready. May I ask the committee at this time, though, about the witness Jolibois. Having this in mind, in view of my conversation just before the official opening of the hearing that I have not a written statement to give at this particular moment of the facts on which Mr. Jolibois would testify if called here, apart from his own case, the article for which he was confined for a considerable time in prison and condemned to pay a fine. If the committee does not consider this until 2 o'clock and then considers it, it will be physically impossible to get Mr. Jolibois here before the close of the examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee never crosses bridges until we get to them. We have had no statements from you as to what you expect to prove by this witness, and until we do have that, we do not feel that we are called upon to decide whether he shall be brought here or not. He is now in prison here are not prejudging the case or the character of his testimony at all. Counsel will present to the committee a brief memorandum indicating what is expected to prove by this witness, we will then determine what we want in regard to it.

Mr. ANGELL. At 2 o'clock?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, or as soon thereafter.

Mr. ANGELL. Not before 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; we don't ask that. We stand recessed until 2 o'clock. (Whereupon the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.)

(During the recess, the witness Polidor St. Pierre, upon the suggestion of counsel and at the request of the committee, showed scars on the front of his left leg above the knee and on the rear of his legs and hips, and also showed handcuffs on his wrists. Witness says scars on his buttocks and rear of his legs were caused by the application of a hot iron. Witness also showed scars on his legs above ankles which he said were made by shackles.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met, pursuant to adjournment, at 2 p. m.

Present: Senators Pomerene (presiding), Oddie, and Jones.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Angell, I think we will inquire of Mr. Thoby for the information we wanted.

Mr. ANGELL. You asked me in the meantime, sir, to look over that letter which I said I had here and which the witness testified came from the court up here. I have looked it over, and as nearly as I understand effect, under Haitian law, it is a certificate duly legalized by the clerk of court at St. Marc as an exact copy of the original document in the archives of the court of the dismissal of charges against the witness Polidor on the ground of this theft, and dismissal by the juge d'instruction, which corresponds to the prosecuting attorney and which corresponds to an indictment by the same d'instruction, of a man named Christian, whom the witness said was accused of the crime, tried and acquitted. This certified copy, which I call evidence, is dated the 26th day of June, 1919, long before this investigation was thought of.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it show that a charge was preferred against the witness?

Mr. ANGELL. It does. It refers to the witness by name.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an entry of dismissal?

Mr. ANGELL. It is an entry of dismissal. It is a legal document.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. The record will be received in evidence.

(The document referred to is on file with the committee.)

Mr. ANGELL. You also asked me yesterday, Senator—asked Mr. Sylvain to prepare a statement of the membership, organization, and disbursement of funds of the Union Patriotique. I am informed that it has been made up as quickly as possible. If completed before the leaving of the committee, it will be handed to them by me. If not, it will be forwarded.

(The document was subsequently furnished to the committee and is on file.)
The CHAIRMAN. And I also at the same time asked for a complete copy of these inscriptions on the banners which were circulated here.

Mr. ANGELL. I will make a note of that to obtain it for you.

The CHAIRMAN. And have that sent to us.

(The document was subsequently furnished to the committee and is on file.)

The CHAIRMAN. I think Mr. Thoby is here, and is simply going to test the measure which he took to present these charges to the Haitian authorities, and perhaps to the military authorities—if such a case—and I think, in the absence of the notary, we will hear his statement.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Thoby, by the way, was not his attorney. Mr. Thoby is an attorney. He simply interested himself.

STATEMENT OF MR. PERCEVAL THOBY.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. THOBY. Perceval Thoby.

The CHAIRMAN. Your business?

Mr. THOBY. Diplomat.

The CHAIRMAN. You are a native Haitian?

Mr. THOBY. I am a native Haitian.

The CHAIRMAN. And except when away on public service, you live here?

Mr. THOBY. I was born in Jamaica.

The CHAIRMAN. And you know this witness

Mr. THOBY. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you known him?

Mr. THOBY. I have known him since he left the prison, the 13th of June, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see him in prison?

Mr. THOBY. No, sir. I did not know him before. I would like to testify in renew. The CHAIRMAN. You are getting along all right. You are a better Englishman than you think you are. When did you first meet this witness?

Mr. THOBY. The first time I met Polidor was the 13th of June, 1919, when he left the prison. I was before the door of the prison when he went out.

The CHAIRMAN. And did he talk with you then about it?

Mr. THOBY. Yes; I talked to him.

The CHAIRMAN. And when did you take the matter up of his case with the Haitian authorities or with the military authorities? Just state briefly what happened. Mr. THOBY. I was in St. Marc, the 7th of February, 1919, when a cousin of Mr. Polidor came to me and asked me to see the Haitian authorities or the American authorities to get his cousin out of prison, because he was illegally detained. He was tortured in prison. I left St. Marc the 26th of February. I went to Port au Prince, and I saw, on the 27th, in the evening, Mr. André Faubert. The CHAIRMAN. Who was he?

Mr. THOBY. Mr. Faubert was the secretary of the council of the ministers.

The CHAIRMAN. What ministers?

Mr. THOBY. The secretary of state, the Haitian minister, and I asked him to see the President, Dartiguenave, in the case of Mr. Polidor, and he told me he would talk of it to the President the next day—

The CHAIRMAN. Now, just before you get to that. Did you tell the ministers what you understood the cause of the complaint was?

Mr. THOBY. I saw no minister that day. It was Mr. André Faubert.

Mr. ANGELL. The secretary of the council of state?

Mr. THOBY. No; the council of secretaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell the secretary what you wanted to see the President about? Mr. THOBY. I did not want to see the President. I did not see him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell him what you wanted to see the President about? Mr. THOBY. Yes; I told him the whole story of Mr. Polidor.

The CHAIRMAN. Without going into the details, did it correspond substantially to what he said here?

Mr. THOBY. Perfectly well.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the minister afterwards?

Mr. THOBY. Afterwards I remained a few days, seeing that the President was doing nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the minister's name?

Mr. THOBY. Mr. Faubert.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me get that straight. I understood you to say this was the secretary of the ministers. Mr. ANGELL. The secretary of the cabinet, Mr. Faubert. The witness has just referred to him, I believe, inaccurately as the minister. He should refer to him as the secretary. The CHAIRMAN. Well, proceed and tell us who you saw in connection with the administration. Mr. THOBY. When I saw that Mr. Faubert could not succeed in releasing

Mr. Polidor I went to Mr. Louis Roy, minister of public works.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, proceed and tell us what was said.

Mr. THOBY. He promised me to see the minister of the interior, Mr. Bernard Dartiguenave. The CHAIRMAN. What did you say to him?

Mr. THOBY. I told him the story of Polidor and his torture in prison.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell me what you said to the minister.

Mr. THOBY. I told the minister that Mr. Polidor had been arrested illegally and tortured in prison by Brown, and I asked him to see the secretary of the interior to write to the gendarmerie to make an inquiry of the case. That was promised, but I remained until the 9th of June here, and nothing been done to relieve Polidor. Then I went to St. Marc the 10th of June. The juge d'instruction was a clerk in the department of foreign relations. I was chief of the division, 10 or 12 years ago, and I asked him as the d'instruction to instruct the case of Polidor, that it was his duty. He me that he could not do it because Fitzgerald Brown was interfering justice at all times. I told him that I—I made a little lie—I told him. I was very friendly to Gen. Catlin, and if he did not do his duty I would obliged to write to the latter and expose to Gen. Catlin the case of Polidor, that he should be ashamed for a Haitian judge to be a coward.

Mr. ANGELL. What else was said?

Mr. THOBY. He said he would do as I told him; and he took the case up the attorney for the Government, Mr. Malherbe Perpignan, and Mr. Polidor the 13th of June was released provisionally from the prison. I met him as he was going out.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, after that did you have any further talk with the Americans?

Mr. THOBY. No talk at all with the authorities.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let us understand one another. When I say the authorities, I mean either the Haitian authorities or the American authorities.

Mr. THOBY. None of them. When he was liberated provisionally the 13th of June they could take him back again in prison, you see; so I went to J. Sanz. I told him that Mr. Polidor will be under the hands of justice; I didn't also send him out, and to make what they call in the French an ordonnance de non lieu.

The CHAIRMAN. What would be the English of it?

Mr. ANGELL. Dismissal of charges.

Mr. THOBY. The 26th of June that was done. I left St. Marc for Port au Prince the 27th of June.

(The witness was here sworn.)

The CHAIRMAN. You have just been qualified by the notary. You understand the statement you just made prior thereto to the committee the truth?

Mr. THOBY. It was absolutely the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. And the whole truth?

Mr. THOBY. The whole truth.

The CHAIRMAN. And nothing but the truth?

Mr. THOBY. And nothing but the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all. Do you want to ask anything?

Senator JONES. I don't think so.

Mr. ANGELL. May I ask one question of the witness, please?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Will you state whether or not the documents which I offered in evidence just before your statement, the ordonnance de non lieu, the dismissal of charges, the document which you got from Judge Sanz to give to the witness Polidor?

Mr. THOBY. Yes; to settle the matter.

STATEMENT OF J. JOLIBOIS, FILS, PORT AU PRINCE

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. J. Jolibois, fils.

Mr. ANGELL. You live in Port au Prince?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Let me say, if I may, before examining this witness, that he has, as I understand, been released from prison only this morning. I saw the witness until I came into the room five minutes ago, I have never any opportunity of conversing with him.

What is your occupation?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Director of the Courier Haitien; a merchant, tradesman.

Mr. ANGELL. You have just been released from prison in Port au Prince?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Just about two hours ago.

Mr. ANGELL. You have been serving sentence in the prison of Port au Prince?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Since what time?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I was arrested the 28th of May at 1 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. ANGELL. In what year?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. 1921.

Mr. ANGELL. And you were arrested by whom?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. By the provost marshal, accompanied by Maj. Rupertus.

Mr. ANGELL. Who is the provost marshal?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I don't recall his name.

Mr. ANGELL. On what charge were you arrested?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. According to the judgment which was rendered against me for having—

The INTERPRETER. He says I was the interpreter in the court and I can tell. I was the interpreter in the provost court in which he was tried.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be, but he had better tell it in his own way.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the charge against you?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. According to Col. Russell, for having infringed the order of the 26th of May, 1921.

Mr. ANGELL. What was that order?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. According to the report made by Col. Russell to the Navy Department of the United States, for having attacked the occupation of Ha'ti.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you tried by provost court of the American occupation here in Port au Prince?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Col. Meade, assisted by Capt. Wood, who is here [referring to the interpreter].

Mr. ANGELL. The Capt. Wood you refer to is the gentleman sitting here acting as interpreter?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes; that is he.

Mr. ANGELL. Are we to understand that the court which tried and condemned you was composed of Col. Meade alone?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Only Col. Meade, assisted by Capt. Wood as clerk and interpreter.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the basis of the charge, of having violated the order referred to?

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest, before that question is answered, this, was there a report of the testimony taken? Was the testimony reduced to writing in that case?

The INTERPRETER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that record in existence at the present time?

The INTERPRETER. The record was delivered to Col. Meade as provost court officer by me, and after that I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. And no doubt that record can be produced?

The INTERPRETER. It was an official record, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest that the record, of course, is the best evidence of what occurred there, and if that record is to be had it may be regarded as introduced into the record, and if there is anything, then, outside of that in addition to that which you desire to call the attention of the committee to we shall be glad to hear it. And there may be included in this record—if you will get that for us, Mr. Angell, get the order of Col. Russell, and the record, I assume, may show that—if that is the fact—that the island was under martial law at that time. Is that right?

Mr. ANGELL. It is my understanding that the order for martial law was given the day before the alleged offense—that is, the 26th of May.

The CHAIRMAN. I am trying to shorten this if I can.

Then have the record also show what the finding of Col. Meade was or the provost court and what the sentence was.

Now, that will give all of that record, and if there is anything in addition to that which you desire to present by this witness the committee will be glad to have it.

Mr. ANGELL. I suppose that order can be obtained.

The INTERPRETER. It should be part of the official record of the occupation.

(The record was subsequently produced and is on file.)

Mr. ANGELL. Let me identify the issue of newspaper in question to be received in evidence, if I may.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand that this copy was the subject of the charge?

Mr. ANGELL. That is my understanding, sir. I ask you to identify this.

I hand you what purports to be a copy of Le Courier Haitien, published in Port au Prince on Friday, May, 27, 1921, and ask you if on glancing at that newspaper it is a copy of the issue of that paper put out on that day?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. This is a copy of the issue of the newspaper of which you are one of the editors? Is it or is it not a fact that you were tried and found guilty by the provost court, as you have just testified, for having infringed the order referred to by publishing or being responsible for the publication of Le Courier Haitien of the 27th of May, 1921?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me make this suggestion further in connection with that. I take it there are other things in this paper besides this particular article about which the military authorities were complaining. We will receive the whole of it, but I wish you would indicate that part of the paper which was the subject of this prosecution, so that when it comes to the printing of the record we will have that part of it only, and therefore avoid unduly encumbering the record.

Mr. ANGELL. In order that the witness may identify the article, sir—handing you a copy of Le Courier Haitien, May 27, 1921—I ask you to indicate the portion therein for the publication of which you were condemned by the provost court.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. As well as I can give account of the condemnation it was for having published an article in blank lines.

Mr. ANGELL. Indicate the article.

The CHAIRMAN. Let him mark with pencil all of the article concerned.

Mr. ANGELL. The witness has now indicated by pencil line three places in the paper and document which I have offered in evidence; two on the first page and one on the second page, which will be the part received in evidence.

(The parts were indicated by the witness, and the document is on file with the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me ask the witness two or three questions about that line. How long had he, prior to this, been editing this paper or been connected with it? How long did he edit the paper?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. About three months.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you found the paper yourself, or was it an old established paper?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. It was a newspaper established one year.

The CHAIRMAN. By the witness?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I was one of the founders.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was the other?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Joseph Lanoue & Vieux.

The CHAIRMAN. And for how long had you been responsible for the publication of the paper?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I was responsible for it from the month of March, if my memory is good.

The CHAIRMAN. March 21, do you mean?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. March 21, if my memory is good.

The CHAIRMAN. And during this time you had been opposing, through the columns of the paper, the American occupation here?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I was mistaken a while ago; it was from the month of January that I was responsible for the newspaper.

(The question was repeated as follows: "And during this time you have been opposing, through the columns of the paper, the American occupation here?")

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Against the methods of the occupation; yes, and in principle, against the occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you opposed to continuing the occupation now?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Since I have come out of prison, still more so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it due to your general opposition to the control by the American Government, or is your position due to what you are pleased to call the methods of those who are responsible for the administration?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. At the bottom I am opposed to the occupation, because having been born free and independent I wish to transmit to my children the same freedom and independence and the same sovereignty. And, furthermore, before going to prison I had said, according to reports made to me—now, I can swear before God having seen with my own eyes, I was beaten in prison.

Mr. ANGELL. The witness is now going ahead to the other matter about which he wishes to testify, if you are ready to come to that, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I was not quite certain that I understood the word—

Mr. ANGELL. He was starting to branch off from the explanation of his belief to the committee to testify about what has happened in prison while he has been there.

Senator JONES. Before we go to that I would like to ask him a few questions. You stated a while ago that you were put in prison for printing some blank lines. That was your statement, was it not?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes; but here is one of my lawyers here that took part in my trial; he can give information as to the trial, because the cause escaped me. I don't know why I was tried.

Senator JONES. You referred to some blank lines in here. What do those blank lines mean?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. When the order of Col. Russell was given to me the newspaper was already on the press. In order not to infringe this order I did my real duty in going at once to the print shop where the journal was edited to take out these parts which, according to me, might be considered as offensive toward the occupation.

Senator JONES. Has any such matter as you took out of this article been previously published?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No; the newspaper had not yet appeared.

Senator JONES. Why did not you take out the whole article?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. It was my chief article, and according to my belief this article had nothing offensive in it.

Mr. ANGELL. Does Capt. Wood know whether the record of the trial contains a translation of the article as well as the original in print?

Capt. WOOD. I don't remember exactly.

Mr. ANGELL. May we reserve the privilege of submitting a translation of the article?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; if it has not already been translated, so we will have a complete record of it.

Senator JONES. Had this article been published previously?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Never.

Senator JONES. Anything like this article been published previously?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Senator JONES. How many days before the 27th of May had this article appeared in your paper?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes; since the 15th of November, 1920, Le Courrier Haitien considered it its full duty to denounce all the crimes and misdeeds committed by the military agents of the United States and Haiti.

Senator JONES. You have answered my question. Do you mean to say that one article set up in this way had been published for some months prior to the 27th of May?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No; only the 27th of May; that was never published before.

Senator JONES. Was not this article with these blank lines published before the 27th of May?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No; never.

Senator JONES. Was there any article similar to this published for the previous days—days previous to May 27, 1921?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Senator JONES. How near like this article were they?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I can not recall.

Senator JONES. Were any other papers besides this publication of May 27 used in evidence at the time you were tried by the provost?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No.

Senator JONES. I understand that there were, and I don't believe that this witness understands my question. Did they use in evidence any other issues of your paper?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No.

Senator JONES. Any of your papers printed on other days?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No; no. Mr. Hudicourt may serve as a witness. That was the only one.

Senator JONES. Mr. Wood, does the witness understand what I am trying to get at?

Capt. WOOD. He must have understood the last question. If you wish to I will ask him myself and try and put it clearly. I understand what you were trying to say.

Senator JONES. I wish you would.

(The interpreter here spoke to the witness in French.)

The INTERPRETER. He says no. He understands, and he says no. And he says that I can say no, too; but I say yes, there were.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me understand that. That there were other issues his paper introduced?

Capt. WOOD. Yes; there was an issue previous to that was introduced, and then that paper was compared with it. Mr. Jolibois says no, but there was. It was all made a part of the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Then this record will show the fact, whatever it is.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, may I proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. In this connection will you state, if you can remember it, the date of the imposition of martial law?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. The proclamation, the order of the day was given to me on 27th of May, between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. ANGELL. I understand, Mr. Jolibois, that you have certain evidence to offer as to conditions or particular facts that you have seen or observed yourself in prison.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Identify the prison, so there will be no doubt as to what you mean.

Mr. ANGELL. As I have had no opportunity to discuss this matter with you beforehand, I wish you would tell briefly the experience, what you have seen and observed in this prison during the time of your imprisonment, stating where the prison is where you were confined.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. After having been arrested Saturday, the 28th day of May at 1 o'clock, I was taken to the prison.

Mr. ANGELL. What prison?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. The military prison in the Rue du Centre.

Mr. ANGELL. In Port au Prince?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. In Port au Prince.

Mr. ANGELL. Is that a prison in charge of the American military authorities?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, proceed with whatever you have to say in this connection.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Upon entering I gave my personal effects to Lieut. Considine of the prison, and I was shut in cell No. 1 of the first square. They gave me to sleep on a light mat, which was at least a year old and dirty. The mat was laid upon the concrete floor; each morning at 6 o'clock they came and opened the cell and washed the concrete and locked me up again, and I was obliged to sit down upon the wet cement. The following Tuesday Gen. Meunier came to visit me in the cell, and during this visit he wished me to designate an American officer for my defense, and I refused. The same day my wife came to see me with a special authorization from the gendarmerie. I asked Lieut. Considine to give my wife the personal property which had been delivered to him, and he grossly refused, and in the presence of the detective Polynice told my wife to do the impossible, in order that the Courier Haitien should continue its publication.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, before he goes to that, he made a statement a moment ago that his wife came with a special authorization. What does he mean by that?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Sunday is the regular visiting day at the prison, and since they had refused to let my wife visit me, and upon the appeal of friends the gendarmerie was kind enough to give a special authorization that she should come on Tuesday. On Wednesday they seized the books which my wife had given to Lieut. Considine to be given to me. I was called before the prison court Friday, the 3d of June, and several days afterward, on the following Tuesday, I was told that I had been condemned to six months' hard labor and $300 fine. Then Lieut. Considine came to my cell, opened it, and invited me, as well as my colleague Lanoue, to follow him.

Mr. ANGELL. Who is this Lieut. Considine? Is he an Haitian officer or American officer?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. A sergeant of the police corps and the first lieutenant of the gendarmerie.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not answer the question. Is he an American or Haitian?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. An American. I was taken to the third square in the first square there Lieut. Considine told me to dress myself, and gave me a coat.

convict clothes. I had a shirt on, and he said, "No, no, take off the shirt." I asked the lieutenant to let me keep my shirt on, but he said, "No, take off the shirt." He told me that I was to be sent to the tailor shop, but going out to the courtyard Lieut. Sullivan asked me—I can not remember the words—"Come on, come here." It was in English that he spoke to me, and I don't remember his exact words. He gave to my colleague Mr. Lanoue and myself two tampers, and told us to go out and tamp the ground in the courtyard.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, Mr. Jolibois, come as quickly as you can to the most important matter, which you think is important to testify before these gentlemen. Mr. Jolibois. Friday, the 17th of June, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, I was awing, and a lieutenant came up behind me—

Mr. ANGELL. Lieutenant who?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Lieut. Sullivan; and at a time when I did not expect him, and upon the pretext that I had sewed badly a part of a pair of trousers, called gette, he gave me two blows in the face—two heavy blows in the face, two blows of his fist—causing me to fall over backward to the ground. I was sitting upon a small bench, and in falling my two legs were caught in the legs of the bench, and as I started to get up, my eyes and my face bathed in blood, Lieut. Sullivan threw himself upon me and took me by the throat and struck me all over the body. Then taking me by the throat, he wished in any case to throw me down, he struck me with his foot, as he had done Lelio Peralte and to other prisoners. Fortunately for me, I was not thrown down. Then I died, "Assassin! Coward!" A moment after he told me, "Don't you want to keep on working?" Then he went out and got Lieut. Considine. Lieut. Considine, then appearing at a small door which opened into his room, was surprised to see me in that condition. After explanation had been made to Lieut. Considine by me, I was taken to the first square and locked in a cell where the cement had been previously wet. Here I was locked in. Being thirsty, I asked the lieutenant to give me a drop of water. He responded with an insult, telling me that he had no water to give me. I told Lieut. Considine that I had not even a mat to lie down on. He told me to lie down upon the cement.

They left me all night locked up in that cell, without even a drop of water and without even a thin mat, which ordinarily they had given me. Saturday, early in the morning, he came to the cell and told me, "You will die where you are. You will never get out. I will never let you out. First of all, I am going to make a report against you to the gendarmerie." Sunday it was not permitted my wife to come and see me. Monday, I don't know for what reason, but about 1 o'clock he came and let me out of the cell. But, however, it was forbidden to me to lie down, because at that time my body was very sore; I was sick. He told me that I must stay in the courtyard. Tuesday the same way, and Tuesday afternoon three officers of the gendarmerie came to the prison and made an investigation. I told all the truth to these three officers, and in the meantime Capt. Wood, here present, came to the tailor shop and asked the tailors who were present at the scene not to avow that they had seen Lieut. Sullivan striking me. He promised one of them to have him put at liberty; to another he told him, "This man is a thief. You must not concern yourself with him."

Mr. ANGELL. Were those remarks which you say Capt. Wood, the gentleman opposite, made, in French or in English?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. In good Creole. I should say to you that that, however, has been told to competent authority. It is not here only. This is not the first time that that has been called to the attention of American authorities. Lieut. Considine and Capt. Woods did their best to induce the witnesses to deny the act, and Lieut. Sullivan was tried. The next day, the day after the investigation was, Lieut. Considine sent for me. He gave me a bucketful of lime. He said, "Now, we are going to see. You are going to whitewash the entire courtyard of the prison." I had nothing to say. I took the bucket and went to work whitewashing. He told me to take charcoal out of the bucket with my hands. I took them out. The following Saturday, Gen. McDougall and Gen. Mead came to visit the prison, and seeing me from the balcony of the hospital of the prison, where they were working whitewashing the prison, it was forbidden to me to stand up. I was ordered to bend over all day long without a hat or anything, from 6 o'clock in the morning until midday and from 1 o'clock until 5. If I had pressing need to go somewhere it was necessary for me to report to the chief of the prisoners. He in turn would ask a corporal, and the corporal would ask Lieut. Considine, and then corporal would be delegated to accompany me to this place. Thursday, the 7th of July, I was called to Caserne Dessalines to witness in the trial of Lieut. Sullivan counsel of Lieut. Sullivan put this question to me: "Knowing the truth, being that the revelation of the truth would condemn you, would you ever reveal this truth?" I made this response to the court: "Even if I knew my head was to be put into the knife, knowing the truth, I would tell the truth, content thereafter—"

Senator JONES. Ask him if these things were reported. Was there a photographer there to report these proceedings?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

Senator JONES. And that is all in the record of that trial?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me suggest, if there is a court proceedings and the testimony has been taken down, we will see that the record of that court proceeding is incorporated in this record.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Thank you. I hold to this question. Even knowing the revelation of this truth might cause my death, I would tell that truth—

The CHAIRMAN. He need not go on and tell anything more about that.

Mr. JOLIBOIS. That same day at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, upon my way to the prison, they made me pay for that declaration. Upon my return to the prison I found Lieut. Sullivan. Lieut. Considine came and found me in the mess hall. It was raining that day. It was a torrential rainfall. Lieut. Considine said to me, "Go out and work." And that day I broke rocks and went and sat down in the mud, and again I broke rocks. And half an hour afterwards he sent for me by Sergt. Pierre Louis. He told me, "Go and cut the limbs of that tree." It was a sublim, a tree covered with thorns. I was given a machette and from 1 o'clock until 5 I remained out there in the beating, cutting the limbs off that tree. I have seen a great deal at the prison. I give you a detailed account of the régime of the prison.

Mr. ANGELL. May I make a suggestion there? Without knowing what to say on that subject. You gentlemen might ask him if it can not be put in written form without having to cross-examine the witness. I don't know how important it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask him one or two questions. There was a martial proceedings held against Lieut. Sullivan, was there not?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You testified to that proceeding?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you told or did you tell in that proceeding the facts as they occurred at the time of the trouble between you and Lieut. Sullivan? Did you tell all the facts at that time?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes. But I was told by the court to keep entirely to the facts of the 17th of June.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the day when he claims to have been struck by the Lieutenant?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It was claimed, was it not, that you first attacked him with the scissors?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. That was not true.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it not claimed—did not somebody testify to that?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. If anyone did say so, he was either induced to say that by Wood or Lieut. Considine.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, that doesn't answer the question. Did anyone testify before the court-martial that you had first attacked the lieutenant with the scissors, and what he did was after you had attacked him?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I asked the court-martial to communicate to me the testimony given by the witnesses, and they refused to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you asked any question at that time as to whether or not you had attacked with the scissors?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. They asked me if I had made use of a pair of scissors on myself, if my memory is good.

The CHAIRMAN. The record will show what the testimony was at that time and that entire record—I take it my colleagues agree with me—will be incorporated in this.

(The record referred to is to be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

Mr. JOLIBOIS. I have something else to say to the court. That is, this man Wood, here present, caused to be called from the prison one named Davis, asked of Mr. Davis to sign a paper.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you present at this time when you say Capt. Wood asked Mr. Davis to do this?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. No. But Capt. Wood was at the court and was sent to call Mr. Davis from the prison.

Mr. ANGELL. How do you know that Capt. Wood put such a question to Mr. Davis?

Mr. JOLIBOIS. It was Mr. Davis who upon coming from the court told that to Mr. Sauveterre, also a prisoner, and in my presence. As it is an affair very important, I make this declaration before the court.

The CHAIRMAN. Counsel must agree that that evidence is not competent.

Mr. ANGELL. I agree entirely. I had no knowledge about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anything further of this witness?

Mr. ANGELL. I don't think so. Anything else could be put in a deposition.

The CHAIRMAN. You can furnish more memorandum for the committee if there is anything else. We will determine then what shall be done with him. Who is this Mr. Davis?

Capt. Wood. He is the biggest swindler who ever struck Haiti. He swindled me of the most prominent people in Port au Prince—not only Port au Prince but all over Haiti. He swindled some of the best Haitians out of several hundred thousand dollars, claiming to be able to locate buried treasure in the ground, and he induced them to burn enormous sums of money, and in doing so he just worked the sleight-of-hand change and burned false money in its place, and they were ashamed to tell it, and he was sent to prison.

The CHAIRMAN. What is Davis's first name?

Capt. Wood. Juan Baptiste Ramirez. He is wanted by the Cuban Government for theft and forgery. He is a Cuban, and has been in Haiti about three years; and it was one of his own statements that a man who was pretending to be a candidate for the presidency of Haiti had made some arrangement with him by which he was, for $15,000, to kill President Dartiguenave by magic; and the man paid the money, so I am informed by Davis himself. That man is a senator of the Republic of Haiti. He nicked the best of them.

Mr. ANGELL. Is he wearing stripes now?

Capt. Wood. No; he is waiting trial; and, incidentally, there are a lot of Haitians awaiting trial along with him. Two of them are foreigners.

STATEMENT OF MR. VOLNY PAULTRE, ST. MARC.

Mr. ANGELL. State your name.

Mr. PAULTRE. Volny Paultre.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you live in St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you come down from St. Marc to Port au Prince?

Mr. PAULTRE. Wednesday.

Mr. ANGELL. You came down to testify at this investigation?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your occupation?

Mr. PAULTRE. I am a merchant.

Mr. ANGELL. Engaged in business at St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. For how many years have you been engaged in business there?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes; I am engaged in commercial affairs.

Mr. ANGELL. For how many years have you been engaged at St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. About 14 years.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you engaged in business at St. Marc and living there in March, 1919?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you know at that time Capt. Fitzgerald Brown?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was he in charge of the gendarmerie at St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. He was captain of the gendarmerie at St. Marc at that time.

Mr. ANGELL. He is an American?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes; I think so.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, will you tell as briefly as possible what you saw at the prison in St. Marc on a certain day in March, 1919, and the necessary events immediately preceding that.

Mr. PAULTRE. Capt. Brown called me in March and asked me to accompany him to prison to be present at an interrogation of three persons, accused, arrested and put in prison for having committed a crime upon the property of my uncle, Madame Oreus Paul. Upon reaching the prison I saw several people from Haiti and the three people accused.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell us the names of the three persons who are accused?

Mr. PAULTRE. It was Salnave Fabre, Yoyo, and Nicholas. After the interrogation of the witnesses who had accused these three persons, Capt. Brown called the three accused people to be questioned, all of whom denied the facts.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you present when you heard him ask these witnesses whether or not they were guilty of this charge?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. This took place at the gendarmerie prison in St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes. In the presence of the justice of the peace, Florian U. Charles, now dead. I asked the judge why he did not take the written statements of these witnesses, and he told me it was not necessary.

Mr. ANGELL. Were the three accused persons interrogated at the same time in the presence of each other?

Mr. PAULTRE. One after another.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you present at the interrogation of each of these three men?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the juge du paix also present at the interrogation of the three?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were the questions put by Capt. Brown himself?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; they were put by Duval Lorquet, one of Brown's auxiliaries.

Mr. ANGELL. Was he a gendarme?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. A civilian?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. A Haitian?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Capt. Brown present at the interrogation of all of the three accused?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were other persons besides yourself, Capt. Brown, and the juge du paix, and this Haitian auxiliary also present?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes. There were the other witnesses from Pivet.

Mr. ANGELL. And about how many were they in number?

Mr. PAULTRE. About 10.

Mr. ANGELL. Any others?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, tell us just what took place after the interrogation of the accused.

Mr. PAULTRE. The accused having been questioned denied the facts. Capt. Brown said, "I am going to make you talk. I have a little machine which will make you talk."

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear him say those words?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Before all these people to whom you have just referred?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Continue.

Mr. PAULTRE. He took a telephone box. He fastened one of the wires to the teeth and the other he wound around the top and Duval gave the current.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you yourself see the wires attached to the teeth and the top of each of the three accused persons?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And did you see Duval turn the crank and apply the current?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What effect did you see produced as the result of this action?

Mr. PAULTRE. Upon the action of the electric current, one after the other admitted that they were the authors of the crime charged to them.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the current applied to these three men at the same time or in succession?

Mr. PAULTRE. One after the other.

Mr. ANGELL. And were the three all together during the entire time when each one of them was in turn given this treatment?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Were all three of them in the room?

Mr. PAULTRE. One in the room and the other two were out in the yard.

Mr. ANGELL. And then after they finished with one was he taken out of the room?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes; and they brought another in.

Mr. ANGELL. And the same as to the third?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know of your own knowledge what happened to each of these three afterwards?

Mr. PAULTRE. I believe that two or three days afterwards, the guardian of the same property came and told us that Capt. Brown had shot upon the property, the two youngest, and that he hanged the third, the oldest one.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see these two being shot, or did you see the third being hanged?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; not personally.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see their bodies?

Mr. PAULTRE. The bodies are still on the property.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me see. If I understand him correctly, somebody told him this?

Mr. ANGELL. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. And who was the man who told him this?

Mr. PAULTRE. Mr. Emilcar, watchman of the property.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did this man live?

Mr. PAULTRE. He is at the present time upon that same property.

Mr. ANGELL. Where is that property?

Mr. PAULTRE. At Pivet, near St. Marc.

Mr. ANGELL. In the village of Pivet?

Mr. PAULTRE. It is not a village. It is a habitation called Pivet.

The CHAIRMAN. When did this man tell him this story about the killing of these men?

Mr. PAULTRE. He came the same morning to tell us of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Fix the date as nearly as you can.

Mr. PAULTRE. It was about—let us say the 4th or 5th of March.

The CHAIRMAN. What year?

Mr. PAULTRE. 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did he tell you this?

Mr. PAULTRE. He came to my house and told me there at my house.

The CHAIRMAN. Who was present at that time?

Mr. PAULTRE. I do not recall.

The CHAIRMAN. Did anybody hear him tell this story about the captain?

Mr. PAULTRE. I don't remember. I may tell you that it was in a measure a duty to come and tell me, because he is the watchman of my property.

The CHAIRMAN. Was anyone else present at the time this story was told to the witness?

Mr. PAULTRE. I have told you that I don't remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you ever talk to Capt. Brown about this?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. When you say that Capt. Brown went with you to this office of the peace—

Mr. PAULTRE. No; in the prison.

The CHAIRMAN. Went with Capt. Brown—did I say to the justice of the peace—to the prison. Why did Capt. Brown take you to hear him question these men?

Mr. PAULTRE. It was because these men were accused of having committed a crime upon this same property.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you say to Capt. Brown when he attached this telephone wire that you have described to the teeth of the men and to the thumb?

Mr. PAULTRE. I did not say anything to him.

The CHAIRMAN. How long after this was it that you were informed that these men were dead?

Mr. PAULTRE. About three days after that.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you tell anybody else about this after you had heard the story about the way in which they were killed?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes; it was talked of all over St. Marc.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say anything to the American authorities or the Haitian authorities about it?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. And you have not from that time until this day?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you had any trouble with Capt. Brown?

Mr. PAULTRE. Personally, no.

The CHAIRMAN. How long had you known Capt. Brown before the day you visited the prison with him?

Mr. PAULTRE. Ever since the arrival at St. Marc I have seen him from time to time.

The CHAIRMAN. About how long was that?

Mr. PAULTRE. I can not fix the time.

Senator JONES. How did you happen to come down here at this time to testify before the committee?

Mr. PAULTRE. I was invited by the Union Patriotique to come and give testimony about this affair, which was a matter of my knowledge.

Senator JONES. What member of that organization invited you to come?

Mr. PAULTRE. The secretary.

Senator JONES. Had you previously talked to him about it?

Mr. PAULTRE. We had talked about it at St. Marc some days ago.

Senator JONES. You stated that those men were still on that property you mean that they were buried on the property?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. Do you know where the graves are?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. Have you been to them?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; I have not been right at the graves myself, but I have seen them in passing.

Senator JONES. Can you describe the graves, where they are?

Mr. PAULTRE. They are near a river; passing just about the center of the property.

Senator JONES. Is there a road goes near the place where their graves are?

Mr. PAULTRE. There is a trail passing near there.

Senator JONES. A trail between what places?

Mr. PAULTRE. A trail from the property.

Senator JONES. What makes the trail; why is the trail there?

Mr. PAULTRE. It is a small road which has existed for a long time. There are a number of small roads.

Senator JONES. By whom is it traveled? By whom is that particular road traveled, ordinarily?

Mr. PAULTRE. Those who pass upon the property. The workmen, visitors.

Senator JONES. Does it lead from one settlement to another settlement?

Mr. PAULTRE. No.

Senator JONES. What makes a trail of it; why is it frequently traveled? It is?

Mr. PAULTRE. A field that is being cultivated can not be used as a road; therefore there are small trails leading into all parts of the property.

Senator JONES. What property is this?

Mr. PAULTRE. It is a property at St. Marc, in the region called Piver.

Senator JONES. It is a cemetery?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; a garden.

Senator JONES. Whose garden is it?

Mr. PAULTRE. My mother Madame Arias Ball. It was a female property.

Senator JONES. How far are these graves from the house?

Mr. PAULTRE. I can not say exactly.

Senator JONES. More or less?

Mr. PAULTRE. It is very difficult really to estimate this distance, but it is quite a distance.

Senator JONES. You are an intelligent man. You can indicate in some way that distance from the house on the property.

Mr. PAULTRE. My mother had no house upon this property. The guardian has a little house upon the property.

Senator JONES. How far from the guardian's house are these graves?

Mr. PAULTRE. About 10 minutes' walk.

Senator JONES. What does the guardian do there?

Mr. PAULTRE. He works upon the property.

Senator JONES. Does he work on that part of the property where those graves are?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. The land around these graves is cultivated?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes. The ground around that.

Senator JONES. What is there to indicate that they are graves?

Mr. PAULTRE. As is done always in Haiti, there is a little mound of earth.

Senator JONES. Is there any other mark there?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; that is all.

Senator JONES. Are the three graves near together?

Mr. PAULTRE. There are not three graves. There are two.

Senator JONES. Are they near to each other?

Mr. PAULTRE. They are close together.

Senator JONES. How close are they?

Mr. PAULTRE. There is not any real distance, only about 2 feet.

Senator JONES. Could you show us those graves to-morrow when we are up in that country?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. When are you going back to St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. To-morrow at noon, by train.

Senator JONES. Is there anyone else up there who could show us those graves?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes; there is the watchman, Emilcar.

Senator JONES. What is his first name?

Mr. PAULTRE. I don't know.

Senator JONES. Is he the one who told you that these men were buried there?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. And he has been on the property ever since?

Mr. PAULTRE. Always.

Senator JONES. Did Emilcar ever show these graves to you?

Mr. PAULTRE. It was not necessary to show them to me, since in passing I could see them.

Senator JONES. How did you know they were graves?

Mr. PAULTRE. Emilcar had told me that these three people had been buried here.

Senator JONES. Do you mean three to two?

Mr. PAULTRE. Three individuals, but two graves.

Senator JONES. How far did Emilcar live from St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. About 10 minutes' walk.

Senator JONES. Perhaps I misunderstood you or you misunderstood me awhile ago. How far is it from the Emilcar house to these graves?

Mr. PAULTRE. I can not estimate distance exactly, but I have told you that you leave the house of Emilcar on foot, it will take you about 10 minutes to reach the graves.

Senator JONES. Does Emilcar live in the town of St. Marc?

Mr. PAULTRE. He lives at Pivet, near St. Marc.

Senator JONES. And it is about as far from Pivet to the graves as it is from St. Marc to the graves, is that the truth?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; it is farther from St. Marc to Pivet.

Senator JONES. No; he doesn't understand me. He says it is 10 minutes' walk from St. Marc to the graves and it is 10 minutes' walk from Pivet to the graves. Is that what he means to say?

Mr. PAULTRE. No; that is not what I said. I said that it was 10 minutes' walk from the house of Emilcar to these graves. But if we say from St. Marc to the house of Emilcar, it is a matter of half an hour's walk.

Senator JONES. How soon after these men were killed did Emilcar tell you about it?

Mr. PAULTRE. About an hour or an hour and a half afterwards.

Senator JONES. Did he tell you who killed them?

Mr. PAULTRE. He told me that the execution had been ordered by Capt. Brown.

Senator JONES. Who did the killing?

Mr. PAULTRE. The gendarmes.

Senator JONES. How were they killed?

Mr. PAULTRE. Two shot and the third hanged.

Senator JONES. Of what crime had they been accused?

Mr. PAULTRE. They were accused of having murdered one of the watchmen that I had on the property.

Senator JONES. Did you believe that they had murdered the watchman your property?

Mr. PAULTRE. Upon the declaration of other people at Pivet, one must believe it.

Senator JONES. Did you believe it?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. And you went with Capt. Brown to try to have them convicted, did you not, of having murdered your watchman?

Mr. PAULTRE. Capt. Brown had invited me to go along as one interested in the affair, to be present at their interrogation.

Senator JONES. And your watchman had been murdered, had he?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. How long before this examination of these three men?

Mr. PAULTRE. About five days, perhaps.

Senator JONES. For what reason did they murder your watchman?

Mr. PAULTRE. In order to steal, because they had stolen from the property and had killed the watchman.

Senator JONES. If they had killed your watchman, as you believed, then they should have been executed themselves, should they not, in your opinion, after a trial?

Mr. PAULTRE. According to my opinion, having put anyone in prison, he is in the hands of the law, and justice should have followed its course, and they should have been tried by a criminal court; that is the custom of Haiti and is the law.

Senator JONES. Were those three men arrested?

Mr. PAULTRE. I don't know.

Senator JONES. Did you ever hear where they were arrested?

Mr. PAULTRE. They were people of those parts, but I don't know where they had been arrested.

Senator JONES. Who informed on those people?

Mr. PAULTRE. The other people of those parts.

Senator JONES. Did they come and tell you that your watchman had been murdered before these people were arrested?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes, certainly.

Senator JONES. Then what did you do after you heard that your watchman had been murdered?

Mr. PAULTRE. I called the justice of the peace to make an official report on the affair.

Senator JONES. And did he do that?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. Made a report to whom?

Mr. PAULTRE. To his chief.

Senator JONES. Who was his chief?

Mr. PAULTRE. He is under the civil court, the juge d'instruction and prosecuting attorney.

Senator JONES. What is his name?

Mr. PAULTRE. It was Judge Florian Ulysses Charles.

Senator JONES. What did he do after he was informed that these three had murdered your watchman?

Mr. PAULTRE. The first day of the crime, he knew nothing about it.

Senator JONES. After you told him about it, what did he do?

Mr. PAULTRE. He went to the property, where he drew up an official report verifying the crime.

Senator JONES. Did he view the body of your dead watchman?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. What did he do after that regarding the matter?

Mr. PAULTRE. Nothing.

Senator JONES. Why didn't he?

Mr. PAULTRE. I don't know. We had information about the people who committed the crime.

Senator JONES. When did you first learn who committed the crime?

Mr. PAULTRE. When I was asked to go to the prison with Capt. Brown five days after.

Senator JONES. Did that justice of the peace take any part in trying to find out who those men were?

Mr. PAULTRE. It was not the attribution of the juge du paix. It was not that of the police.

Senator JONES. Did the judge report the matter to the police, or did you do it?

Mr. PAULTRE. The judge reported it directly. I did not.

Senator JONES. Who was the policeman to whom the judge reported it?

Mr. PAULTRE. To the chief of the gendarmerie.

Senator JONES. What was his name?

Mr. PAULTRE. Capt. Brown.

Senator JONES. Then the judge requested Capt. Brown to find out who the men were who had murdered your watchman, did he?

Mr. PAULTRE. He did not ask that this be done. He simply announced to the police that there had been a crime committed at Pivet. It is thus that things are done.

Senator JONES. That statement was made for the purpose of having Capt. Brown find out who did the murder, was it not?

Mr. PAULTRE. Assuredly.

Senator JONES. What other evidence was there produced to show that those were the three men who had murdered your watchman?

Mr. PAULTRE. They had been arrested upon being denounced by other people at Pivet, but these people had not been seen at the time of the murder.

Senator JONES. But they convinced you that the right men had been arrested, did they not?

Mr. PAULTRE. Yes.

Senator JONES. What date was your watchman murdered?

Mr. PAULTRE. Among the first days of March.

Senator JONES. 1919?

Mr. PAULTRE. 1919.

Senator JONES. Is that justice of the peace still living or is he dead?

Mr. PAULTRE. He is dead.

Senator JONES. Who was the policeman? What was his name, to whom the matter was reported? Was that Capt. Brown?

Mr. PAULTRE. I don't know.

Senator JONES. You said the justice of the peace reported it to the policeman.

Mr. PAULTRE. To the gendarme who fills the rôle of police at the present time. He made a report to the officers of the gendarmerie.

Capt. Woods. I wish to make a statement for the record. Mr. Jolibois made statement that 22 days ago I was at the courtyard and called a man by the name of Davis to the court and tried to make him sign a paper and that Mr. Davis told that to another prisoner in his presence. The judge of instruction is present here. The judge of instruction could tell whether or not I have been to the court in the last 22 days, and whether at any time anybody has ever called Davis but him. Because he is the only man who is authorized to call Davis.

Mr. ANGELL. I accept that entire statement as the truth, absolutely.

I wish to present a deposition in English, to be sworn to.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you read it?

Mr. ANGELL. I have, sir. It is in due form. Sworn to before a notary public.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be, I take it, received under advisement, and after we look after it I have no doubt it will be incorporated.

Mr. ANGELL. It is by Mrs. Harris Lipschitz, an American citizen, concerning the murder of her husband here in Haiti.

(The deposition is as follows:)

"My husband, Mr. Harris Lipschitz, an American citizen, residing in Haiti, was found murdered on the road leading from Cayes to St. Louis du Sud on June 7, 1921. His murderer has never been discovered, and I know of no steps taken by the American occupation in Haiti to solve the mystery surrounding my husband's death. Therefore I am anxious that the members of the commission be fully informed on the circumstances preceding and surrounding the time in order that justice may be done.

"Mr. Lipschitz, Russian by birth, became an American citizen in 1918. He first came to Haiti in 1902 and established himself in business at St. Louis du Sud. Until 1916 he lived in complete tranquillity. Then he began to experience ill treatment at the hands of various officers of the Haitian gendarmerie and of the United States Marine Corps. Many officers purchased supplies from him and failed to pay for them. Many also borrowed money which they did not return. When he sought the money due threats were made against him by these officers.

"Finally Lieut. Grant, of the gendarmerie, one of the officers who owed my husband money, falsely accused my husband of threatening the corporal with a revolver and caused him to be confined in prison for a month. At the of this time he was released on bail. And two days later, while returning Cayes to his home in St. Louis with provisions, he was arrested by Lieut. Grant on the ground of having left St. Louis. No instructions had been given to his husband not to do so. Mr. Lipschitz sent a telegram to Gen. Williams, stating that he had been illegally arrested by Lieut. Grant, and Gen. Williams promptly ordered his release.

"While my husband was in prison Lieut. Grant came to my house and told me that my husband had been arrested. He said that he believed my husband would never see the sun shine again and that everything was finished for him. He advised me to sell the properties of my husband, and offered to help in disposing of them. I told him that I thought my husband would be released from prison, since he had committed no crime. Lieut. Grant became angry and exclaimed, 'Do not argue with me; you had better believe me.'

"Then he asked me to give him something to drink, and when I refused he helped himself to liquor. He made advances to my sister and myself, attempted to assault us. I sent a servant girl for the notary public, and when he appeared Lieut. Grant left the house. I made a deposition before the notary public of the treatment that had been accorded us by the lieutenant.

"Another time Col. Buckley, of the Marine Corps, came to my house and my husband was in Aquin. He made inquiries concerning my husband's business affairs and said that he would do his best to have him deported, so that the occupation would be rid of him. After this episode threats were constantly against my husband's business interests and even against his person by American officers stationed in the section of the country where we lived.

"Consequently it was no surprise to us when an order was issued expelling my husband from Haitian territory. This order stated that Mr. Lipschitz was to be deported on the first vessel leaving the country. Instead he was detained in prison while three vessels left, and was finally placed on a vessel bound for Cuba. When he arrived in Cuba he found that the American minister in Havana Prince had cabled the American Legation at Habana saying that Brigadier Commander Russel had advised him that Mr. Lipschitz's deportation was irregular and he was entitled to a passport to return to Haiti if he so desired.

"From Cuba my husband proceeded to Washington, where he placed his case before Congressman Siegel, who in turn called the matter to the attention of Gen. Barnett. Gen. Barnett authorized Mr. Lipschitz to return on a Government vessel to Haiti and instructed Brigadier Commander Russel to make a thorough investigation of the deportation of Mr. Lipschitz.

"When my husband returned to Haiti he was detained in Port au Prince, refused permission to go to his home in St. Louis. His property was confiscated while he was thus detained and his business suffered severely. His protests were of no avail. When he complained to Maj. Turner that he was in financial distress he was informed that he could obtain medicine and food free of charge in national prison.

"The board of inquiry appointed by Col. Russel investigated the circumstances of my husband's deportation and subjected my husband to a severe examination, the details of which he was warned not to divulge.

"Although Lieut. Grant was one of the officers against whom my husband made the most serious charges, he was permitted to act as interpreter and adviser to the board. Many witnesses whom my husband requested to be summoned before the board were never called. Nothing was accomplished by this board of inquiry and no one punished.

"When the Mayo board of inquiry came to Haiti my husband appeared before the board. My husband told me that Judge Advocate Dyer, in a private interview with him, tried to intimidate him by threatening him with prosecution for perjury. Letters which my husband wrote the board preferring charges against American officers and others were never answered.

"A second order was issued expelling my husband from Haiti, and he was given until June 30, 1921, to settle his affairs. He encountered many difficulties inspired by officers while engaged in the task. He appealed to Col. Russel for protection time and time again. He wrote Congressman Siegel that he was being afforded the proper protection and feared for his life.

"On the 7th of June my husband, myself, and two servants were returning from Cayes to St. Louis. As we approached Cavaillon my horse and the two servant boys were not as tired as those of my husband's and the two girls', and we rode on ahead. As we left him my husband said he would try to get fresh mules in the neighborhood.

"Twenty minutes after I arrived home the girl appeared. When I asked her here Mr. Lipschitz was she informed me that a Haitian had stopped him on the road and she had left them conversing together. I began to feel anxious when half an hour passed my husband did not appear. The servant girl began to act strangely, refused supper, and cried continually. She explained that he was feeling ill and thought she had caught cold.

"In about an hour's time I heard a horse approaching the house and thought was my husband. I called out and was told that it was Mr. Barber, a friend of ours. I asked him in and inquired if he had seen Mr. Lipschitz. He replied the negative. He and the servant girl returned to the spot where I had left my husband but failed to find him.

"I notified the corporal of the gendarmerie in St. Louis that my husband was missing. He returned in the morning and said, 'Well, Mrs. Lipschitz, I think you had better make up your mind that your husband has been murdered, though I have not yet found his body.' A Haitian who lived near the place where my husband's body was later found brought my husband's mule to our use and told me he had found him wandering around loose. He recognized the mule and was surprised to see my husband nowhere in sight. He called my husband's name several times, but had no response.

"The corporal of the gendarmerie informed me in the afternoon that my husband's body had been found. I immediately telephoned the authorities at Cayes, asking them to investigate the crime. The servant girl and the man who found the mule were examined and placed in jail. Whether they are still there or not I do not know. I have been informed that they are. The murderer has never been fixed upon any individual, although the authorities are well aware of the identity of several persons who made threats against my husband's life. I myself do not claim to know who was the murderer.

"In view of the above facts, I beg the commission to determine why the murder of an American citizen has not been investigated by the American authorities, or, if such an investigation has been made, why the results have not been published.

"Mrs. HARRIS LIPSCHITZ."

STATEMENT OF MEDELUS VALET, ST. MARC, HAITI.

Senator POMERENE. What is your name?

Mr. VALET. Medelus Valet.

Senator POMERENE. Where is your home?

Mr. VALET. At St. Marc.

Senator POMERENE. How long have you lived there?

Mr. VALET. Seven years.

Senator POMERENE. Are you confined in prison here at Port au Prince now?

Mr. VALET. Yes; at this time.

Senator POMERENE. Sentenced on what charge?

Mr. VALET. I was a gendarme. My rifle went off in my hands and killed some one.

Senator POMERENE. Killed whom; a Haitian?

Mr. VALET. Yes; a Haitian.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. How long have you known him?

Mr. VALET. A long time.

Senator POMERENE. Did you ever see him in prison at St. Marc?

Mr. VALET. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. What were you doing there?

Mr. VALET. I was a prisoner.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know Capt. Fitzgerald Brown?

Mr. VALET. Very well.

Senator POMERENE. Did you at any time see Capt. Brown in this prison?

Mr. VALET. Yes; I saw him come to the prison sometime. He was captain.

Senator POMERENE. Did you at any time see him do anything to Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. No.

Senator POMERENE. Did you see him talking with Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. No.

Senator POMERENE. Did you see anybody else do anything to Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Who was it?

Mr. VALET. Detectives and gendarmes.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know the detectives' names?

Mr. VALET. No.

Senator POMERENE. Were they Americans or Haitians?

Mr. VALET. Haitians.

Senator POMERENE. The detectives were Haitians?

Mr. VALET. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Were the gendarmes Americans or Haitians?

Mr. VALET. Haitians.

Senator POMERENE. What did these people do to this man Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. Capt. Brown arrested Polidor St. Pierre, putting him in prison. They came and mistreated him in prison in the absence of the captain.

The CHAIRMAN. Who came and mistreated him?

Mr. VALET. A gendarme.

The CHAIRMAN. And what did they do?

Mr. VALET. They beat him; they burned him.

The CHAIRMAN. Burned him what?

Mr. VALET. Burned him with a hot iron.

The CHAIRMAN. What kind of an iron was it?

Mr. VALET. An iron with which they make the prison bars.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell all that you saw done up there by these men to man Polidor St. Pierre.

Mr. VALET. They came and mistreated him when the captain was not. When the captain came he was angry because they had mistreated him. Capt. Brown came he took Polidor out of the cell in the prison and put him in a room belonging to the sergeant of the prison, and after he had put him in this room he sent gendarmes to go and tell his relatives to bring food to him and had the doctor treat him three times a day.

The CHAIRMAN. How long were you in that prison after the gendarmes mistreated Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. I had already two years in prison.

The CHAIRMAN. How long after that did you stay in prison?

Mr. VALET. I was three years and five months in the prison at St. Marc. I have been in prison 15 months here.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the gendarmes or anyone else do anything to Polidor St. Pierre?

Mr. VALET. After they put him in the sergeant's room they did nothing to him.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, before this burning did you see him with handcuffs?

Mr. VALET. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell what, if anything else, they did to this man.

Mr. VALET. They burned him with hot irons and beat him.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see them use any hot water with him?

Mr. VALET. That is not true.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they have him tied up with handcuffs on his wrists in any way?

Mr. VALET. Yes; in the beginning, when they arrested him, he was handcuffed so [indicating].

The CHAIRMAN. Who did this?

Mr. VALET. The prison sergeants and gendarmes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see them hang him up in this way?

Mr. VALET. The gendarmes were questioning him for what he had done. They really did hang him up.

The CHAIRMAN. Was Capt. Brown there at the time that he was hanging him up?

Mr. VALET. I did not see him there.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see Capt. Brown mistreat this man in any way at all?

Mr. VALET. With his own hands; no.

The CHAIRMAN. Or in his presence?

Mr. VALET. No; Capt. Brown was not present.

The CHAIRMAN. How long was this Polidor St. Pierre hung up by the wall in this way?

Mr. VALET. At times when they were talking to him they would hang him up for half an hour at a time, and then after that take him down.

The CHAIRMAN. How often did they hang him up in that way?

Mr. VALET. About three times.

The CHAIRMAN. Just tell how they would hang him up.

Mr. VALET. He was handcuffed, and there was a rafter in the prison, a rope was fastened around the chain of the handcuff, thrown over the bar, and he was drawn up until he was standing on his toes.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he have shackles about his ankles?

Mr. VALET. No; that is not true. He did not have irons on his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the witness stand up and indicate on his own person the parts of the body of Polidor St. Pierre which were burned in the way he is described.

(The witness stood up and indicated certain parts of his body.)

Mr. VALET. He was burned over his back, over the back of his legs, and his buttocks.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all we care to inquire.

Senator JONES. Was he also burned on the front of the left leg?

Mr. VALET. He was burned in several places. I can not tell you whether it was the right leg or the left leg.

Senator JONES. Was he burned on the front of the leg?

Mr. VALET. I can not tell that. That was a long time ago and I have been in prison all the time.

Senator JONES. Well, unless there is something further, we will excuse the witness.

STATEMENT OF MR. JOSEPH LANOUE, PORT AU PRINCE.

Mr. ANGELL. Give your name.

Mr. LANOUE. Joseph Lanoue.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you live in Port au Prince?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your occupation?

Mr. LANOUE. I am a newspaper man.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you lately been in the prison of Port au Prince?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you liberated to-day or yesterday?

Mr. LANOUE. I was set free this morning.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know Medelus Valet, the witness who has just testified?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you been in prison with him lately?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you confined in the same prison with him at the same time?

Mr. LANOUE. When I went to prison I found him there. That has been six months ago.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever hear Medelus Valet tell of what he had seen or heard concerning Polidor in prison in St. Marc?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. You were in the room just now when the witness, Medelus Valet testified?

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. You heard what he said?

Mr. LANOUE. I understood what he said.

Mr. ANGELL. What were you serving in prison for? Under what sentence?

Mr. LANOUE. I was put in prison for having written in my newspaper articles of an incendiary nature.

Mr. LANOUE. What was your newspaper?

Mr. LANOUE. The Courier Haitian.

Mr. ANGELL. Now, tell us whether you have at any time heard Medelus Valet recount a different story concerning the treatment accorded to Polidor in the son at St. Marc.

Mr. LANOUE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever hear Medelus Valet say that he had seen Capt. Brown apply hot irons to Polidor?

Mr. LANOUE. He even said that it was he, Medelus Valet, who heated the iron for him.

The CHAIRMAN. You have no personal knowledge about this matter at all?

Mr. LANOUE. As a newspaper man I had some reports of this affair, I never had all of its details.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not answer the question. Do you know of your own personal knowledge anything about this, or is your knowledge limited simply hearsay or what others have told you?

Mr. LANOUE. I have an idea of the facts, from the story that has been told to me by Medelus Valet. We were confined in the same cell in the prison.

The CHAIRMAN. I want a direct answer. This is an intelligent witness and what I want to know is, does he know personally anything about the facts from his own knowledge, from what he saw.

Mr. LANOUE. No.

Senator JONES. What is the nature of the testimony of this next witness whom you are about to call?

Mr. ANGELL. The nature of his testimony would be alleged facts concerning his arrest by one Lieut. Jackson, confinement in prison for one month, with any charge against him, and other facts in connection with that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this show where he was confined, and what the nature of the charge was?

Mr. ANGELL. No, I just said that it was without charge.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you did, and I stand corrected. Does it show where he was confined, what prison?

Mr. ANGELL. In the gendarmerie prison at Miragoane.

The CHAIRMAN. Does his name appear on the prison rolls or records up to the name under which he now appears before us?

Mr. ANGELL. I don't know. I shall have to have him sworn and answer that question. He would not know anything about it probably.

The CHAIRMAN. You may go ahead. Let me suggest, however, that we have an affidavit here showing the facts as you claim them to be, we will take that affidavit as a part of the record. It is in French, I take it.

Mr. ANGELL. It is in French. An affidavit to a judge du paix saying this man appeared before him and made claim to these facts. This affidavit is dated December 10, 1917, four years ago. I have here also—

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me ask you further. Is this justice of the peace still living?

Mr. ANGELL. I shall have to ask that of the witness.

Senator JONES. Where does the witness live? Where is his home?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, have him sworn, and we will have him go on and briefly what he has to say.

STATEMENT OF MR. DILON VICTOR, OF MIRAGOANE

Mr. ANGELL. Your name is Dilon Victor?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you live in Miragoane?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. You have lived there for a long time?

Mr. VICTOR. Thirty-seven years.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you arrested and confined in the prison at Miragoane?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this in 1917?

Mr. VICTOR. The 3d of November, 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. And how long were you confined in the prison?

Mr. VICTOR. Twenty-seven days.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know for what reason you were confined?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What?

Mr. VICTOR. I am an inhabitant—a planter. I have two pieces of property, one piece of property in the first rural section of the Commune of Miragoane and the other in the fourth section in the plain of Fond des Nègres. Last year I spent six months on one property and six months on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what is all this about? What is the pertinency of this?

Mr. ANGELL. I asked why he was arrested and put in prison.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but I don't see the connection of this.

Mr. ANGELL. It has something to do with a horse, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. Go directly to the question as to what the charge was.

Mr. VICTOR. I was arrested by Lieut. Jackson. He wished to borrow my horse. I told him no; before lending him my horse I wished it to be o rest, for it had gone 9 leagues distance. I told him this in a polite manner. He invited me to come to the village for a question which would interest me. When I came to the provotal office he told me that I had been making bad reports about him. He caused me to go to the justice court—to the office of the justice of the peace. When we got to the justice court the juge du paix could not find any reason for trying me. Lieut. Jackson, therefore, took it upon himself to send me to prison.

Mr. ANGELL. What treatment did you receive in prison?

Mr. VICTOR. I was put in handcuffs.

Mr. ANGELL. Well, proceed as to any other manner in which you were treated in prison.

Mr. VICTOR. He handcuffed me and hanged me up.

Mr. ANGELL. How were you hung up and where?

Mr. VICTOR. To an iron bar.

The CHAIRMAN. Who hanged you up?

Mr. VICTOR. The lieutenant himself.

Mr. ANGELL. To what were you hung up?

Mr. VICTOR. He hanged me up to an iron bar.

Mr. ANGELL. By a rope or by a chain?

Mr. VICTOR. By a chain.

Mr. ANGELL. And where was the chain attached to your body?

Mr. VICTOR. On my wrists.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you still the marks of them on your wrists?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes. [Exhibiting his wrists to the committee.]

Mr. ANGELL. When you came out of prison, did you see a doctor in Miragoane?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What was his name?

Mr. VICTOR. Dr. Dejean, who gave me a certificate.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Dr. Dejean give you medical treatment?

Mr. VICTOR. No. When I came out of prison he gave me a certificate. He did not want to receive me.

Mr. ANGELL. The certificate I should like to offer in evidence is apparently signed by Dr. Dejean, to which this witness has just referred, and is dated December 2, 1917, and recites in French—I am giving the substance of it very briefly—that he has just examined Dillon Victor, this witness, and he has found contusions and scars and marks upon his body, including specific marks upon his wrists. I would like to offer in evidence the statement of the doctor, and also the document of the juge du paix, dated December 10, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you fix the date, or does the affidavit fix the date when he was confined there?

Mr. ANGELL. He stated that he was confined—he gave the date November, 1917, for 27 days.

The CHAIRMAN. Ask him this question, as to what was the reason for hanging him up by the hands in the way he has described.

Mr. VICTOR. For my horse.

The CHAIRMAN. What does he mean by that? That is not very definite.

Mr. VICTOR. For my horse, which I refused to lend him.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, to Lieut. Jackson?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What was Lieut. Jackson's first name?

Mr. VICTOR. I can not tell you.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were his headquarters?

Mr. VICTOR. At Miragoane.

The CHAIRMAN. How often had you seen him before this time?

Mr. VICTOR. That was the first time I had ever seen him.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he an American?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Was he a white man?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes, a white American.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is all.

Senator JONES. What did he want with the horse?

Mr. VICTOR. I don't know; but he took my horse for the service of the gendarmerie.

Senator JONES. What had your hanging up to do with the horse?

Mr. VICTOR. After I got out of prison, Dr. Dejean gave me a certificate.

Senator JONES. Make him understand. I want to have him explain what connection there was between his being hung up and that horse.

The INTERPRETER. He says, "Evidently he wanted to finish with me in order to take my horse."

Senator JONES. Could not he have taken the horse without hanging you up?

Mr. VICTOR. That was his will.

Senator JONES. Did he take the horse?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Senator JONES. How long did he keep you hung up?

Mr. VICTOR. About 24 days.

Senator JONES. Did you get the horse back?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Senator JONES. Who brought it back?

Mr. VICTOR. He told me to come and get the horse, and it was I who came and got it.

Senator JONES. Where did you get it?

Mr. VICTOR. At Port Mallet.

Senator JONES. Was it claimed that you had stolen the horse?

Mr. VICTOR. No; never.

Senator JONES. You mean to say that he wanted to borrow the horse, because you said the horse was tired he hung you up and kept you in jail 27 days? Is that right?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Senator JONES. How long did he keep you hung up?

Mr. VICTOR. Twenty-four days.

Senator JONES. Twenty-four days?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes; and gave me a bath every day.

Senator JONES. Did he give you anything to eat?

Mr. VICTOR. He gave me a piece of bread every 24 hours.

Senator JONES. That was all he gave you, was it?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes.

Senator JONES. Did anybody else see you hanging there for 24 days?

Mr. VICTOR. Yes; there was Corpl. Cambrompe.

Senator JONES. Who else saw you hanging there?

Mr. VICTOR. No one else.

Senator JONES. Was Corpl. Cambrompe a Haitian or an American?

Mr. VICTOR. A Haitian.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything more, Mr. Angell?

Mr. ANGELL. The word was passed to me that delegation of doctors is here.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, they said they wished to pay us a courtesy call and said that we would receive them at 5 o'clock.

Mr. ANGELL. There are a considerable number of dossiers filed in the former depositions which I should like to offer. I make mention of them at that time. (The documents referred to will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any further witnesses?

Mr. ANGELL. That is all for this afternoon. Other witnesses are coming all the time from outlying districts. Word is passed up to me every half hour that some one has come in to testify.

The CHAIRMAN. The chairman desires to state before adjourning now. The committee is very much grieved to hear that there is any evidence of cruelties or torturing of any kind toward any persons, for any cause whatever. This committee is authorized only to make inquiry about these charges and to report the facts to the United States Senate. Necessarily some of these things come to us here for the first time. They will be more thoroughly investigated by the American authorities here on the island. And I want to say to the people of Haiti that neither the United States Government nor its Army nor its Navy nor its Marines will ever permit, knowingly, the torture of prisoners. It may be that some of these things have happened. We are passing judgment now, but these matters are going to be investigated, and that justice may be done to all parties concerned. It may be that some of these charges that those who present them will want to present other evidence confirmatory of what may be said here. It may be that those who are accused will want to present further evidence. And I want to assure the people of Haiti that this committee and the Government of the United States desire the good of the people of Haiti, nothing else, and we want to have a free expression with you. We shall probably have to leave in the morning.

her sections of Haiti, because our time is necessarily limited, but these investigations will go on, whether we are here or not.

And allow me to suggest, further, that if we are not here, if the people who have these charges to present will present them to Col. Russel, the commandant, they will be thoroughly inquired into, and this information will be forwarded to us at Washington if we are not here.

I want the Haitian people to believe that that is what we want to do.

This committee and its attachés more than appreciate the many very great courtesies which have been shown to us, not only by the Haitian Government, but by the citizens of Haiti as well.

Let me add this further. If the people of Haiti desire to send any other evidence in the form of affidavits or depositions to the committee, let them be sent to the Hon. Medill McCormick, the chairman of this committee, in Washington. I ask now that the interpreter may interpret what I have said.

The committee will now stand adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 5.45 p. m., the committee adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SAN DOMINGO.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Hinche, Haiti.

The committee met at 11.15 o'clock a. m. at the gendarmerie, Hinche, Haiti, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Pomerene, Oddie, and Jones.
Also present Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, and Mr. Ernest Angell, in their respective capacities as heretofore indicated.

STATEMENT OF MADAME EXILE ONEXILE.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Madame ONEXILE. Madame Exile Onexile.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Madame ONEXILE. Section La Guajon.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you explain to the witness that she is to tell only what she herself has seen or heard? Let her begin to tell then.

Madame ONEXILE. The first atrocity was a mule that I had tied up in my garden. I went to take this mule. I did not find him. When I did not find him I came in and made a report to the magistrat communal that I did not find the mule in the yard.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, what happened?

Madame ONEXILE. I took the stamp of this mule from the magistrat and went to Tamocque or anywhere that I could find him. I found the mules in the hands of Capt. Kelly, who was then at Cercle La Source. When I presented my certificate for the mule the mule was not there, he had sent it to Aquiat to carry food for the gendarmes. When the mule returned Captain Aquiat used to turn the mule over to me and demanded 130 gourdes for it. I came back to Hinche to get the 130 gourdes. Capt. Kelly then locked me up in the prison of Cercle La Source and two days later Capt. Kelly went out to release me—

The CHAIRMAN. How long did you stay in prison?

Madame ONEXILE. I entered the prison Saturday and they turned me loose Sunday at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and then he did whatever he wished with the mule.

Mr. ANGELL. When did all this take place?

Madame ONEXILE. Three years and five months ago.

The CHAIRMAN. After putting you in prison did he keep the mule?

Madame ONEXILE. I came back here on a Wednesday.

Mr. ANGELL. Came back here to Hinche?

Madame ONEXILE. Yes; to Hinche. Then, when I went away I stayed at home with my infant and I took sick and could not come back here.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait a minute. You had come back here?

Madame ONEXILE. I had come back and returned.

The CHAIRMAN. You had come back here to stay with the children?

Madame ONEXILE. And went back with my children.

The CHAIRMAN. Where were your children?

Madame ONEXILE. At my habitation. When I came back to my habitation, Capt. Kelly came out in charge of a patrol. He took my husband and hung him from the rafters. He took our little bag of money and set fire to the house. Hung me to the rafters, and then set fire to the house. A little brother of mine was

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know anyone who saw the marines or gendarmes bury her?

The CHAIRMAN. With your own eyes.

The INTERPRETER. The same thing. He says they buried her.

The CHAIRMAN. All right.

Senator POMERENE. How far is it from Hinche here where you were? In what place where the wife was killed?

The INTERPRETER. He can not calculate it, but he says it is about the same distance as from here to the second crossing of the river, coming in the Malssade. That is about an hour's horseback ride, and about an hour and a half on foot.

Senator JONES. How old was that child?

Mr. SOLOND. About 14.

Senator JONES. Was it buried with the mother?

Mr. SOLOND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. This happened during the epoch of the Cacos?

Mr. SOLOND. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And he had run into Hinche to get away from the cacos?

Mr. SOLOND. The cacos ran after me and stole what property I had and ran into Hinche to save my life.

Senator POMERENE. How do you know that it was not the cacos that were killing?

Mr. SOLOND. The cacos at that time were far away.

Senator POMERENE. Where? You were not there.

Mr. SOLOND. I was here.

Senator POMERENE. Were these neighbors who told you about the burying of your wife and child—were they cacos?

Mr. SOLOND. I do not know.

STATEMENT OF MR. CHARLES BUSSEY ZAMOR.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. ZAMOR. Charles Bussey Zamor.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your profession?

Mr. ZAMOR. Former senator of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Mr. ZAMOR. At Hinche.

Senator POMERENE. Are you a brother of the former President?

Mr. ZAMOR. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you proceed to give this commission facts which you know of your own knowledge?

Mr. ZAMOR. What I know personally and that which came to my knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. Give first those which you know personally.

Mr. ZAMOR. What I have to say is that I have very much suffered from the occupation here at Hinche. First, I was brutally dispossessed and driven from my house.

Mr. ANGELL. When?

Mr. ZAMOR. About the 27th of March, 1919.

Mr. ANGELL. By whom were you chased out of your house?

Mr. ZAMOR. I have never concerned myself with the officers of the occupation, and I can not tell you exactly the name, but it was by order of Col. Hooker.

The CHAIRMAN. Continue.

Mr. ZAMOR. Col. Hooker asked first to rent my house, and I refused that day at noon, if between noon and 1 o'clock I did not give him my house, that he would take it by force, which he did. At the same time my mules and one of my burros were taken by the marines under Col. Hooker.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you at that time?

Mr. ZAMOR. I was here at my house.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see the marines come and take the mules and burros?

Mr. ZAMOR. I not only saw it, but I even fought with one of the marines myself one evening. In spite of my efforts toward the military commander even toward the President of the Republic and the minister, I was not able to obtain any satisfaction. After two years of the occupation I was able to regain my house, having process-verbal drawn up by the Juge du Paix here present. As I have said, I have suffered greatly from the occupation.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you ever paid for the use of your house by the marines here?

Mr. ZAMOR. Never, never, not until this day.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever demand payment?

Mr. ZAMOR. Yes; I have made many efforts to receive payment, and up to the present time I have never succeeded.

Mr. ANGELL. Can you tell the names of the marines who lived in your house during that period?

Mr. ZAMOR. I can not tell you their names. I was so indignant against them that I never even tried to find out who they were.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you remain in Hinche during the time your house was occupied by the marines?

Mr. ZAMOR. No; they put me out, and I had other houses and I found lodging in other places.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you remain in Hinche?

Mr. ZAMOR. Yes; I was in Hinche. I had never left Hinche.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you actually seen the marines coming in and out of your house during the period of occupation of it?

Mr. ZAMOR. Yes; often. All of the society here can attest to that fact, the jeu du paix and the magistrat communal.

The CHAIRMAN. From whom of the occupation did you demand rent for your house?

Mr. ZAMOR. I asked the minister of the interior and the President of the republic, since they are my chiefs.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make a demand for rent or for restoration of your house to any of the American military authorities in the occupation?

Mr. ZAMOR. No. I merely asked that they give me back my house and rent for the months it had been occupied, but the Government kept my letter without giving any answer.

Senator POMERENE. What Government do you mean?

Mr. ZAMOR. The present Government.

Senator POMERENE. You mean by that the Haitian Government?

Mr. ZAMOR. The Haitian Government during the occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any officer of the American forces of whom you asked your rent?

Mr. ZAMOR. I could not address such a request to any of the officers, since it was Gen. Hooker himself who took my house by force, and I could not ask him.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other matters of which the witness wishes to speak?

Mr. ZAMOR. Yes; there are other things, but it is so long that I prefer to amplify it in order to defend these poor inhabitants.

The CHAIRMAN. I wonder if that would not better be reduced to paper. He wants to engage in a general defense.

Mr. ANGELL. Ask him if he can not make a memoir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what I mean. Would that be satisfactory to you?

Mr. ZAMOR. If you will permit me to add, there is Mr. Marests Woolley, who is a long list of the victims; and after he has given you this list, if you wish to hear me again, I have much to say.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you to give to the commission a memorandum on the condition of the people and the cruelties from which they have suffered, which you may remit through Mr. Stenlo Vincent or Judge Nau, who will transmit the memoirs to the commission through the hands of Mr. Angell, counsel for the nation, of which they are members.

(The papers referred to will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

STATEMENT OF MR. ODALIS TELISMA.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. TELISMA. Odalis Tellisma.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Mr. TELISMA. Section 1a Guajon.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you have to tell the committee?

Mr. TELISMA. I came here to make complaints of my father-in-law and son-in-law. The Americans killed both at their homes in the month of October, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. Was it during the time of the Cacos?

Mr. TELISMA. At the commencement of the Cacos. The first Haitian or American killed in Haiti was my father-in-law.

The CHAIRMAN. Who saw the marines kill him?

Mr. TELISMA. When the marines came in the house they arrested all the who were in the house. When they arrested these people the white men (marines) told my father-in-law that he could remain in the house. They not appear to be all white men. It was gendarmes and two officers—two white men—who arrested all these people.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was this man at the time?

Mr. TELISMA. I was at my own home.

Mr. ANGELL. How far was your home from the place where these relatives were arrested?

Mr. TELISMA. About from here to the river, about 10 minutes' walk. I was a man that was present. When the gendarmes and the two officers arrived they killed this man (indicating a man present in the room). I asked him to talk and he is afraid. He would not say anything. When he saw the gendarmes and the white men with their rifles he was afraid, and he opened the side of his house and he ran. They shot at him. The gendarmes and the officers shot at him when he was running.

Mr. ANGELL. Shot at whom?

Mr. TELISMA. Shot at this man here (indicating the same man).

The CHAIRMAN. Did this man himself see the gendarmes enter the house? did he see them raise their guns to fire?

Mr. TELISMA. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then he is excused.

Senator POMERENE. Does he know what these men who were at his father-in-law's were arrested for?

Mr. TELISMA. I do not know.

Senator POMERENE. Were they Cacos?

Mr. TELISMA. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Inasmuch as there is present, according to this witness, an individual who saw what happened, speaking for myself, I see no reason for continuing the examination of this witness.

Mr. ANGELL. I think you are right.

Senator POMERENE. You might just ask one question here. He said nothing about his son-in-law being killed.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it was his brother-in-law.

Senator POMERENE. I think he said his father-in-law and his son-in-law.

The CHAIRMAN. Were his father-in-law and son-in-law killed at the same time?

Mr. TELISMA. No; they did not die at the same time. They gave them to the gendarmes to bring in.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they arrested in the same habitation?

Mr. TELISMA. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Did he see with his own eyes the arrest either of his father-in-law or his son-in-law?

Mr. TELISMA. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then I am ready to release this witness. Is that satisfactory to you, Mr. Angell?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes; I agree.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee unanimously and Mr. Angell the clerk agrees that there is no further examination to be made of this witness. Him sit down.

STATEMENT OF MR. DORCELLIUS JOSEPH.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Mr. JOSEPH. Dorcellius Joseph.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Mr. JOSEPH. Section La Guaion.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the gendarmes arrest the father-in-law or son-in-law of Odalis Tellisma?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes. They arrested these people in front of me.

The CHAIRMAN. How many gendarmes were there?

Mr. JOSEPH. Eleven.

The CHAIRMAN. And how many white officers?

Mr. JOSEPH. And two white men.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were they?

Mr. JOSEPH. I don't know their names.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago was this?

Mr. JOSEPH. About two years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. At the beginning of the Cacos time?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you given the name of your habitation, of the section?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. About how far from Hinche is that?

Mr. JOSEPH. If you leave now you would get there about 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. About three and a half hours, about 9 miles. Will you tell me the commission where you were when the gendarmes arrived?

Mr. JOSEPH. I was at my father's house.

The CHAIRMAN. How near is that to the house of the father-in-law of Odalisma?

Mr. JOSEPH. About from here to the other side of the river, about 1,000 yards.

The CHAIRMAN. What did you do when you saw the gendarmes coming?

Mr. JOSEPH. Nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you stay in your own habitation and watch the gendarmes enter the other house?

Mr. JOSEPH. I was right at my house and I saw the gendarmes tie and beat these people, so I ran.

The CHAIRMAN. After they tied and beat these people, what did you next see?

Mr. JOSEPH. I didn't see another thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the gendarmes at any time shoot the father-in-law or the son-in-law with your own eyes?

Mr. JOSEPH. No, sir; I didn't see it with my own eyes—the shooting.

Senator POMERENE. What was done with these men after they were burned and beaten, as you say?

Mr. JOSEPH. I ran away and I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you hear that they were dead?

Mr. JOSEPH. My mother saw the shooting.

The CHAIRMAN. What did your mother say to you?

Mr. JOSEPH. She didn't tell me anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Did she tell you that she saw the shooting?

Mr. JOSEPH. The mother didn't see this. The killing was done on the road going here.

Senator POMERENE. Where is his mother now?

Mr. JOSEPH. Section La Guajon.

Senator POMERENE. What's her name?

Mr. JOSEPH. Madame Axcelius Joseph.

The CHAIRMAN. Why isn't she here to-day?

Mr. JOSEPH. She is sick.

Senator POMERENE. Were these people who were arrested Cacos?

Mr. JOSEPH. No, sir; they were at their homes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you give the names of anybody who saw these men killed on the road after they were taken?

Mr. JOSEPH. Perhaps my mother could, but I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know anything more to ask him.

Senator POMERENE. Are you related to the other man who was on the stand?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes; I am the brother-in-law of this man.

The CHAIRMAN. You are a brother-in-law of this man?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. But you are not the brother of the man who was killed?

Mr. JOSEPH. I am a son of the old gentleman that was killed.

Senator POMERENE. Who; this man?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes; I was a son of his father-in-law.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you were the brother of the other man killed?

Mr. JOSEPH. It was this brother of mine who was killed.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you injured or hurt in any way at the time of this arrest?

Mr. JOSEPH. I was wounded.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. JOSEPH. There [indicating].

Senator POMERENE. How was he wounded?

Mr. JOSEPH. It came in here and out there. [Indicating a place above knee, a few inches above the right knee on the right side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Was that a bullet from a gun?

Mr. JOSEPH. I don't know. I was running. I don't know whether it was a bullet or not.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know by whom you were shot?

Mr. JOSEPH. A white man; an American.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see the white American fire his gun?

Mr. JOSEPH. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one question I think we have not asked. Did you see the bodies of your father and brother after they were killed?

Mr. JOSEPH. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give the names of anybody who saw the bodies?

Mr. JOSEPH. A man by the name of Anesiga.

The CHAIRMAN. Did Anesiga tell you that he saw the bodies?

Mr. JOSEPH. No. He told my mother that.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know where these men are buried?

Mr. JOSEPH. I know where the bodies are buried.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you know where Anesiga lives?

Mr. JOSEPH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell where Anesiga lives.

Mr. JOSEPH. Section La Guajon.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you find him? Does he live there now?

Mr. JOSEPH. He is there; yes.

Senator POMERENE. Have we got this man's address, or where he lives?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Any more questions, Mr. Angell?

Mr. ANGELL. No.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all.

STATEMENT OF MR. JOSE DEREBIER.

The CHAIRMAN. What's your name?

Mr. DEREBIER. Jose Derebier.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Mr. DEREBIER. Los Pails.

The CHAIRMAN. How far is that from here?

Mr. DEREBIER. About an hour and a half's walk.

The CHAIRMAN. Tell your story.

Mr. DEREBIER. Two little brothers of mine were killed.

The CHAIRMAN. How old were they?

Mr. DEREBIER. One was 15 and the other 25.

The CHAIRMAN. How long ago?

Mr. DEREBIER. About two years in October or November.

The CHAIRMAN. At the beginning of the epoch of the cacos?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How did it happen that they were killed?

Mr. DEREBIER. The son that was 25 years of age was a cripple. He was on a bed of rice. The white man arrived with his revolver and killed him.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you at the time this happened?

Mr. DEREBIER. I was at my own house when this happened.

The CHAIRMAN. How far was it from your own house to the place your son was killed?

Mr. DEREBIER. About from here to the market.

The INTERPRETER. About 300 yards.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see it with your own eyes?

Mr. DEREBIER. No, sir; I did not see that. I saw them pass in front of my house.

Senator POMERENE. Let us make this clear. I understood him in the part of his examination to say his two little brothers, but it turns out talking about his son. Make sure it is clear about that.

Mr. DEREBIER. Two brothers is right. They killed the crippled one with a revolver.

The CHAIRMAN. If he did not see the marines shoot him with a revolver, did he know that he was killed by white men with a revolver?

Mr. DEREBIER. The wife of the cripple saw this.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is she?

Mr. DEREBIER. She is there.

The CHAIRMAN. Why is she not here to-day?

Mr. DEREBIER. She has a small child.

The CHAIRMAN. Is she married again?

Mr. DEREBIER. She did not marry, but she has a baby.

The CHAIRMAN. She is not married, but she has a man there?

Senator POMERENE. How about the other brother?

Mr. DEREBIER. After they killed the cripple that was on this bed, this other boy was in another room on another bed. The white man went in there and told him to get up, took him by the arm.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the name of the wife of the brother who was killed?

Mr. DEREBIER. Viergeline.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does she live?

Mr. DEREBIER. Muscien.

The CHAIRMAN. She was in the house, Viergelin?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. She saw the other boy killed?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes; she saw him. The same man that killed the cripple went into the next room and took the other boy by the arm and said "Come out of here, Garcon," and with the same revolver shot him twice.

The CHAIRMAN. Before these people were killed, did you see these men go by your house?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes, I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the gendarmes with white officers?

Mr. DEREBIER. Three white men and many gendarmes.

Senator POMERENE. How many?

Mr. DEREBIER. I did not count the gendarmes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anybody besides Viergeline who saw the shooting?

Mr. DEREBIER. She was the only one. The neighbors heard the rifle shots and ran.

Senator POMERENE. We have not got that woman's address yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does she live now?

Mr. DEREBIER. Los Palis.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see these brothers of yours after they were dead?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes, I did. I buried them.

The CHAIRMAN. Where did you bury them?

Mr. DEREBIER. Where they were shot.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. What else have you to say?

Mr. DEREBIER. That is all.

Mr. ANGELL. Didn't you say something about the house being burned. I got part of that.

Mr. DEREBIER. They set fire to the house after they did this killing, and the cripple who was in the house had part of his foot and leg burned.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see the house in ashes afterwards?

Mr. DEREBIER. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see it burning?

Mr. DEREBIER. I did not see the house burning.

STATEMENT OF MR. ERIA EMANUEL.

Senator POMERENE. What's your name?

Mr. EMANUEL. Eria Emanuel.

Senator POMERENE. Where do you live?

Mr. EMANUEL. Section La Guajon.

Senator POMERENE. What do you want to say?

Mr. EMANUEL. The same report I want to make. They are brothers of mine too, these boys that were killed, the cripple and the boy who was 15 years old.

Senator POMERENE. Where were you at the time of this killing?

Mr. EMANUEL. I was a short distance watching them, and ran and stopped a short distance and watched.

Senator POMERENE. Tell now what you saw with your own eyes.

Mr. EMANUEL. First, I saw the white man shoot the cripple. I saw him walk in. First I saw this white man walk in and take him off the bed, drag him up to the door and shoot him.

Senator POMERENE. Were you in the house at the time?

Mr. EMANUEL. No, no. I was behind at a short distance, behind a plantain tree, watching this.

Senator POMERENE. How far from the house?

Mr. EMANUEL. From here to the prison.

Senator POMERENE. About 30 feet?

Mr. EMANUEL. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Could you see in the house?

Mr. EMANUEL. I could not see inside of the house, but I saw this killing.

Senator POMERENE. Did you see the second boy killed?

Mr. EMANUEL. I saw the second one.

Senator POMERENE. Where was he killed?

Mr. EMANUEL. He dragged him out of this room into the yard.

Senator POMERENE. How do you know he dragged him out, when you could not see in there?

Mr. EMANUEL. I saw him as he was coming out of the door, dragging him.

Senator POMERENE. You know the names of these white officers or men?

Mr. EMANUEL. No, sir, I do not.

Senator POMERENE. Were the gendarmes Haitians or were they two white men?

Mr. EMANUEL. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. How many of them were there?

Mr. EMANUEL. I didn't count them, but I think about 15.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know any of them?

Mr. EMANUEL. I did not recognize them. They were not men from this side of the country.

Senator POMERENE. Have you seen any of them since?

Mr. EMANUEL. No; no. They left and went to Thomonde.

Senator POMERENE. Did you or the other friends make any report of the killing to the Haitian Government or to the American soldiers or officers?

Mr. EMANUEL. My brother came in and made a report.

Senator POMERENE. A report to whom?

Mr. EMANUEL. I don't know. The chief of the white men here. I don't know his name.

Senator POMERENE. How long after the killing?

Mr. EMANUEL. Right away.

Senator POMERENE. Were there Cacos about here at that time?

Mr. EMANUEL. There were no Cacos near here at the time. They were away.

Senator POMERENE. How far away?

Mr. EMANUEL. I do not know. I was not with them.

Senator POMERENE. Were these brothers associated with or friends of the Cacos?

Mr. EMANUEL. One was a cripple, and the other was very sick in his legs—sore. They were not together with the Cacos.

Senator POMERENE. That doesn't answer the question. Were they friends of the Cacos?

Mr. EMANUEL. Never.

Senator POMERENE. Had the Cacos been stopping at that house?

Mr. EMANUEL. No.

Senator ODDIE. Would you know these men again if you saw them—these men that did the killing?

Mr. EMANUEL. No; I would not recognize them now.

STATEMENT OF MADAME MICHEL MAXINE.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your name?

Madame MAXINE. Madame Michel Maxine.

The CHAIRMAN. Where do you live?

Madame MAXINE. Section La Guaïon.

The CHAIRMAN. What have you to tell the commission?

Madame MAXINE. My mother and a brother that the Americans killed.

The CHAIRMAN. When?

Madame MAXINE. About two years and six months ago that they killed my mother.

The CHAIRMAN. And how long ago did they kill your brother?

Madame MAXINE. The brother was taken prisoner by the white men, maltreated and sent to Cape Haitien and died in prison.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that that the brother was taken to the cape?

Madame MAXINE. At the same time; they were taken at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. Who saw your mother killed?

Madame MAXINE. A little brother.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is he?

Madame MAXINE. The little brother did not come. He is not here.

The CHAIRMAN. How old is he?

Madame MAXINE. About 30 years.

The CHAIRMAN. Where does he live now?

Madame MAXINE. My brother is in Section La Guajon now.

The CHAIRMAN. What is his name?

Madame MAXINE. Telo Favius.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you with your own eyes see your mother killed?

Madame MAXINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there white men and gendarmes together?

Madame MAXINE. There were no gendarmes—three white men.

The CHAIRMAN. How did they come to the habitation?

Madame MAXINE. They were passing; they were going along the road and came in.

The CHAIRMAN. What did they do when they came in?

Madame MAXINE. They came in and killed my mother.

The CHAIRMAN. How did they happen to kill your mother?

Madame MAXINE. I don't know. I had no husband. I was there alone. The mother was at his own house in the same habitation.

The INTERPRETER. What they mean by that is: They have one big house and five or six little houses around it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did they enter the house before they killed the mother?

Madame MAXINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How long were they in the house before they killed the mother?

Madame MAXINE. When they were arrived.

Senator POMERENE. Where were you when the mother was killed?

Madame MAXINE. I was at my home.

Senator POMERENE. Where was that? How far away from your mother's home?

Madame MAXINE. About an hour's walk.

Senator POMERENE. If you were an hour's walk away how could you see these people kill your mother?

Madame MAXINE. A little brother of mine came and called me.

Senator POMERENE. After she was shot?

Madame MAXINE. Yes. Came and called me after the mother had been shot.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you see your mother after she was shot?

Madame MAXINE. Yes; I buried her.

The CHAIRMAN. How was she wounded?

Madame MAXINE. Shot through the side and in both breasts.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the face crushed?

Madame MAXINE. And she was evidently shot in the house.

Senator POMERENE. Did you see the man who did the shooting?

Madame MAXINE. Yes; I saw them; I saw three white men.

The CHAIRMAN. And they took the mother off then?

Madame MAXINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there other men in the habitation besides the little brother?

Madame MAXINE. Yes. They ran.

The CHAIRMAN. How many men were in the habitation?

Madame MAXINE. A small brother and an aunt.

The CHAIRMAN. They ran away?

Madame MAXINE. They ran away.

Senator JONES. Did you not say at one time you saw them killed, and then at other that you were an hour's walk away?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Where were the Cacos at that time?

Madame MAXINE. I don't know.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the whites out chasing the Cacos?

Madame MAXINE. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. How old was this little brother who came and told you that this mother had been shot?

Madame MAXINE. About 30 years old.

The CHAIRMAN. And how old was the other brother who ran away?

Madame MAXINE. The one that ran away with the aunt, ran over the house.

The CHAIRMAN. How old was he?

Madame MAXINE. Thirty years old.

The CHAIRMAN. One of your two brothers?

Madame MAXINE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How old was the one that was taken to the Cape?

Madame MAXINE. About 35.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know where your mother is buried?

Madame MAXINE. I do. She is buried here in the habitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything more to say?

Madame MAXINE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Interpreter, will you say that we regret the absence of those witnesses who with their own eyes are alleged to have seen the events. The American authorities, civil and military, are opposed to the treatment of the people. The American officers of the gendarmerie and Marines are under instructions from their chief to assure the good treatment of the people and to receive complaints. The American Government will do everything possible to assure the people of the country, to make it possible for the people to work, and to secure the prosperity of the people. There are no more witnesses to-day, but a further investigation will be made of the facts and the ill treatment of which the witnesses have told. The commission will urge the people to help the officers and inspectors in making these investigations. Any further investigation which is made will be forwarded to the commission at Washington.

We are going to adjourn the session, and we bid those who are assembled good-by, and are going on with our labors elsewhere.

(Whereupon the commission adjourned, subject to the call of the chair.)

MEMORANDUM OF INTERVIEW IN THE HOUSE OF THE PRIEST AT HINCHÉ.

His name was Duclos, and there were also several other priests present. Their names were as follows: Pere Leroue and ———.

These were here for the feast day next Thursday.

Present: All the Senators; Mr. Angell, Mr. Williams, and the rest of the party. The testimony from the priest at Hinche was the most emphatic we yet heard, and was agreed to by all the other priests.

(1) The occupation should not withdraw its marines or gendarmerie. The country could not be lived in during the disturbance. The priest himself would leave from time to time. He owes his safety to the occupation. The gendarmes and marine officers have done splendidly throughout. The priest here at Hinche is a man after the priest's own heart.

(2) There should be no national army.

(3) A local police force may come later, when the country can afford it. There then may be less petit larceny.

(4) Col. Hooker and his officers repeatedly offered Zamor rent for his house. They did not occupy it for long. Col. Russell said the house was used as a hospital.

(5) All the working people here are very content with the occupation. It has given them their first opportunity to work their land. In the town of Hinche there are perhaps only three or four who in their hearts are opposed to the occupation.

(6) All the priests believe that decent living conditions and industry can be achieved if the people depend on peace being maintained by the Americans, and that the country people began moving back into the plains immediately after the revolution was put down.

(7) A local priest told Mr. Angell that he had heard that the occupation was used from time to time up to 1918, but that it was common talk that the people who worked in the corvee then got three meals a day for the first time in their lives.

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE.
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Plantation of Atalape, Haiti.

The committee met at 8 o'clock a. m., at the residence of Mr. Baker, superintendent of the American West Indies Co.

Present: Senator Oddie and Mr. Angell.

STATEMENT OF MADAME PHILOSCAR JOSEPH.

Senator ODDIE. Where do you live?

Madame JOSEPH. Maïssade.

Senator ODDIE. Will you say what you have to say to the committee? We can only listen to things that you have seen yourself or have heard yourself.

Madame JOSEPH. I went to see my aunt and they almost killed me, and I have the marks on my head.

Senator ODDIE. Who did it?

Madame JOSEPH. Williams, with the gendarmes.

Senator ODDIE. The gendarmes or the marines, the white or the black?

Madame JOSEPH. Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. When was this and where?

Madame JOSEPH. In January, two years ago.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was this?

Madame JOSEPH. At Maïssade.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this the time the Cacos were making trouble?

Madame JOSEPH. No; it was a white man, this same Williams who was going round killing people. The Cacos had not yet come.

Mr. ANGELL. Did the Cacos come soon afterwards?

Madame JOSEPH. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. How long afterwards?

Madame JOSEPH. I can not tell exactly how long.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it soon?

Madame JOSEPH. Yes. I was suffering then and I can not tell.

Mr. ANGELL. What did Williams of the gendarmes do to you?

Madame JOSEPH. He gave me 15 blows with a stick on the arms and the head, and I was bathed in blood, and he asked Marcial if he was not going to kill anybody, and Marcial said "no," he didn't want to kill anybody.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was Marcial?

Madame JOSEPH. Marcial, who commanded Maïssade.

Mr. ANGELL. Was he a Haitian or an American?

Madame JOSEPH. A Haitian.

Senator ODDIE. Did the Americans know anything about this?

Madame JOSEPH. Yes; all the whites knew it.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you when Williams came in and beat you like this? Were you in your house?

Madame JOSEPH. No; I had left my house and gone to see my aunt.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did you last live? Was it right in Maïssade, or how far from Maïssade?

Madame JOSEPH. It was outside of Maïssade, in the country.

Mr. ANGELL. How far from Maïssade? In which direction?

Madame JOSEPH. It was some distance from Maïssade, on the big road.

Senator ODDIE. How do you know that the Americans knew that Williams beat you?

Madame JOSEPH. I don't know, but I know that it was Williams who beat me. I did not have any right to make complaint, because if I had made complaint I would have been killed.

Senator ODDIE. Who would have killed you?

Madame JOSEPH. It was Williams with Marcial, who were big chiefs. They would have killed me.

Senator ODDIE. So the Americans would not have had anything to do with that?

Madame JOSEPH. No.

Senator ODDIE. Was any complaint made to the Americans about this?

Madame JOSEPH. No; I could not make complaint because there were many Americans here at that time.

Senator ODDIE. Was Williams an American or a Haitian?

Madame JOSEPH. Williams was a white man. I don't know whether he was an American or what.

Senator ODDIE. Was he a gendarme?

Madame JOSEPH. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Was he working with the magistrat?

Madame JOSEPH. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Were there many Americans there at the time?

Madame JOSEPH. What I know is what I say. What I don't know I have not said.

• STATEMENT OF MR. MENOSTHENE TIFOUR.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name?

Mr. TIFOUR. Menosthene Tifour.

Mr. ANGELL. Where do you live?

Mr. TIFOUR. Savanne Grande, in the Commune of Maissade.

Senator ODDIE. Now, will you tell the committee your story of what you have seen yourself?

Mr. TIFOUR. The white man Williams killed my mother.

Senator ODDIE. When?

Mr. TIFOUR. It was in the month of February. The date I have forgotten.

Senator ODDIE. About how many years ago?

Mr. TIFOUR. A year and a half.

Senator ODDIE. Where did this happen?

Mr. TIFOUR. Near the Rio Frio, close to the village. I had come from my house going to the village to get some provisions. My mother was working in the village and there she met up with a white man and the white man killed her.

Senator ODDIE. Who was the white man?

Mr. TIFOUR. Williams.

Senator ODDIE. Was he a gendarme or a marine?

Mr. TIFOUR. A marine.

Senator ODDIE. How did he kill her?

Mr. TIFOUR. He met her and shot her.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see it?

Mr. TIFOUR. No; I was not there.

Senator ODDIE. Where were you?

Mr. TIFOUR. I was in the village.

Senator ODDIE. How far away?

Mr. TIFOUR. It was quite a distance.

Senator ODDIE. About how far?

Mr. TIFOUR. I was in the village, a distance of about from here to the tank or farther.

Senator ODDIE. How far would that be, about?

Mr. TIFOUR. But the river separates that place from the village.

Senator ODDIE. So you could not see it from there?

Mr. TIFOUR. No.

Senator ODDIE. How long after that did you see your mother's body?

Mr. TIFOUR. After my mother had died my father went to Lieut. Williams and asked permission to bury the body.

Mr. ANGELL. The same day?

Mr. TIFOUR. The same day.

Senator ODDIE. How did you know that Lieut. Williams killed your mother?
Mr. TIFOUR. Several gendarmes, who were with him, when they came back told me.

Senator ODDIE. Were they the Haitian gendarmes?

Mr. TIFOUR. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know those Haitian gendarmes who told you that?

Mr. TIFOUR. No; I don't know the gendarmes, because there were several of them.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see the body of your mother?

Mr. TIFOUR. No; the lieutenant did not allow any of her children to see her.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see Lieut. Williams yourself on that day before or after the shooting?

Mr. TIFOUR. No; he stayed in his house so that nobody could see him.

Senator ODDIE. All you know about it is what the Haitian gendarmes told you?

Mr. TIFOUR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where is your father?

Mr. TIFOUR. After the death of my mother my father died from seizure.

Senator ODDIE. What does he mean by seizure?

The INTERPRETER. It is sort of hysterics, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BAKER. A broken heart.

Senator ODDIE. Was there trouble with the Cacos at the time?

Mr. TIFOUR. No.

Senator ODDIE. Shortly afterwards or before?

Mr. TIFOUR. After that.

Senator ODDIE. How long afterwards?

Mr. TIFOUR. About two months.

Senator ODDIE. How old are you?

Mr. TIFOUR. Twenty-six years.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the name of anybody who was there and saw Lieut. Williams shoot your mother?

Mr. TIFOUR. No; I don't know him, because the gendarmes who were with Lieut. Williams were forbidden to talk about it.

Senator ODDIE. Would you know them if you were to see them again?

Mr. TIFOUR. Yes; I might know them.

Senator ODDIE. Are they there now?

Mr. TIFOUR. Yes; there are some of them there.

Senator ODDIE. The ones who talked to you?

Mr. TIFOUR. Yes; there are some who are still there.

Senator ODDIE. Under what President were you born?

Mr. TIFOUR. Under President Florville.

STATEMENT OF MR. MEZIER BELLONI.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name.

Mr. BELLONI. Mezier Belloni.

Mr. ANGELL. Where do you live?

Mr. BELLONI. Savanna Grande. Commune of Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. How old are you?

Mr. BELLONI. I don't know my age, but I was born under President Boisronde anal.

Senator ODDIE. Now, will you tell your story to the commission, and tell just what you have seen yourself and what you know to be a fact?

Mr. BELLONI. I lost my father and my mother. They killed them.

Senator ODDIE. When did this happen?

Mr. BELLONI. The 17th of June last year.

Senator ODDIE. Where did this happen?

Mr. BELLONI. At Savanna Grande.

Senator ODDIE. Who killed them?

Mr. BELLONI. Marines under the command of Becker.

Senator ODDIE. The Americans or the Haitians?

Mr. BELLONI. White Americans.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know the names of those who did it?

Mr. BELLONI. I don't know the names of the marines.

Senator ODDIE. Well, now, are you sure about the year?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; I am sure it was last year.

Senator ODDIE. 1920, that is?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see this happen yourself?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. You saw them kill your mother and father?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Where were you?

Mr. BELLONI. I was there sleeping in another house. It was midnight. I heard the house burning. They took my father and tied him to a tree. My mother was standing inside—and then set fire to the house. When my father cried out they called her inside the house. There was another boy in the house and when they shot my mother, and the boy saw that they had tied up my father he ran out, and when he came out they started shooting at him until he had to reach a ravine; and when he fell into the ravine they left him and came and killed my father, breaking his head.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you all this time?

Mr. BELLONI. I was in the house in the same courtyard.

Senator ODDIE. Was it at night?

Mr. BELLONI. At midnight.

Senator ODDIE. How far was the house you were in from the house where your mother and father were in?

Mr. BELLONI. It was not quite 100 paces.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you come out of your house and see this with your own eyes?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; I saw it with my own eyes.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see them with your own eyes tie your father to the tree?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. And did you see them with your own eyes shoot your father in the house?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Where were you standing at the time?

Mr. BELLONI. I was standing in the underbrush near there, looking on.

Senator ODDIE. How many men were there?

Mr. BELLONI. Do you want to know how many marines or how many men?

Senator ODDIE. How many marines?

Mr. BELLONI. I don't know. It was at midnight.

Mr. ANGELL. How do you know this was Lieut. Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. It was the soldiers of Capt. Becker?

Senator ODDIE. Were they Haitian soldiers?

Mr. BELLONI. They were white men.

Senator ODDIE. How could you tell?

Mr. BELLONI. I followed them to the village.

Senator ODDIE. Did you make a complaint of this?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Why not?

Mr. BELLONI. I went to a notary and told him that.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was the notary?

Mr. BELLONI. The notary who is now at Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. What is the name?

The INTERPRETER. He is looking for the name.

Senator ODDIE. Well, the one who is there now?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you make the complaint to the notary?

Mr. BELLONI. The next day.

Senator ODDIE. Was there trouble with the Cacos at that time?

Mr. BELLONI. There had been Cacos there, but they had gone away a distance. The Cacos had not gone entirely. There were Cacos around, but they were a long distance away. There were no Cacos around where I was.

Senator ODDIE. Was anybody in your house friendly with the Cacos?

Mr. BELLONI. No, no.

Senator ODDIE. Were the people around there afraid of the Cacos attacks at any time?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. There was general fear of the Cacos raids?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Was it possible that these people who did this were Cacos?

Mr. BELLONI. No; it was not Cacos.

Senator ODDIE. It was midnight, and could they not have been Cacos?
 Mr. BELLONI. There was a very bright moon, bright as the day.
 Mr. ANGELL. Did you bury the bodies of your mother and father afterwards?
 Mr. BELLONI. Yes; in the habitation.
 Mr. ANGELL. Are the graves still there in the habitation?
 Mr. BELLONI. Yes; we have no stone put up, but we have a fence around in the habitation.

STATEMENT OF MR. JOSEF DIENDONNE.

Senator ODDIE. Will you give your name and residence?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Josef Diendonne.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where do you live?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. At Herbes Guinea, in Maissade.
 Mr. ANGELL. How far is that from Maissade?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. About as far as from here to San Michel.
 Senator ODDIE. Now, will you tell your story to the commission, and tell just at you have seen and you know to be the fact?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I was working peaceably in my habitation in the month of March—
 Mr. ANGELL. In what year?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. 1919, in the month of March.
 Senator ODDIE. Continue.
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I saw Williams come to my house with an armed gendarme
 Friday, about 9 o'clock.
 Mr. ANGELL. Morning or afternoon?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. In the daytime. I saw Marcial and Williams with an armed darme and Merville Dorsainville come to my house. They asked if I was owner of the habitation. I said "Yes," and they arrested me and tied me my two arms with a piece of palm cord. After he had tied me he heard a working near by. He went and took Cazeau and tied him also.
 Senator ODDIE. Who was Cazeau?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. My nephew.
 Senator ODDIE. What is your age?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I don't know my age.
 Senator ODDIE. What is your nephew's age?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I don't know his age.
 Senator ODDIE. Where did this happen?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. In my habitation at Herbes Guinea. They took Cazeau and some rope off of me and hung Cazeau.
 Mr. ANGELL. How did they hang him?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. They hung him against a tree.
 Mr. ANGELL. You mean to say they tied him against a tree, or they hung him?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. They tied him. After that they burned him until he fell to ground, then he told the gendarmes, "Make the blood flow."
 Mr. ANGELL. Who said that?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Williams; and the gendarmes took hold of my beard and out his knife. Then he shot me three times.
 Mr. ANGELL. Who shot you?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Williams.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where in the body?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. In the back. One ball went in the back and came out by shoulder.
 Mr. ANGELL. And the other?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Only one took effect.
 Senator ODDIE. How close was he to you when he shot you?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. About 10 feet distant.
 Senator ODDIE. And he shot three times at you?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. I want to get his story completed, and then I want to ask him e questions. Has he more to say now?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. After that I went and hid in a field of cane which I had, they took everything I had—pigs, and chickens, and beef.
 Mr. ANGELL. How about Cazeau? He says he was burned and fell to the ind. What happened to Cazeau after that?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. After that he was finished with a shot from a revolver.

- Mr. ANGELL. Were you there and heard this revolver shot?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; three shots.
 Mr. ANGELL. Were you there right near by?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; I was standing about 4 feet away.
 Senator ODDIE. Do you know the men who did the shooting?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; it was Williams.
 Senator ODDIE. How many men were with him?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. One gendarme and Marcial.
 Senator ODDIE. Was the gendarme a Haitian?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where is Marcial now?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I don't know.
 Mr. ANGELL. Does he live at Maissade?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make any complaint about this?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Why not?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I understood, being unfortunate. I could not make a plaint.
 Senator ODDIE. Were the Cacos around at that time?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. The Cacos had not yet come there.
 Senator ODDIE. Were they expecting them?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. They had heard that they were in the mountains.
 Senator ODDIE. They were making trouble in that part of the country that time?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; in the mountains.
 Senator ODDIE. The mountains here where you were?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; the other side of Maissade.
 Senator ODDIE. Were there any Cacos in the village?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Any near there?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No; there were some in the mountains.
 Senator ODDIE. What happened to Merville Dorsainville?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. He died.
 Senator ODDIE. How?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. He fell to the ground.
 Senator ODDIE. At the same moment?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. Had there been any Cacos in your house?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Did they come in afterwards?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. After they had passed in the wood near there.
 Senator ODDIE. Did you know any of the Cacos?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Did Williams give any reason for doing this—say why did it?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No; he didn't say why.
 Mr. ANGELL. Why do you think that Williams shot Cazeau and M.
 Dorsainville?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I don't know why.
 Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever see Williams before this day?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Have you ever seen him since then?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Mr. ANGELL. How do you know it was Lieut. Williams?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I went to the village, which is very near, and I there.
 Mr. ANGELL. How did you know that Williams was his name?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I heard talk of him.
 Mr. ANGELL. Who told you that it was Williams?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I heard among the people that it was he who was mand there.
 Mr. ANGELL. Tell us what Williams looks like; a big man or a small?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. He was big and tall. He had a beard.
 Senator ODDIE. What color was his hair?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. About the color of your hair (medium brown).
 Senator ODDIE. How old was he?

Mr. DIENDONNE. He was not too old or too young.
 Senator ODDIE. What kind of clothes did he have on?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yellow.
 Senator ODDIE. What kind of a hat?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. A military hat.
 Senator ODDIE. How long after you were shot did you go to the town and see Williams?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. A week.
 Senator ODDIE. You did not go in the same day?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Where did Williams go after he did that?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Up to the village.
 Senator ODDIE. What did he do with your pigs and things that he took?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Took them all to the village.
 Senator ODDIE. Did he carry them or drive them?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. He drove them.
 Senator ODDIE. You know where Cazeau and Merville Dorsainville are buried?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes; the habitation.
 Senator ODDIE. Had these men made any demonstration against the marines?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Had they criticized them in any way?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Would you know Williams again if you should see him?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. I don't know whether I would know him or not.
 Mr. ANGELL. Was it at your habitation that they killed these men?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.
 Mr. ANGELL. Do you live there still?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.
 Mr. ANGELL. The same habitation?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. The same habitation.
 Mr. ANGELL. And these men are buried at your habitation?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Near my habitation.
 Mr. ANGELL. How near?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. About a hundred feet.
 Mr. ANGELL. Could you show us, if we went there, where those graves are?
 Mr. DIENDONNE. Yes.

STATEMENT OF MADAME CELICOURT ROZIER.

Senator ODDIE. What is your name?
 Madame ROZIER. Madame Celicourt Rozier.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where do you live?
 Madame ROZIER. Section of Collacigui, Commune of Maissade.
 Senator ODDIE. Will you tell your story to the commission and tell just what you have seen and what you know yourself?
 Madame ROZIER. I am going to show you where I received the bullets in the legs and above the left knee. All my children have died.
 Senator ODDIE. When did this happen?
 Madame ROZIER. The 1st of June. Two years at least.
 Senator ODDIE. Where did it happen?
 Madame ROZIER. At my house.
 Senator ODDIE. Who did this?
 Madame ROZIER. Becker or Baker, a name like that.
 Senator ODDIE. How did he do it?
 Madame ROZIER. I know my children were in the house and after he had killed everything he set fire to the house and they all were burned in the house.
 Mr. ANGELL. All your children?
 Madame ROZIER. Yes; all my children.
 Mr. ANGELL. Who were they? Give their names and how old they were.
 Madame ROZIER. They were eight. They were all women except one. Some were big girls, who had already had children.
 Senator ODDIE. And they were all burned to death?
 Madame ROZIER. They were all shot first and then fire was set to the house and they were burned.
 Mr. ANGELL. Tell us the names of the children.

Madame ROZIER. One was my daughter named Anne; another named Ana; another named Ethel; another named Bonne; another named Mar. a boy named Sean; one named Phania; I was eight months pregnant with named Claircina.

I was in the house and I knew nothing of it until the house was fired and everybody was killed in it, at the same time I was struck in the head in the knee.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this marines or gendarmes that were there and did Madame ROZIER. It was white men who had Haitians with them.

Mr. ANGELL. How many white men were there?

Madame ROZIER. The sun had gone down and I could not see them very but there were a great many. I could see them in the front of my door.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Becker there?

Madame ROZIER. Yes; it was he who caused them to fire upon the house

Mr. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Becker before?

Madame ROZIER. No; I had not seen him.

Mr. ANGELL. How did you know it was Becker?

Madame ROZIER. I saw him myself.

Mr. ANGELL. Who told you it was Becker?

Madame ROZIER. I saw him myself and I knew him already.

Mr. ANGELL. Where had you ever seen Becker before?

Madame ROZIER. At Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. Once or more than once?

Madame ROZIER. I saw him several times at Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the names of any other whites or Haitians who were there with Becker?

Madame ROZIER. I knew that there were Haitians with him, but I did not see their faces well.

Mr. ANGELL. Were there any other people in the habitation who saw?

Madame ROZIER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were they?

Madame ROZIER. No; there was only myself who saw that.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know where all your children are buried?

Madame ROZIER. They were all burned up in the house, and even their bones were burned. It was just recently that I gathered together what was left of the bones. There was only one who was not completely burned, one child whom I dragged out of the house, and I had her buried in the yard.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you live there now in the same habitation where they were buried?

Madame ROZIER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make a complaint about this?

Madame ROZIER. I went and told the people in the village about it.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever complain to the whites or to the magistrates?

Madame ROZIER. No; I had never made a complaint about it. It is not my business to make complaint.

Senator ODDIE. How long after sundown did this happen?

Madame ROZIER. The sun was not yet down when he came, but was going down.

Senator ODDIE. How many Americans were in the party?

Madame ROZIER. I don't know. I saw their faces, but I was hysterical.

Senator ODDIE. Are you sure that they were Americans?

Madame ROZIER. They were white men. It was a white man who gave you who did that.

Senator ODDIE. Had you ever seen him before?

Madame ROZIER. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. And what was this white man's name who did it?

Madame ROZIER. Decko or Dako, or something like that.

Senator ODDIE. How do you know that that was his name?

Madame ROZIER. Everybody was talking and speaking his name.

Senator ODDIE. Do you remember who told you what his name was?

Madame ROZIER. They were speaking his name, and I heard it.

Senator ODDIE. Where was Baker at that time?

Madame ROZIER. He came from Maissade. That is where it was.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see him then?

Madame ROZIER. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Whereabouts?

Madame ROZIER. He was there when the house was burning.

Senator ODDIE. Was he there when these people were killed?

Madame ROZIER. Yes; he was there. I saw him.

Senator ODDIE. How close was he to this house when this happened?

Madame ROZIER. As far as from here to this first house.

Senator ODDIE. What was Becker doing at that time when this was being done?

Madame ROZIER. It was he himself, I told you, who put the fire in the house. He broke up the beds and furniture and set fire to the houses.

Senator ODDIE. Were the Cacos around at that time?

Madame ROZIER. No. When they came they didn't find anything there.

Senator ODDIE. Were they afraid of the Cacos coming at that time?

Madame ROZIER. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did they come later?

Madame ROZIER. No.

STATEMENT OF MR. CAPSINE ALTIDOR.

Senator ODDIE. What is your name?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Capsine Altidor.

Senator ODDIE. Where do you live?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Section Paloit, near the village of Maissade.

Senator ODDIE. What is your age?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Sixty-one years.

Senator ODDIE. Tell your story to the commission and tell just what you have seen and what you know.

Mr. ALTIDOR. I never saw with my own eyes, but it is things that are publicly known—

Mr. ANGELL. I suggest we excuse the witness until we have examined some to see these things, and then come back to him afterwards if necessary.

Senator ODDIE. Yes.

The INTERPRETER. He says that "I saw them come and take my son for a corvee. They struck him on the head and made him lose a quantity of blood. They took him to the gendarmerie bureau, and from that time he appeared."

The CHAIRMAN. I think we had better keep on with him if he saw things himself.

Mr. ALTIDOR. I had another boy. They came and found him grinding corn on the big road. They took him to the village and consulted a long time about whether he should be released. Then they brought him out in a big automobile along the big road and killed him.

Mr. ANGELL. When did all this happen?

Mr. ALTIDOR. That was in 1917.

Mr. ANGELL. What month?

Mr. ALTIDOR. The 8th of June.

Mr. ANGELL. Were these all Haitians who came and took him or were there some whites?

Mr. ALTIDOR. White men and Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. How many white men were there?

Mr. ALTIDOR. There was only one white man.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know who this white man was?

Mr. ALTIDOR. It was Williams.

Mr. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Williams before this day?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where had you seen Williams before?

Mr. ALTIDOR. In the village.

Mr. ANGELL. At Maissade?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes; in the village of Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know the names of any of the Haitians who were with Williams?

Mr. ALTIDOR. No; it was gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. How many gendarmes were there?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Four gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see your second boy killed on the road after they brought him out in the auto?

Mr. ALTIDOR. I did not see them shooting, but we heard the shots, and we went out and found him lying there.

Mr. ANGELL. How far away from the house did you find the boy lying?

Mr. ALTIDOR. About 300 paces.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you find him lying in the road?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Not in the road, but near the road; alongside the road.
Mr. ANGELL. Where is this boy buried?
Mr. ALTIDOR. He was never buried. His bones are still there.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make complaint about this?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Where would you go to make a complaint? There was no place to make a complaint.
Mr. ANGELL. Who else was at the habitation when the gendarmes came and took away your son and shot the other one?
Mr. ALTIDOR. There were no other people.
Mr. ANGELL. What time in the day was this?
Mr. ALTIDOR. In the morning, very early.
Mr. ANGELL. Was the sun up yet?
Mr. ALTIDOR. The sun had not yet risen.
Mr. ANGELL. Was it light or was it still dark?
Mr. ALTIDOR. It had just begun to get light.
Mr. ANGELL. Did Williams come to the house with the gendarmes, or did the gendarmes come alone?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Where he came and got him? Or where he came and got him?
Mr. ANGELL. Where he came and got the boy he took away.
Mr. ALTIDOR. Williams and four gendarmes.
Mr. ANGELL. Was the son they took away in the house with you at that time?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.
Mr. ANGELL. What were you doing the moment that the gendarmes came to the house?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I was not there. When they took him I went and saw him in the village.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you talk to the gendarmes or Williams in the village?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes; I talked with him.
Mr. ANGELL. What did you say to Williams, and what did he say to you?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I asked him what he was going to do with him, and he said he was going to release him, and then they went and killed him.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you talk with Williams or with the gendarmes?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I talked with Williams.
Mr. ANGELL. Did Williams talk Creole?
Mr. ALTIDOR. He said in Creole that he would release him.
Mr. ANGELL. Are you talking about the boy who was taken away for corvée and disappeared, or about the boy who was killed?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I was talking about the one who was killed afterwards, Senator ODDIE. That was the second one he mentioned.
Mr. ANGELL. Yes. Now, go back with him. Were you in the house when Williams and the gendarmes came and took away the boy for the corvée?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes; I was present.
Mr. ANGELL. What were you doing at that time?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I was working.
Mr. ANGELL. Were you working in the house or outside?
Mr. ALTIDOR. In the garden there around the door.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you talk with Williams and with the gendarmes at that time?
Mr. ALTIDOR. It was not Williams who came and got him. It was someone else who came and got him and gave him to Williams and the gendarmes.
Mr. ANGELL. Who was it came and took the boy and gave him to Williams?
Mr. ALTIDOR. I don't know. They called them champetres.
Senator ODDIE. Were they Haitians?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.
Mr. ANGELL. Who came and took the second boy away?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Williams and four gendarmes.
Senator ODDIE. What was the date of this when they took the second boy?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Monday, the 1st of June.
Senator ODDIE. What year?
Mr. ALTIDOR. 1917.
Senator ODDIE. That is the boy who was killed?
Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.
Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever talk about this to the priest at Malassade?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. When?

Mr. ALTIDOR. About the same time.

Mr. ANGELL. Was this the father at Maissade?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Now, he said that his second boy, the one that was killed, was taken out in an auto and killed. Whereabouts was he killed?

Mr. ALTIDOR. There were no automobiles then.

Senator ODDIE. Well, how did they take him out?

Mr. ALTIDOR. They took him out on foot.

Senator ODDIE. How far did they take him on foot?

Mr. ALTIDOR. About 15 minutes, time on foot.

Senator ODDIE. About 15 minutes' time. Did you go along?

Mr. ALTIDOR. No; I couldn't go. They would have killed me also.

Senator ODDIE. How far away was the boy when they killed him from where you were?

Mr. ALTIDOR. About 300 paces; from here to the road on the other side of the house.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see them kill him?

Mr. ALTIDOR. I did not see it. After they killed him I went to see it.

Senator ODDIE. How long after did you go?

Mr. ALTIDOR. About 15 minutes afterwards.

Senator ODDIE. When did Williams tell you he would release him?

Mr. ALTIDOR. When I went to talk to him in the village, he told me he would release him.

Senator ODDIE. When was the last time that you saw your boy before he was killed?

Mr. ALTIDOR. I saw him the last time in the village.

Senator ODDIE. How long after that was he killed?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Eight days.

Senator ODDIE. Eight days afterward. And where was he when he was killed?

Mr. ALTIDOR. Near the big road.

Senator ODDIE. And you didn't see him killed?

Mr. ALTIDOR. No.

Senator ODDIE. And so you don't know who killed him?

Mr. ALTIDOR. No.

STATEMENT OF MR. JOACHIN NORD.

Senator ODDIE. What is your name?

Mr. NORD. Joachin Nord.

Senator ODDIE. Where do you live?

Mr. NORD. Savanne Grande, Commune of Maissade.

Senator ODDIE. What is your age?

Mr. NORD. I don't know.

Mr. ANGELL. Under what President were you born?

Mr. NORD. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. Tell your story, just what you saw yourself and what you know to be the fact.

Mr. NORD. My wife was killed at my house.

Mr. ANGELL. When?

Mr. NORD. In the month of September, about three years ago.

Mr. ANGELL. Who killed her?

Mr. NORD. Williams.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you there when she was killed; did you see her killed?

Mr. NORD. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it in the house or outside on the road?

Mr. NORD. In the courtyard.

Mr. ANGELL. What time of the day was this?

Mr. NORD. In the morning.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the sun up yet?

Mr. NORD. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it light or was it still dark?

Mr. NORD. It was just beginning to get light.

Mr. ANGELL. And what was your wife doing at that time?

Mr. NORD. She was making coffee for me to drink.

Mr. ANGELL. What were you doing?

Mr. NORD. I was sitting there waiting for the coffee.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Williams come alone or did he come with others with.

Mr. NORD. He had some people with him.

Mr. ANGELL. Were they whites or Haitians?

Mr. NORD. Gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Haitians?

Mr. NORD. Haitians.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Williams the only white man?

Mr. NORD. He was the only white man.

Mr. ANGELL. How did Williams kill your wife?

Mr. NORD. He shot her.

Mr. ANGELL. What did he say before he shot her?

Mr. NORD. I didn't stay to find out.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it Williams who shot her, or was it the gendarmes?

Mr. NORD. I couldn't stay to see whether it was him or the gendarmes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you and your wife in the house at the moment she was shot?

Mr. NORD. We were sitting out in the yard.

Mr. ANGELL. How near did you see Williams?

Mr. NORD. I was sitting there with a child in my arms, and I saw him 100 feet away, and he began to shoot at me. I ran and as the woman out of the kitchen she was shot.

Senator ODDIE. Who was it that shot at you?

Mr. NORD. I don't know.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever see Williams before the morning when you was shot?

Mr. NORD. Yes; I had seen him already.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. NORD. I had gone to get a card from him in the bureau.

Mr. ANGELL. At Maissade?

Mr. NORD. At Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you come back to the house?

Mr. NORD. In the day.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you find your wife's body there?

Mr. NORD. Yes; I found her there on the ground.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was she hit with the ball.

Mr. NORD. She got one in the right side and one in the breast.

Mr. ANGELL. Where is your wife buried?

Mr. NORD. There in the courtyard.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you live there in that same habitation now?

Mr. NORD. No; I have left there recently.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make a complaint about this?

Mr. NORD. No; I did not make a complaint.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever talk about this to the curé at Maissade?

Mr. NORD. No.

Senator ODDIE. How close did you get to Williams, to the man who shot your wife?

Mr. NORD. When I first saw Williams appear I knew that if he found a sion of people there he would kill them all, and if he found any children he would kill them, too. He had not yet arrived when he began to shoot. What else was I to do but run?

Senator ODDIE. How close were they to you when he began to shoot?

Mr. NORD. About a hundred feet.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know who did the shooting?

Mr. NORD. It was Williams himself who was the first to shoot.

Senator ODDIE. Did you see him when he shot?

Mr. NORD. Yes. If I had not seen him I would not have run.

Senator ODDIE. And you ran right away?

Mr. NORD. Yes; as soon as they began shooting I ran.

Senator ODDIE. How many shots were fired?

Mr. NORD. I can not tell you how many.

Senator ODDIE. How quickly were they fired?

Mr. NORD. He fired a volley.

Senator ODDIE. Right quickly?

Mr. NORD. He fired several volleys, like that [indicating].

Senator ODDIE. Where were you when the second shot was fired?

Mr. NORD. I had already gone away from there.
 Senator ODDIE. What kind of guns did they have?
 Mr. NORD. It was not an ordinary rifle. It was a machine gun.
 Mr. ANGELL. Did you see these guns in the hands of Williams and the others who were with him?
 Mr. NORD. I saw the gun in the hands of Williams himself.
 Senator ODDIE. Was he the only white man, the only American?
 Mr. NORD. He was the only one. The rest were gendarmes.
 Senator ODDIE. Did you see what became of your wife when you ran?
 Mr. NORD. No; I didn't have time to see.
 Senator ODDIE. So you did not see her shot?
 Mr. NORD. No; I did not see that, because I could not stay; I had to go away.
 Senator ODDIE. What became of the child?
 Mr. NORD. I ran away with it.
 Senator ODDIE. Did any of the other men have guns?
 Mr. NORD. I can not tell you. I saw that the gendarmes had guns.
 Senator ODDIE. And when did you see the body of your wife after that?
 Mr. NORD. Three days.
 Senator ODDIE. She was alive when you left, and when you came back, three days afterwards, she was dead in the house?
 Mr. NORD. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. How far away did you go?
 Mr. NORD. I ran a long ways off, because they would have been looking for me.
 Senator ODDIE. Why do you think that they would have shot you if they had found you?
 Mr. NORD. I don't know, because all those who were killed, I don't know why they were killed.
 Senator ODDIE. Were the cacos around at that time?
 Mr. NORD. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Were you expecting them?
 Mr. NORD. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Had they been there before?
 Mr. NORD. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Had there been any trouble between you and the gendarmes before?
 Mr. NORD. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Did you ever see this man Williams again?
 Mr. NORD. I saw him in the village of Maissade after.
 Senator ODDIE. How long after?
 Mr. NORD. I saw him after that on the road to Madame Joie.
 Senator ODDIE. How long after?
 Mr. NORD. I can not say how many days it was.
 Senator ODDIE. That was some time after you found the body of your wife?
 Mr. NORD. Oh, about two weeks perhaps.
 Senator ODDIE. You said that you went to the bureau to get a card from him Maissade. What card was that?
 Mr. NORD. It was a permit to remain at home and work.
 Senator ODDIE. You spoke of a division of the people. What did you mean that?
 The INTERPRETER. A division is, in their idea, an army division, and they use to mean a great many people.
 Senator ODDIE. It is all right to have that go in the record?
 Mr. ANGELL. Certainly.
 Senator ODDIE. And did you think that the gendarmes or marines were antagonistic to the people in your division?
 Mr. NORD. If they had liked the people around there they would not have led them as they did.
 Senator ODDIE. Were they having trouble with the cacos at that time?
 Mr. NORD. No.
 Senator ODDIE. I want to ask you again about that shot. Did you see the first shot fired yourself?
 Mr. NORD. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. Where did the first bullet hit? Could you tell?
 Mr. NORD. I ran; I don't know where it hit.
 Senator ODDIE. You saw the flash from the gun and saw the shot?
 Mr. NORD. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. I think that is all.

 Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What did Becker do when he came into the house?

Mr. BELLONI. He burned the house.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see Capt. Becker set fire to the house?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; with everything inside of it.

Mr. ANGELL. Who tied your father?

Mr. BELLONI. Capt. Becker.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he do it alone?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was your father dead before he was bound up by Capt. Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. He had not yet died when they tied him up.

Mr. ANGELL. Who tied him up?

Mr. BELLONI. Capt. Becker.

Mr. ANGELL. All alone?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Nobody else came into the house with Capt. Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. No; he was the only one I saw.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see Capt. Becker fire on your father?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was Becker when he fired on your father?

Mr. BELLONI. He took him out and tied him to a tree and then shot him.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you standing in the house when they took your father and tied him to a tree and shot him?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you run away?

Mr. BELLONI. It was after they had killed him I escaped.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they tie you up or do anything to you?

Mr. BELLONI. When they came in the house they didn't see me, and I had to get out, and it was when I was running that they fired at me.

Mr. ANGELL. What kind of a gun did Capt. Becker have?

Mr. BELLONI. In the house.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see her shot?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was she shot before your father was or afterwards?

Mr. BELLONI. It was after.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they kill your mother before you ran away?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Who killed your mother?

Mr. BELLONI. Capt. Becker.

Mr. ANGELL. Did your mother stay in the house all this time?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; my mother and I stayed in the house.

Mr. ANGELL. After Capt. Becker took your father out and tied him to a tree he come back into the house?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you and your mother in the same room in the house?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Whereabouts in the room were you?

Mr. BELLONI. I was sleeping on one side and she was sleeping on the other.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you at the moment that Becker came into the room and shot your mother?

Mr. BELLONI. I was very near them.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you in the same room?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Were you standing up or sitting down or lying down?

Mr. BELLONI. I was standing up.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Becker see you?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; he saw me, and I had time to run, and he shot at me.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Becker see you before he shot your mother or afterwards?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; he saw me before.

Mr. ANGELL. What did Becker do or say when he saw you?

Mr. BELLONI. He did not say anything to me.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he shoot at you then, or did he shoot at your mother?

Mr. BELLONI. He shot at my mother first.

Mr. ANGELL. What was the name of your father and mother?

Mr. BELLONI. Belloni Meda was my father's name. Feme Seraphine was my mother.

Mr. ANGELL. Are you absolutely sure it was Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. How could you make sure it was Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. Because the moon was clear. I could see him.

Mr. ANGELL. It was dark in the house, was it not?

Mr. BELLONI. No; it was not dark.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was Becker when you first saw him that night? Was he in the house or was he out in the courtyard?

Mr. BELLONI. Inside the house.

Mr. ANGELL. What kind of clothes did he have on?

Mr. BELLONI. The same kind of clothes that they are in the habit of wearing.

Mr. ANGELL. Whom do you mean by "they"?

Mr. BELLONI. The same kind of clothes that the marines wear.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he have a hat on?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What did Becker do when you first saw Becker in the house?

Mr. BELLONI. He set fire to the house.

Mr. ANGELL. What did he do then?

Mr. BELLONI. After that he left.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see Becker take your father out?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he set fire to the house before he took your father out or afterwards?

Mr. BELLONI. It was after he had taken my father out and shot him that he put the fire to the house.

Mr. ANGELL. Was the house on fire when you went away?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Was there anybody else in the house?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; there was another woman.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was she?

Mr. BELLONI. Charitable Tiouan.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was she?

Mr. BELLONI. A servant.

Mr. ANGELL. What happened to her?

Mr. BELLONI. She escaped by running.

Mr. ANGELL. Where is she now?

Mr. BELLONI. She is at her mother's house.

Mr. ANGELL. Where is that?

Mr. BELLONI. In Herbes Guinea.

Senator ODDIE. Where was your father when he was shot?

Mr. BELLONI. He was tied to a tree.

Senator ODDIE. How far did you go when you followed them after shooting?

Mr. BELLONI. I followed them to the village.

Senator ODDIE. How far did you run when you started?

Mr. BELLONI. I ran until I came to a ravine.

Senator ODDIE. How long did they stay around the house?

Mr. BELLONI. About 15 minutes.

Senator ODDIE. And you could see them when they left?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. How many other men were there with Capt. Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. I didn't see how many people there were. It was only him at I saw.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know whether anybody else was with him?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. He may have been alone.

Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. How do you know it was Capt. Becker?

Mr. BELLONI. I recognized him before. I had seen him in the village.

Senator ODDIE. What did your mother do when Capt. Becker took your mother out?

Mr. BELLONI. She stayed there and looked on at what they were doing.

Senator ODDIE. Did she say anything?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did your mother see Captain Becker shoot your father?

Mr. BELLONI. Yes; she saw that, and after he had killed my father he shot my mother too.

Senator ODDIE. Did she attempt to run?

Mr. BELLONI. No; she did not run.

Senator ODDIE. Could she have run away?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. She could not have run away.

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Why not?

Mr. BELLONI. She had not time to run.

Senator ODDIE. Did he set fire to the house before he shot your mother?

Mr. BELLONI. It was afterwards.

Senator ODDIE. When did you run; before or after he set fire?

Mr. BELLONI. After he had put the fire.

Senator ODDIE. Did your father struggle when Becker bound him?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did he say anything?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Why was this other woman who was in the house not called a witness here?

Mr. BELLONI. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. Was there trouble at that time with the Cacos?

Mr. BELLONI. No; no.

Senator ODDIE. Had they been there before?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did they come afterwards?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Was there any trouble between you and other persons and marines or gendarmes?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know why this shooting occurred?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Was anything taken away from the house at the time?

Mr. BELLONI. I did not see them.

Senator ODDIE. Was there bad feeling between the gendarmes and the marines and the other people in the neighborhood at that time?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did you ever make a complaint about this?

Mr. BELLONI. No.

Senator ODDIE. Was it known to other people there at the time?

Mr. BELLONI. I went to the office of a notary afterwards.

Senator ODDIE. How long afterwards?

Mr. BELLONI. About a week.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was this notary?
 Mr. BELLONI. I don't know his name.
 Mr. ANGELL. Is he still at Maissade?
 Mr. BELLONI. Yes.

STATEMENT OF MR. MERCELUS CHERISTIL.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name?
 Mr. CHERISTIL. Mercelus Cheristil.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where do you reside?
 Mr. CHERISTIL. The village of Maissade.
 Mr. ANGELL. What age are you?
 Mr. CHERISTIL. Forty-five years old.
 Senator ODDIE. Will you tell your story to the commission? Tell just what you saw yourself and what you know to be the fact.
 Mr. CHERISTIL. In the month of June, 1919, I had a mule outside of the village. I kept him there because there was no grass in the village, and I was sitting on my porch and I saw Capt. Becker pass with my mule. The next day I went to him and told him that the mule was mine. He said, "Yes," and other people had told him that also. He said he would give it back to me afterwards. After several days, seeing that he did not give it to me, I went to him and asked him for it again. He struck me with his fist in the jaw and knocked me down, and then asked me if I still wanted the mule. I told him no; I did not want the mule. Some time passed and I didn't see the mule any more. In the month of November I saw a white man and a Haitian passing with my mule in the village of Maissade, and I asked the Haitian where he had gotten the mule and he said at Liles.

Senator ODDIE. When was that?

Mr. CHERISTIL. I told him the mule was mine, and I went to the captain of the gendarmerie, who gave me a letter and I came to see the lieutenant at San Michel and he came out here with me. I met a white man named Miehl. This engineer named Miehl took us out to a tree and asked me to show him the mule. He told us to look over the mule and see if it had a brand, and from the time the mule was lost I had no report that the brand was illegible. But he had other marks. I had the mule drawing a cart, and the traces had obliterated the brand, but there were other marks. The back teeth of the lower jaw had been lost, and one of the back teeth of the upper jaw. The engineer said, "You see that this mule is not yours, since it has no brand." I told him, "Yes; that it had a brand." I showed him in front of the mouth where the teeth were broken. But he said that he would not give me the mule. I went to San Michel with the lieutenant and he gave me an answer in a letter for the captain at Hinche, saying that the engineer had refused to give me back my mule. Then after that, when the commission was coming, I went to a notary and made a deposition there in order that they would give me back my mule.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did you make the deposition?

Mr. CHERISTIL. Before the notary at Maissade, a notary named Charles Pierre. I have seen the mule just a moment ago. It is out there under a tree.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you make the deposition before this notary?

Mr. CHERISTIL. When the commission came, because they told me that anybody who had lost anything should go and make a deposition before a notary in order to bring it before the commission. It has been nine days since the lieutenant at San Michel came here with me.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you ever been paid for this mule?

Mr. CHERISTIL. Never.

STATEMENT OF MR. FREDERICK C. BAKER.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name?
 Mr. BAKER. Frederick C. Baker.
 Mr. ANGELL. What is your address?
 Mr. BAKER. Atalaye.
 Mr. ANGELL. What is your position?
 Mr. BAKER. I am general superintendent of the United West Indian Corporation, San Michel, Haiti.

Senator ODDIE. I will ask you, Mr. Baker, if you will tell what you know out the incident of the mule transaction just related by the last witness, eristil.

Mr. BAKER. In December, 1919, or in January, 1920, at the time Capt. Becker s relieved as detachment commander at Maissade, he passed San Michel route to Port Au Prince, and had three mules which he wanted to sell. e United West Indies Corporation, through me, purchased these mules from pt. Becker, who gave an adequate bill of sale to each and every one. The de in question had been acquired by Capt. Becker, according to the bill of e, he turned over to this company, at an auction sale by the magistrat of issade. The sale, according to the papers, had been conducted in accordance th law.

Senator ODDIE. Conducted by whom?

Mr. BAKER. By the magistrat. He had a communal bill of sale. The animal s taken as a stray animal, put in pound, and after being duly advertised by r, it was sold by public auction, and Capt. Becker bought it. That bill of e was turned over to this company for the animal. The animal is now in possession of the company, and has been continuously since Capt. Becker d it.

Senator ODDIE. Who was the magistrat at Maissade referred to?

Mr. BAKER. As I remember his name was Preval.

Senator ODDIE. Where is he now?

Mr. BAKER. To the best of my knowledge he is in prison at Cape Haitien.

Senator ODDIE. For what offense?

Mr. BAKER. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. Well, now, as I understand it, this magistrat who gave the of sale, said that the mule had been picked up.

Mr. BAKER. That is it. According to the communal law, all stray animals put in a pound, where they are kept for 10 days. If the owner does not come thin 10 days to claim them, they are sold at auction sale, and the magistrat es a bill of sale for them.

Mr. ANGELL. Did this bill of sale recite the fact that the owner was away l did not come to claim them?

Mr. BAKER. Usually they do. If it is a proper legal bill of sale.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you remember whether this particular bill of sale did recite se facts?

Mr. BAKER. I do not.

Mr. ANGELL. Or whether it was Capt. Becker that said that?

Mr. BAKER. It was Capt. Becker who turned over the bill of sale to me as a umunal bill of sale. I saw the stamp on it.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know when the bill of sale was dated?

Mr. BAKER. I do not. I had that year 1,000 bills of saie of animals.

Senator ODDIE. This was 1919?

Mr. BAKER. This was either 1919 or 1920. It was very shortly after I came e. I came here in November, 1919.

Senator ODDIE. This thing goes back to the validity of the bill of sale, it ms to me.

Mr. BAKER. The question there is whether or not the magistrat made a emature sale. Whether he actually kept him in the pound for 10 days.

Senator ODDIE. And if that magistrat was not an honest man he could have en an incorrect bill of sale?

Mr. BAKER. Yes; but Capt. Becker had the magistrat's bill of sale.

Senator ODDIE. Yes; Capt. Becker could be easily innocent, and yet an im- pper bill of sale could have been given him by the magistrat. And the gistrat is now in jail?

Mr. BAKER. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Do you know what he was put in jail for?

Capt. Wood. He was tried by provost court for having by various cruelties l misrule at Maissade caused the people of that territory to turn Cacos, to n the bandits. That, as I remember it, was more or less the terms of the usation against him.

Mr. BAKER. The 1st and 15th of every month there is an auction sale of stray imals that have been picked up. Animals that have been at large for 10 full rs can be sold at auction.

Capt. Wood. Publication of the capture of an animal is made twice during days by the town crier, and a notice and description of the animal is posted the doors of the town hall during that time.

Senator ODDIE. What was the value of this mule?

Mr. BAKER. I paid Capt. Becker, I believe, for that particular one $20. I think I paid him $80. for three mules. I really don't know which one of three it was, but he had communal receipts for all three of them.

Senator ODDIE. How long a time was it from the time when you lost your mule at your house and the time when you saw Capt. Becker pass the mule?

Mr. CHERISTIL. Two years.

Senator ODDIE. Now, you said that you saw an American and a Haitian : - ing with your mule in November. What year was that?

Mr. CHERISTIL. November of this year.

Senator ODDIE. It seems to me this is a case for the local courts to hear and I suggest to the witness that he take steps to bring this before the court, and I can assure him that if any United States authorities have anything of his illegally, justice will be done him, and if anyone has Mr. Baker or his company an injustice, or any official of the United States any service has done Mr. Baker an injustice, justice and reparation should be made to him, and it seems to me that the local courts should handle this matter. Tell the witness that this commission wants nothing but justice done. This is merely a suggestion any my part, and the evidence given in this case is in the record.

The INTERPRETER. I shall have to explain to him what Mr. Baker testified because he could not understand him.

Senator ODDIE. Yes; I wish you would do that.

(The interpreter then spoke to the witness in Creole.)

Senator ODDIE. If that mule was illegally taken away from him at the time away back in June, 1919, then he is not responsible for what happened afterwards. If it was taken from him illegally, he is entitled to the money. It seems to me the commission can not render a decision, but it can hear the evidence, and it is in the record, and what I have just said as a suggestion to his possible recourse in the local courts. I would not like to take the responsibility of saying that he must go to the local courts and that he is absolutely innocent, or the local officials are innocent in regard to the mule, in the first place. That would not be my province. But it seems to me it is a matter for the local courts, as between the magistrate and Capt. Becker as to how the mule was taken.

This will go in the record just like any of the other cases.

STATEMENT OF MR. ILIODOR ROMAIN BRIGADE, COMMUNE OF MAISSADE.

Senator ODDIE. Now, will you tell your story to the commission, giving the facts that you know to be true and the things that you have seen with your own eyes?

Mr. BRIGADE. Williams and Marcial and Fransique and two Haitians came to my mother's house and killed her.

Mr. ANGELL. When was this?

Mr. BRIGADE. The 12th of January, about three years ago.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you at the time?

Mr. BRIGADE. I was there in the house. He beat my mother about the head and then hung her up to a transverse.

Mr. ANGELL. Who beat your mother?

Mr. BRIGADE. Williams.

Mr. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Williams before?

Mr. BRIGADE. Yes; I had seen him in Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. How many times?

Mr. BRIGADE. I had seen him several times.

Mr. ANGELL. What time of day did this happen?

Mr. BRIGADE. At midday.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you when Williams came into the courtyard?

Mr. BRIGADE. I was behind the house.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you when you first saw Williams?

Mr. BRIGADE. He was coming from my garden, and I saw him in the courtyard as he entered I went behind the house.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you do then?

Mr. BRIGADE. When they had killed her I appeared, and they had to bury her, me and another.

Mr. ANGELL. How did they kill her?

Mr. BRIGADE. By beating her with a stick.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you while they were beating her with a stick?

Mr. BRIGADE. I was behind the house.

Mr. ANGELL. How do you know they beat her with a stick?

Mr. BRIGADE. I was behind the house and the house was not masoned. The house had thin walls, and I could see through. It was built of sticks and muddled.

Mr. ANGELL. How many men came into the house with Williams?

Mr. BRIGADE. Four people.

Mr. ANGELL. Were any of the others white, or were they all Haitians?

Mr. BRIGADE. Williams was the only white man.

Mr. ANGELL. Whom did you see beat your mother with sticks?

Mr. BRIGADE. Williams.

Mr. ANGELL. Did anyone else beat her?

Mr. BRIGADE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you hear Williams say anything to you or to your mother?

Mr. BRIGADE. He asked Marcial if Marcial was not going to kill anybody, and Marcial said, "No."

Mr. ANGELL. Did Williams say anything to you or to your mother?

Mr. BRIGADE. No.

Mr. ANGELL. Why did Williams beat your mother and kill her?

Mr. BRIGADE. I don't know; but he came expressly to beat her.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you do all this time?

Mr. BRIGADE. I was doing nothing. I was standing looking on.

Mr. ANGELL. Did they see you?

Mr. BRIGADE. No; he did not see me until after he had killed my mother.

Mr. ANGELL. What did he do then?

Mr. BRIGADE. He said to me to go and bury her. He could not go away and leave her thus unburied.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you bury her then?

Mr. BRIGADE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. BRIGADE. There in the courtyard.

Mr. ANGELL. You still live in that same habitation?

Mr. BRIGADE. No; I left there and went to live near Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was the house where your mother lived and where she killed?

Mr. BRIGADE. In L'Ermite, in the Commune of Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. How long did it take you to go on foot from L'Ermite, your habitation, to Maissade?

Mr. BRIGADE. About half a day.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever make a complaint about this?

Mr. BRIGADE. No. I didn't make a complaint, because there were other children older than I was, and I, as the youngest, could not make a complaint.

Mr. ANGELL. Who else was in the region there in Cayes at the time Williams was there and beat your mother?

Mr. BRIGADE. This woman was there [indicating a witness], my aunt.

Mr. ANGELL. What is your aunt's name?

Mr. BRIGADE. Madame Philoscarr Joseph.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was this other woman, your aunt, at the time that Williams came and beat your mother?

Mr. BRIGADE. She was standing outside the house while Williams was beating your mother inside.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see her?

Mr. BRIGADE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What did she do?

Mr. BRIGADE. They told her to sit down there, and she sat there.

Mr. ANGELL. In the house or outside in the courtyard?

Mr. BRIGADE. Outside in the courtyard.

Senator ODDIE. We will take a recess now for an hour for lunch.

Whereupon the committee took a recess until 1.30 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met at 1.30 p. m., pursuant to recess.
Present: Senator Oddie and Mr. Angell.

STATEMENT OF MR. ILIODOR ROMAIN BRIGADE—Resumed

Senator ODDIE. You said that they hung your mother up. How did that witness, Madame Philoscar Joseph, corrected him, saying that it was her chin, to which the witness assented.)

Senator ODDIE. Were the Cacos making trouble at that time?

Mr. BRIGADE. No.

Senator ODDIE. Had they been there before then?

Mr. BRIGADE. The Cacos had not yet come there when my mother died.

Senator ODDIE. Did they come shortly afterwards?

Mr. BRIGADE. It was some days before we heard the Cacos.

Senator ODDIE. Were the people around there expecting the Cacos?

Mr. BRIGADE. No.

STATEMENT OF CHOUCOUNE PIERRE GLAUDE, SAVANNE GRASSE

Mr. ANGELL. What is your name?

Mr. GLAUDE. Choucouné Pierre Glaude.

Mr. ANGELL. Where do you live?

Mr. GLAUDE. Savanne Grande, Commune of Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. How old are you?

Mr. GLAUDE. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. Now, will you tell the commission what you actually and what you actually have seen in regard to the case?

Mr. GLAUDE. I had one child, and one Friday about the time they were coming up I saw Capt. Olean with a band of gendarmes passing. I went to the mountains and came back about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, came to the river where I had a small house; we had just had a wake for a mine who had died.

Mr. ANGELL. How long ago was this?

Mr. GLAUDE. It was in the month of April, about two years ago. They back and took two men and went away with them, and they killed them.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were these men who were taken away?

Mr. GLAUDE. One was called Absolu and the other Ticaptain. They took them and threw them on the ground, and after two days people came around there buried them in a garden.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see these men killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you when these men were killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. I was at my house.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were the men when they were killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. They took them to a small stream called Fondgras.

Mr. ANGELL. How far was this stream of Fondgras from the house where you were?

Mr. GLAUDE. As far as from here to the ravine over there.

The INTERPRETER. About 250 yards.

Mr. ANGELL. And you were in your house when these men were killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. How could you see the men being killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. I was in the house, and I heard they killed these two men and we all run away.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see with your own eyes these men being killed?

Mr. GLAUDE. When they took them out we followed along and we heard them shoot, and two men came back and said they had killed them.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were the men that killed these two?

Mr. GLAUDE. It was the gendarmes whom they made kill them, but they told them to do they did.

Mr. ANGELL. How many gendarmes were there?

Mr. GLAUDE. There were a great many.

Mr. ANGELL. How many whites were there?

Mr. GLAUDE. Two white men.

Mr. ANGELL. Who were they?

Mr. GLAUDE. One of them I don't know, but the one I know was called Olean.

Mr. ANGELL. Did Olean come to the habitation when you were there?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes. They had just one habitation up above. They burned a house up in the mountains, and they came down and burned the habitation of my cousin.

- r. ANGELL. Did you see Olean come to your habitation?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Olean before this day?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes. He had been to Madame Joie before.
- r. ANGELL. How many times did you see Olean before this day?
- r. GLAUDE. Several times.
- r. ANGELL. Did you see him afterwards?
- r. GLAUDE. No; I never saw him again.
- r. ANGELL. Did Olean talk to you at the habitation that day?
- r. GLAUDE. No.
- r. ANGELL. Did he say anything to these two men who were taken away?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. What did he say?
- r. GLAUDE. They had a basket containing some peas, and he asked them if it was. They told him it was peas, and he told them to take it with them. They put it on their heads and took it along with them.
- r. ANGELL. Did you see the bodies of Absolu and Ticaptain?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. Where were the bodies when you saw them?
- r. GLAUDE. They put them in the garden.
- r. ANGELL. Who put them in the garden?
- r. GLAUDE. The gendarmes.
- r. ANGELL. What garden did they put them in?
- r. GLAUDE. In the garden of one of the inhabitants.
- r. ANGELL. Do you know where these bodies are buried?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. Where?
- r. GLAUDE. In the same garden where they found them.
- r. ANGELL. Was Olean with the gendarmes when they brought the bodies and buried them?
- r. GLAUDE. I don't know. I can not tell you anything that I didn't see, but they who brought them back.
- r. ANGELL. Did the bodies have gunshot wounds in them?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. Where were these wounds?
- r. GLAUDE. All over their bodies and in their legs.
- r. ANGELL. Did you see the bodies before they were buried?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ANGELL. That same day?
- r. GLAUDE. Oh, yes.
- r. ANGELL. Did anybody else see the gendarmes come and take these two away?
- r. GLAUDE. There were a great many witnesses.
- r. ANGELL. Tell us the names of some of those people who saw this.
- r. GLAUDE. There was Madame Celiqui, whose surname I don't know.
- r. ANGELL. Are there any other witnesses here to-day?
- r. GLAUDE. No. There was Joseph, who is a brother of Ticaptain. I am the one here to-day who saw that.
- r. ANGELL. Where is Joseph?
- r. GLAUDE. He lives at Madame Joie's.
- r. ODDIE. Did you say that you were in your house when these men were taken away?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ODDIE. So you didn't actually see them killed yourself?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes; I saw them with my own eyes.
- r. ODDIE. You saw them killed yourself?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes; I saw them with my own eyes killed.
- r. ODDIE. Could you see it from the house?
- r. GLAUDE. When they took them away I left the house and went to a little distance and it was from there I saw them kill them.
- r. ODDIE. And you said that the two men returned and told you that they had killed these men?
- r. GLAUDE. Yes.
- r. ODDIE. Who were those two men?
- r. GLAUDE. Those two men who were with the gendarmes.
- r. ODDIE. Who did the killing? Which man did the killing?
- r. GLAUDE. It was the gendarmes.

Senator ODDIE. The Haitians or the American?

Mr. GLAUDE. It was not the Haitians.

Senator ODDIE. How could you tell?

Mr. GLAUDE. They had yellow clothes on.

Senator ODDIE. Well, didn't the Haitian gendarmes have yellow on, too?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes. It was a white gendarme.

Senator ODDIE. How would you tell?

Mr. GLAUDE. There were no Haitians there at all. There were not among them. They were all white men—every one of them.

Senator ODDIE. How could you tell which one did the shooting?

Mr. GLAUDE. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. And who were the two men who told you that they shot these men?

Mr. GLAUDE. They were two men who were passing. I don't know who they were.

Senator ODDIE. They were not gendarmes?

Mr. GLAUDE. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did they tell you how they shot these men?

Mr. GLAUDE. When they got down to the water they made them fall basket down, and then they killed them.

Senator ODDIE. These men told you that?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Were these men standing up or sitting down when they shot them?

Mr. GLAUDE. They were standing up.

Senator ODDIE. Which ones were standing up?

Mr. GLAUDE. They were all standing up.

Senator ODDIE. Which way were the men who were shot facing?

Mr. GLAUDE. They were facing the guns.

Senator ODDIE. Did they have their hands up or down?

Mr. GLAUDE. They had their hands down.

Senator ODDIE. How close were they to the men who did the shooting?

Mr. GLAUDE. They were like they were sitting here, and they put their hands at a distance about where those boxes are [indicating] and fired.

Senator ODDIE. Were the Cacos making trouble around there at that time?

Mr. GLAUDE. I don't know.

Senator ODDIE. Had they been there before?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes; there were Cacos which had passed by there.

Senator ODDIE. Recently?

Mr. GLAUDE. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Had any of the Cacos been in your house?

Mr. GLAUDE. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did you know any of them?

Mr. GLAUDE. No.

Senator ODDIE. Did these two men who were taken out and killed belong to the Cacos?

Mr. GLAUDE. No; not at all; never.

STATEMENT OF MISS MERCILIA RAPHAEL.

Senator ODDIE. What is your name?

Miss RAPHAEL. Mercilia Raphael.

Senator ODDIE. Where do you live?

Miss RAPHAEL. Section Paloit, Commune of Maissade.

Senator ODDIE. Will you tell your story, giving us the facts that you know and the things that you saw yourself?

Miss RAPHAEL. I had some money tied inside my dress, and Williams told me what I had there. I told him that it was a bit of money of an uncle. He told me to take it out and give it to him. I took it out and gave it to him.

Mr. ANGELL. When did this happen?

Miss RAPHAEL. The 2d of June, about two years ago.

Mr. ANGELL. And where?

Miss RAPHAEL. It was about a quarter of a mile from Maissade.

Mr. ANGELL. On the road?

Miss RAPHAEL. Yes; on the big road.

Mr. ANGELL. Road from where to where?

Miss RAPHAEL. It was on the San Michel-Maissade Road.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was with you?

Miss RAPHAEL. I was alone.

Mr. ANGELL. Who was with Williams?

Miss RAPHAEL. It was a gendarme. I don't know the gendarme.

Mr. ANGELL. What time of the day was this?

Miss RAPHAEL. Very early in the morning.

Mr. ANGELL. How did Williams know that you had anything in your dress?

Miss RAPHAEL. The money was inside my dress, and it had fallen into my underclothes near the waist, so that it made a sort of bundle; and he saw me if I had seen any Cacos around there, and I said I had not. He told me what was in my dress and told me to take it out and give it to him.

Mr. ANGELL. Did he give this money back to you?

Miss RAPHAEL. No. When I went and asked him for the money, he said that if he was to give me the money I was to live with him, and I did not want him any more.

Mr. ANGELL. How much money was there in there?

Miss RAPHAEL. Thirteen gourds and seventy-five cents.

Mr. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Williams before this day?

Miss RAPHAEL. I had seen him before in the market.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you go and ask Williams to give the money back to you?

Miss RAPHAEL. The same day when he came back from his trip I went for the money. Then the next day I returned and asked him to give me back the money he would have to stay with me. He did not ask him for the money again.

Mr. ANGELL. Where was he when you asked him for it the first day?
 Miss RAPHAEL. In the market in the village of Maissade.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where was Williams when you asked him for it the next day?
 Miss RAPHAEL. The second time was in the market. I had brought some gs to sell and I asked for the money. I told him he had taken the money ay from me and asked him for my money.
 Senator ODDIE. How much money did he take away from you?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Thirteen gourds and seventy-five cents.
 Senator ODDIE. Was it all in paper money?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Two gourds in paper and the rest in coin.
 Senator ODDIE. How large a bundle was it?
 [The witness indicated about as large as her hand.]
 Senator ODDIE. Did he see you put that money in your clothes?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. Where were you when you put that money in your clothes?
 Miss RAPHAEL. On the big road.
 Senator ODDIE. Where did you have that money before you put it in your thes?
 Miss RAPHAEL. It had a ribbon and I had just finished tying it up to put it ide my clothes, and just then he came up.
 Senator ODDIE. How long had you had that money in your hands?
 Miss RAPHAEL. There was another person who had a gourd for me, and I ok out my pocket to put this gourd in it and then tied it up and put it back my clothes.
 Senator ODDIE. Had that other person just given it to you?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. Where was that other person when Williams took this from 1?
 Miss RAPHAEL. He had just gone when Williams came up.
 Senator ODDIE. Who was that other person?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Vertile Ertile.
 Senator ODDIE. How far away was he when Williams came?
 Miss RAPHAEL. About 200 yards away he met me and gave me the money,
 I had time to go about 300 yards when I met Williams.
 Senator ODDIE. Who was with Williams when he took this?
 Miss RAPHAEL. A gendarme.
 Senator ODDIE. Did he see Williams take it?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. Do you know that gendarme?
 Miss RAPHAEL. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Would you know him if you should see him again?
 Miss RAPHAEL. Yes; if I saw him I should know him, but I never saw him in.
 Senator ODDIE. How old are you?
 Miss RAPHAEL. I have never regulated that. I was born under President rville.

STATEMENT OF MR. SALNAVE FLEURINA.

Senator ODDIE. What is your name?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Salnave Fleurina.
 Senator ODDIE. Where do you live?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Savanne Grande, Commune of Maissade.
 Mr. ANGELL. What age are you?
 Mr. FLEURINA. I don't know.
 Senator ODDIE. Now, if you will tell your story and tell just what you have n and know to be the case.
 Mr. FLEURINA. One morning before the sun was up they came and killed my ther and father and two brothers and one sister.
 Mr. ANGELL. When did this happen?
 Mr. FLEURINA. The 7th of June, last year.
 Mr. ANGELL. Was it last year or two years ago?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Last year.
 Mr. ANGELL. Where did this happen?
 Mr. FLEURINA. At Savanne Grande.
 Mr. ANGELL. Who killed these members of your family?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Capt. Becker.

Mr. ANGELL. Was Becker alone or did he have others with him?

Mr. FLEURINA. There was Capt. Becker and Solomon Nelson and some- . . . whom I do not know.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you when Becker came with those people?

Mr. FLEURINA. I was in the house. He came and called for the owner of the house and I went out. When I appeared he shot me.

Mr. ANGELL. Where did he shoot you?

Mr. FLEURINA. In the left shoulder.

Mr. ANGELL. Show us that.

(The witness displayed a scar on the left shoulder blade, on the upper- . . . tion, and another on top of the left shoulder, near the collar bone.)

Mr. ANGELL. What happened then?

Mr. FLEURINA. He killed the other five people in the house. There were . . . us, and I got away, and the others were killed, and he burned the house.

Mr. ANGELL. What did you do when he shot you? Did you fall down or run away?

Mr. FLEURINA. I ran.

Mr. ANGELL. Was it Capt. Becker who shot you?

Mr. FLEURINA. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. What kind of a gun did he have in his hands?

Mr. FLEURINA. A rifle.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see Capt. Becker kill your mother, and your father- . . . your two brothers and sisters, or had you run away?

Mr. FLEURINA. I had already run away.

Mr. ANGELL. How old were your brothers and one sister?

Mr. FLEURINA. I don't know, but they were younger than I.

Mr. ANGELL. When did you come back to the house?

Mr. FLEURINA. It is just recently that I have gone back.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you ever see the bodies of your mother and father?

Mr. FLEURINA. No; I did not see them.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know where they are buried?

Mr. FLEURINA. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Where?

Mr. FLEURINA. In the same courtyard.

Mr. ANGELL. Have you seen the graves there in that courtyard yourself?

Mr. FLEURINA. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. Did you see the house burning or had you run away when the house was burning?

Mr. FLEURINA. I had already run away.

Mr. ANGELL. Do you know who it was that killed your father, and . . . and two brothers, and sister?

Mr. FLEURINA. Yes; it was Capt. Becker.

Mr. ANGELL. If you had run away how do you know that it was Capt. B- . . . or somebody else that killed them?

Mr. FLEURINA. It was he alone who went into the house. I ran away, . . . climbed a small hill and looked on.

Mr. ANGELL. How far away from the house were you when you got on . . . this hill?

Mr. FLEURINA. About from here to that market.

The INTERPRETER. About a quarter of a mile away.

Mr. ANGELL. Who told you that your father, and mother, and two b- . . . and sister were dead?

Mr. FLEURINA. One of my brothers who went and buried them.

Mr. ANGELL. When did he tell you that?

Mr. FLEURINA. About 5 o'clock of the same afternoon.

Mr. ANGELL. Where were you at that time at 5 o'clock on that day?

Mr. FLEURINA. I was at the house of my brother.

Mr. ANGELL. And how far was that from the house of your mother?

Mr. FLEURINA. About half a mile away.

Senator ODDIE. Was it very dark when this happened?

Mr. FLEURINA. It was not very light.

Senator ODDIE. Where was Capt. Becker standing when he called for . . . owner of the house?

Mr. FLEURINA. In front of the door of the house.

Senator ODDIE. How close?

Mr. FLEURINA. Just a few feet away.

Senator ODDIE. Who was the first to go to the door?
 Mr. FLEURINA. It was I.
 Senator ODDIE. Did you go outside of the door?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Yes; I stepped out and he shot me.
 Senator ODDIE. Then you did not go back into the house?
 Mr. FLEURINA. No.
 Senator ODDIE. You ran then?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Yes.
 Senator ODDIE. And how soon after that did you hear the shot fired?
 Mr. FLEURINA. About a quarter of an hour.
 Senator ODDIE. How far away were you at that time?
 Mr. FLEURINA. About a quarter of a mile away.
 Senator ODDIE. So you didn't see anybody kill your mother and father and other and sister?
 Mr. FLEURINA. I saw it with my own eyes.
 Senator ODDIE. Was the killing done inside of the house?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Inside.
 Senator ODDIE. And you could see inside of the house from where you were?
 Mr. FLEURINA. From where I was standing I could look right into the door.
 Senator ODDIE. Was the man who did the shooting inside of the house?
 Mr. FLEURINA. He had one foot inside and one foot outside.
 Senator ODDIE. Where was he when he did the shooting?
 Mr. FLEURINA. After he had killed the people he came outside.
 Senator ODDIE. Where was he when he did the shooting?
 Mr. FLEURINA. He had one foot inside and one foot out.
 Mr. ANGELL. Had you ever seen Capt. Becker before this day?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Yes; I had seen him in Malssade.
 Mr. ANGELL. How often?
 Mr. FLEURINA. I had seen him twice.
 Mr. ANGELL. How did you know that this man who came was Capt. Becker?
 Mr. FLEURINA. When I saw him I recognized him.
 Mr. ANGELL. Have you ever seen Capt. Becker since that day?
 Mr. FLEURINA. Yes; I saw him at Malssade.
 Senator ODDIE. Had there been trouble with the Cacos around there?
 Mr. FLEURINA. No.
 Senator ODDIE. Did they come later?
 Mr. FLEURINA. No.
 Senator ODDIE. I would like to make this statement, so that you can repeat to them: I want to say that we have to go now, and if anything further is said by the people here they can make the statement through deposition and send it to our commission in Washington. And we want to say to the people that we are grieved to know that unfortunate things have been read, and while we are not in position here to judge the matters presented as we will investigate them as fully as we can and have them investigated. The disposition of the United States is not to do any harm to Haiti. Our country wants to help in every way it can. It wants to help bring prosperity to Haiti and peace and contentment, and we will investigate everything fully, and we want the people to believe that our country is just and fair, we wish them all success and happiness.
 Whereupon, at 3.20 p. m., the committee adjourned subject to the call of chair.)

STATEMENT OF MR. MARMONTEL JULES.

Taken by Senator Oddie, Mr. Angell being present, and the witness having sworn by Capt. Wood, immediately after the adjournment of the committee, at 3.30 p. m., on Tuesday, December 6, at Atalaye, Haiti.)
 Mr. JULES. My name is Marmontel Jules. I live at Malssade.
 Senator ODDIE. We would like to ask you about your opinion of the American occupation.
 Mr. JULES. Since the coming of the American occupation we have had full peace.
 Senator ODDIE. Do you think that if the Americans should leave now that there would be trouble?
 Mr. JULES. Immediately—two hours after.
 Senator ODDIE. And with the American occupation can you see that the people in this country have been able to cultivate their farms better than they before the Americans came in?

Mr. JULES. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Do not the people here want peace and the chance to clear their farms and raise live stock and educate their children?

Mr. JULES. Yes.

Senator ODDIE. Without revolution and disorder?

Mr. JULES. They do not want anything of that sort at all. I heard a great many of the declarations that were made to-day, and they were all false. No people died, it is true; but everyone of them died for some reason.

Senator ODDIE. Were many of these people at war with the authorities at that time?

Mr. JULES. They were fighting with the Americans.

Senator ODDIE. And were they in sympathy with the Cacos—the revolutionaries?

Mr. JULES. Yes. As to Savanna Grande, Savanna Grande is the first town in Maissade and is of very great extent; but those people have a party of their own. They never come into the villages of Maissade and were always against the Cacos.

Senator ODDIE. These people who testified to-day?

Mr. JULES. Every one of them were with the Cacos. I passed 15 miles during which time I was after them. And even right up to the present you can not as much as turn one chicken loose in Savanna Grande, for there are too many thieves. It is true there are no Cacos there at the present time, but every person in there is a thief.

Senator ODDIE. What percentage of the people, in your opinion, want the Americans to stay for the present?

Mr. JULES. The greater part of the people around Hinche and Maissade would like to see the occupation go, because they are partisans of the revolution. For those who desire only peace all of them would prefer the occupation to remain.

Senator ODDIE. What is your occupation?

Mr. JULES. Farmer.

Senator ODDIE. Have you held public office?

Mr. JULES. I was magistrat communal.

Senator ODDIE. How long ago?

Mr. JULES. I was magistrat communal after Marcial in 1919. From April, 1919, until the 29th of July, this year.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Friday, December 9, 1921.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Santo Domingo City.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m. in the palace of the military governor, Senator Medill McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick (chairman), Oddie, Pomerene, and Jones. Also present: Mr. Walter Bruce Howe, counsel for the committee, and Mr. Horace G. Knowles, representing the deposed Dominican Government and the Haiti-Santo Domingo Independence Society.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, let me say as I call the committee to order in formal session that it comes loyally and impartially to learn the truth, the better to make its report. It seeks and will receive not rumors or hearsay, but facts actually and personally known to witnesses. As regards the present situation it is ready to receive appropriate memorials and to hear the sober and considered opinion of men competent to speak thereon.

The hearing will proceed in English through the medium of an interpreter. Those present will not under any circumstances manifest approval or disapproval of any remarks by witnesses, counsel, or members of the committee.

Let me add that it is a great personal pleasure to return to this country, which I visited 10 years ago, and before that time, 15 years ago, when I rode on horseback from this city of Santo Domingo to Santiago.

The committee wishes formally to record its cordial appreciation of the very courteous hospitality voiced by the representatives of the Ayuntamiento and again by Don Juan Francisco Sanchez, the civil governor.

Will you, Mr. Interpreter, repeat from the stenographer's notes so much of my remarks as were in response to the expressions of hospitality of the municipal and provisional authorities?

(The interpreter did as requested, and the chairman then read the following statement in Spanish:)

"Permitaseme manifestar antes de declarar formalmente abierta la audición, que esta Comisión viene leal e imparcialmente a averiguar la verdad lo mejor para formular su informe. No busca ni recibirá rumores o decires y sí hechos real y personalmente conocidos por los testigos. Respecto a la actual situación, la comisión está lista a recibir memoriales apropiados y a oír la sobria y considerada opinión de los hombres competentes para hablar sobre el caso.

"La audiencia será en inglés por medio de un intérprete. Los que estén presentes no manifestarán en ninguna circunstancia aprobación o desaprobación sobre las observaciones que hagan testigos, el consejo o los miembros de la comisión.

"Permitaseme agregar que es un gran placer personal para mí volver a este país que visité 10 años atrás y antes 15 años atrás cuando pasé a caballo de esta capital a Santiago."

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is in order.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Chairman, I have before me sundry proclamations and public statements issued by Rear Admiral S. S. Robison, United States Navy, as the military governor of Santo Domingo. They are printed both in English and in Spanish, and I ask that they may be incorporated in the record of the hearings of the committee as a part hereof.

I also ask that the proclamation which was issued some time thereafter, on, to wit, December 23, 1920, also be incorporated in the record for the information of the committee and of the Senate of the United States and of those who may be interested therein.

The CHAIRMAN. It is so ordered.

(The document is accordingly printed herein, as follows:)

"PROCLAMATION.

"Whereas the friendly purposes of the United States in the employment pursuant to rights derived from the treaty of 1907, of its military forces within the Dominican Republic for the restoration of public order and the protection of life and property have been substantially achieved; and

"Whereas it has always been the desire and intention of the Government of the United States to withdraw its aid as soon as it could do so consistently with the said purposes and as soon as the improved conditions in Santo Domingo to which the United States has sought to contribute gave promise of permanence:

"Now, therefore, I, Thomas Snowden, rear admiral, United States Navy, military governor of the Dominican Republic, acting under the authority by direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Government of the United States believes the time has arrived when it may with a due sense of its responsibility to the people of the Dominican Republic inaugurate the simple processes of its rapid withdrawal from the responsibilities assumed in connection with Dominican affairs.

"Announcement is therefore made that a commission of representative Dominican citizens will be appointed, the personnel of which will shortly be announced, to which it is my purpose to attach a technical adviser. This commission will be intrusted with the formulation of amendments to the constitution and a general revision of the laws of the Republic, including the drafting of a new election law. Such amendments to the constitution and laws, or such revision of existing laws, as may be recommended by the commission, upon approval by the military government in occupation, will be submitted to a constitutional convention and to the National Congress of the Dominican Republic, respectively.

"THOMAS SNOWDEN,

"Rear Admiral, United States Navy.

"Military Governor of Santo Domingo.

"GOVERNMENT PALACE,

"Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, December 23, 1920."

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Knowles, the committee is at your disposition.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, on my arrival at the capital late last evening I was informed that the leading political men of the city and country have been in session in a conference at Puerto Plata for the last week, a session the duration of which was fixed a long time ago. I have also learned that it is the desire of those officially participating in that conference that they may be in the city here for the sessions of this committee. They had expected to terminate the conference two or three days ago, but for reasons they could not anticipate the session was continued until yesterday, when they were adjourned. In view of the importance of the presence of these gentlemen here in the city at this time I would suggest that the committee entertain the proposition that the presentation of the case of the Dominican Republic may be postponed until tomorrow morning, assuring the committee that such courtesy on its part will be exceedingly appreciated by those whom it will greatly favor.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other persons who have memorials to present? Do you know of any, Mr. Knowles?

Mr. KNOWLES. Not yet. They are going to be submitted to the conference that will be held perhaps this evening, and will be presented in the order in which they wish to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. You expect that a conference will be held here in the city at which will be present some or all of those who were at the conference at Puerto Plata?

Mr. KNOWLES. Exactly.

The INTERPRETER. Mr. Hoepelman wants to say something.

STATEMENT OF ANTONIO HOEPELMAN, SANTO DOMINGO CITY.

The CHAIRMAN. Does he appear as the representative of any association or in a purely individual capacity?

The INTERPRETER. He is editor of a local newspaper.

The CHAIRMAN. Is he the proprietor of it?

The INTERPRETER. He is an editorial writer.

Mr. KNOWLES. If I may be permitted, this gentleman has come in since we had our conference this morning. He represents a newspaper here and expected to be one of those who would testify in regard to certain facts that I explained to you. I think, now that he understands there will be a postponement until to-morrow, it will not be necessary for him to give any time to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. He has offered himself. That is for him to decide.

The INTERPRETER. He simply wishes to make a request to the honorable commission that anything the press may publish on this subject may receive the attention of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you say to him by way of reply that this morning, before the commission met. I took steps to have everything which bears on this hearing translated for the commission daily?

The INTERPRETER. That is all.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Knowles and gentlemen, the committee has just considered the request made by Mr. Knowles, and we have concluded to grant the request, realizing that these gentlemen had some distance to come. We regret that we shall not be able to proceed this afternoon with the hearing, but under the circumstances we feel that time will be gained by the presentation of the views of the witnesses in some consecutive order. At the same time, for the information of the committee, we ask that a list of these witnesses be prepared and submitted to the committee in the morning, or at an earlier date, giving their names, addresses, occupation, and stating in detail what their credentials are. In other words, we feel that it will be of assistance to the committee if we know why these gentlemen speak and for whom they speak. We feel that such information will aid the committee very materially.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me offer at this time, in order that the committee may have it for immediate consideration, a report on the finances of the Dominican Republic bearing the date of December 6, 1921, and addressed to the military governor.

(The report is here printed in full, as follows:)

DECEMBER 6, 1921.

MEMORANDUM FOR SENATE COMMITTEE.

There is available in the office of the military governor, for the use of the Senate committee, correspondence, in the form of reports of the military governor, which comprises a complete history of the occupation and the material accomplishments of the military government in the Dominican Republic. However, the memorandum on the Dominican Republic under the military government, prepared in the Navy Department, a copy of which is in the hands of the Senate committee, represents a concise summary of the reports of the military governor and are substantially correct statements for the period which they cover. There have been certain changes in the condition of Dominican finances and in the plans and estimates of public works, but these will be brought to the attention of the committee in the form of full reports on these subjects. It should be stated here that the depressing economic conditions and the resulting financial condition of the Dominican Government have grown steadily worse, and have reached the point of an almost entire collapse in business, and that the military Government now finds itself in the position of requiring immediate relief in the nature of long-term financing.

In addition to the above reports, special reports, to date, of each department of the military Government, including a report of all military operations conducted in the Dominican Republic, have been prepared and are available for the committee.

There are now serving with the military Government five officers and several American civilian officials, including the deputy receiver general of Dominican customs, whose periods of duty in Santo Domingo have covered more than two or three years. These persons possess a wide knowledge of Dominican affairs and the administration of the military Government, and their services are at the disposal of the Senate committee.

The military governor incloses for the information of the committee of a pamphlet containing all official documentary statements relative to proposed disoccupation of the Dominican Republic by the United States military forces.

S. S. ROBISON,
Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Military Governor of Santo Domingo

From: Chief of Naval Operations.

To: Secretary of the Navy.

Subject: Material accomplishments in Dominican Republic under military government.

1. As you are aware, the announced policy of the United States Government in connection with the Dominican Republic is to withdraw the United States military forces now in occupation as soon as a duly constituted government be brought into existence by the voluntary action of the Dominican people.

2. The history of the Dominican Republic, since its foundation in 1844, has been characterized by a succession of revolutions and civil quarrels. The progressive improvements in world communications and the continuous expansion of commercial activities have served to give the internal dissensions of the Dominican Republic, in common with political turbulence everywhere, pronounced international significance. It undoubtedly has been the pressure of events arising from this international phase of Dominican internal affairs that has caused this Government repeatedly to extend its good offices to the Dominican Government and people in endeavors to smooth out the complex affairs of the country, overwhelmed as it was with public debt and unmet international obligations. This repeated intercession of the United States in the affairs of the Dominican Republic culminated in the midst of the World War during that period when the customary international checks and balances were inoperative, and resulted in a proclamation of occupation, issued under authority of November 29, 1916, which provided for a state of military occupation of the Dominican Republic by forces of the United States and made the Republic "subject to military government and to the exercise of military law applicable to such occupation."

3. The avowed and proclaimed purpose of the military occupation was to give aid to the Dominican Republic in returning to such a condition of order as would insure the country's ability to observe the terms of the Treaty of 1907, providing for the defrayment of the public debt. It was upon the assumption that the Dominican governmental officials would function well under the United States military authorities that the aid was to be extended. The refusal of the leading Dominican officials so to function, however, and their definite abandonment of their desks obligated the military governor to appoint officers under his command to take charge of the several departments of the Dominican Government. This unexpected evolution in the manner of administering the governmental affairs of the Dominican people resulted in the responsibility for operating the Dominican machinery of government being placed upon the Navy Department of the United States along broad lines of policy dictated by the Department of State.

4. The question has been raised as to the rights of the United States Government on these premises. With this question the Navy Department is not directly concerned. The Navy Department stands in the relation of a steward in a matter in which the United States Government has seen fit to exercise the power of conquest. It is to give an account in summary of the department's stewardship and record of material accomplishments in the Dominican Republic under its administration that this paper is submitted, it being particularly noted that the initial steps in these accomplishments were taken when the entry of the United States into the World War was imminent and that progress continued on a background of international war and world readjustment.

FINANCES.

5. The military occupation of November, 1916, took place at a time when the six months' salaries of all Dominican government officials were unpaid. Government supply bills were long overdue. A floating indebtedness of approximately $15,000,000 had been incurred in direct contravention of the f 1907. The Dominican government account with its depository was over-ran in the amount of $14,234.63. There was, therefore, no cash balance of any description in the hands of the Dominican Government to carry on its current business. Financial records were found to be falsified in hundreds of uses and evidences of graft and bribery were everywhere apparent.

6. The aim of the military government has been to organize the financial administration of the country on an honest and efficient basis, to establish an equitable system of taxation, and so to revise the tariff as not to discourage the importation of such commodities as are essential to the country's development. In keeping with this aim, the military government has eliminated taxes which are unfairly upon the poor and acted as a drag on business, and has placed in operation and successfully administered a property tax, representing the first attempt at direct taxation in the Dominican Republic. It has also revised the tariff downward, after considering the recommendations of a tariff commission. Under the new tariff, transportation media, agricultural machinery and tools, industrial machinery, building material, and, in general, articles necessary for the development of the Republic are placed on the free list. Rates of duty are greatly reduced on articles of necessity where the reductions would tend to lower the cost of living. The expected result followed and importations increased, resulting in record customs collections.

7. Achievement in financial administration is measured not in words, but in results. The income of the Dominican Republic in 1910 and in 1916, under Dominican administration, was $4,005,501.38 and $4,441,415.27, respectively. In 1920, under the military government, the income of the Dominican Republic was $10,494,386.35. The $20,000,000 customs administration loan made in 1908 will be paid off in 1925, or 33 years before it is due. The $4,000,000 bond issue of 1918 will be paid off about 1923, or 15 years before it is due. The $2,500,000 short-term bond issue of the present year will be paid when due in 1925.

8. The criticism offered from time to time on the fact that it has been found to the interest of advancing the well-being of the Dominican people to borrow money and thus increase the bonded indebtedness of the Dominican Republic the face of the actual and well-known increase in the prosperity of the country under military government is based on a wholly faulty knowledge of facts. The various loan agreements are so drawn as not permit the Government to slow up the redemption of its bonds and so time their redemption as to extend the loan over the entire period it would normally run were the country's scale of prosperity the same as at the time the loan was contracted. If such a process were possible, the increased amounts of the customs revenues, instead of going toward the preretirement of bond issues, could be made to redound to the immediate advantage of the country in improved public works, improved educational and agricultural facilities, and improved material development generally.

9. It is appropriate to cite that, during the present fiscal year, beginning January 1, 1921, the Dominican Republic, in common with other West Indian governments, has suffered from the decided slump in the cacao, coffee, and sugar markets. This general set-back in the West Indies is only temporary in character, and is due to trade conditions over which the military government has no control. There is a distinct phase of this general financial set-back, however, that is undoubtedly within the control of the United States Government, inasmuch as it is peculiar to the Dominican Republic. It consists in the absence of a definite and stated policy in regard to the future of the country, the lack of which precludes that element of confidence so necessary to national prosperity.

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS.

10. The floating indebtedness of the Republic, which became a responsibility of the military government at its very inception, presented a difficult problem, which was met by turning over all claims for adjudication to a duly appointed Dominican claims commission of five members, two of whom were citizens of the United States, two of whom were Dominicans, and one a Porto Rican. This commission sat for about three years, considered 9,036 claims, aggregating $6,960,513.48, and made awards in final adjudication of all claims in the amount of $4,292,343.52. The work of this commission was rendered very difficult on account of the inadequate and involved treasury records, which were found to have been frequently falsified.

PUBLIC WORKS.

11. Roads.—Previous to 1916 there were only about 65 kilometers of roads in the entire Dominican Republic. The various cities and towns connected mostly by trails or occasionally by crude wagon roads, which rains became impassable to traffic of all kinds. Since November, 1916, have been completed more than 150 kilometers of new macadam roads, 10 kilometers of second-class roads, 300 kilometers of third-class roads, 7 steel bridges, 8 large concrete bridges, and many wooden bridges. The building program aimed at connecting by suitable highways all important of the Republic, while at the same time opening up and facilitating the element of large areas of rich agricultural and mineral land. It has unfortunately been necessary to curtail to some extent the original highway program. The military government on account of what has appeared to be a prospect of drawal within eight months of last June, but provision was made to complete the important transisland highway of 290 kilometers connecting Santo Domingo, the capital city, on the south coast with the important north coast of La Vega, Santiago, and Monte Cristi. This road will shorten travel between Santo Domingo and New York by four days, the time at present consumed in the steamer trip around the eastern end of the island. Provision also been made for the completion of the Santo Domingo-San Pedro de Macoris Road, of 70 kilometers, connecting the two most important south coast cities.

12. Harbor and coastal improvements.—The Dominican Republic before had so many unfinished projects in the way of public works as to have forth the following statement from one observer: "The land is filled with completed projects that were never intended to reach completion. The of the people * * * were not applied to the purpose for which they were imposed." Since November, 1916, the lighthouse service has been improved, new burners have been installed everywhere. A lighthouse tender has been chartered and placed in service. At Santo Domingo City 450 feet of concrete wall and 10,000 square meters of concrete paving have been constructed. A story customhouse 100 by 115 feet has been built and the harbor dredged to a depth of 17 feet, involving the removal of two sunken ships in addition to 70,000 cubic meters of material. Channel ranges have been placed on foundations. A new dredge has been purchased and placed in service. Dredging and wharf-extension work is going forward at San Pedro de Macoris. Extensive repairs to customhouses, wharves, and piers in all important ports have been undertaken or completed.

13. Miscellaneous public works improvements.—Numerous Government buildings in all parts of the Republic have been repaired and made serviceable. Sewerage systems have had sanitary improvements installed. A radio station, provided with a 150-foot steel tower, has been placed in operation at Santo Domingo. A modern leprosarium and a new penitentiary have been practically completed. Engineering aid has been extended to the various Provinces of the Republic. Schools and agricultural stations, treated of more in detail further on, have been constructed or established at various places throughout the Republic. Of the two railway lines open to public service, one, the Dominican Republic Railway, is the property of the Government. Conditions and service on this railroad have been improved, the central track system for grade crossings has been eliminated, and locomotives of the Shay type are being used for service on heavy grades. The net earnings on this road increased from $49,750.63 in 1916-17 to $217,039.74 in 1919-20.

14. Public works program.—It early became apparent to the military government, in order to insure the largest measure of benefit from the occupation for public works, there must be formulated a comprehensive program of items most immediately and pressingly necessary for the improvement of the general welfare of the country. Accordingly a program of public works was drawn up, which may be indicated in outline, with estimates, as follows:

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

1. Santo Domingo, La Vega, Moca, Monte Cristi Road.....	$400,000
2. Santo Domingo, Los Llanes, Hato Mayor, Seibo, Higüey, Macoris Road.....	100,000
3. Santo Domingo, Comendador Road and bridge.....	50,000
4. Monte Cristi, Dajabon Road and bridge.....	50,000

1. Santiago, Puerto Plata Road.....	$300,000
2. San Francisco de Macoris, Moca, La Vega Road.....	400,000
3. La Romana, Seibo Road.....	300,000
4. Higüey, Boca Chavon Road.....	6,000
5. Railways in the Republic.....	2,000,000

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND PORT IMPROVEMENTS.

0. Puerto Plata Harbor dredging.....	$25,000
1. Santo Domingo wharf extension and harbor dredging.....	152,500
2. San Pedro de Macoris dredging and wharf extension.....	675,000
3. Marine railway and machine shop, Santo Domingo city.....	100,000
4. Fire protection, Santo Domingo water front.....	18,000
5. Customhouse, San Pedro de Macoris.....	100,000
6. Wharf at La Romana and customhouse.....	45,000
7. Wharf extension and customs shed at Barahona.....	35,000
8. Custom warehouses at Santo Domingo city.....	198,000
9. Water-front property at Santo Domingo city.....	110,000
0. Customs shed at Sanchez.....	20,000
1. Supply storehouse on wharf for Contaduría and public works.....	85,000
2. Public-works building.....	60,000
3. Schools in different parts of the Republic.....	1,238,197
4. Correctional School, Santo Domingo.....	200,000
5. Correctional School, Santiago.....	210,000
6. Penitentiary.....	200,000
7. National Insane Asylum.....	243,000
8. Leprosarium.....	127,000
9. Topographical survey.....	500,000
0. Lighthouse tender.....	85,000
1. Telephone system, long-distance lines.....	200,000
2. Guardia Hospital, Santo Domingo.....	41,000
3. Guardia Barracks, San Francisco de Macoris.....	10,000
4. Guardia Barracks, Santiago.....	12,000
5. Guardia Barracks, Barahona.....	6,000
6. Guardia Barracks, San Pedro de Macoris.....	46,000

An analysis of this will indicate that the items of this program are mainly revenue producers or money savers. During the second Pan American financial conference in January, 1920, a resolution was passed in the conference and adopted by the conference committee of the Dominican Republic, composed of bankers, economists, and business men of large affairs, heartily endorsing the public works program of the Dominican Government and approving the proposed loan for the completion of the program, then well under way, as "amply justified by the projects and by the condition of the revenues." Informal assurances indicated that there would be no difficulty in obtaining the necessary loan and it was decided to proceed vigorously with the program until the reserve fund was entirely obligated, with a view to placing the loan at that time. Simultaneously with the attempt to secure the sanction of the Department of State for the public-works loan in December, 1920, came the wholly unexpected announcement of a change in policy in regard to the Dominican Republic. The West Indian commercial depression, not up to that time very keenly felt in the Dominican Republic, was given impetus, due to the immediate outbreak of political agitation and the prevailing uncertainty flowing upon the reception of the news of a change in United States attitude toward the military government.

The next result of a six months' delay in the loan and its curtailment from 0,000,000 to $2,500,000 has been to cause the entire abandonment of such items of the public-works program as were not begun and, by causing a total cessation of work on many items for several months and the breaking up of working organizations, has added materially to the cost of such as are now being pressed to completion; in addition, the delay and curtailment in the program has gravely affected the local economic situation.

POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.

15. The military government found the mail, telegraph, and telephone service of the Republic practically paralyzed, on account of the disturbed condition of the country. The post office and telegraph telephone system has been unified and placed under civil-service regulations. Twice as much business has been handled as formerly. Time for delivery of mail across the island has been reduced to 4 days from about 10 to 14 days. A 24-hour service has been established at all telephone stations. A trunk telephone line is being established from Santo Domingo city to the north coast, and the telephone system in Santo Domingo city is practically remodeled. Wood poles are being replaced by reinforced concrete poles. In short, posts and telegraphs, including telegraph systems, have been placed on a working basis and improvements made in all divisions of them.

EDUCATION.

16. The military government found public education in the Dominican Republic very ineffective. There was such confusion of thought in regard to the education that practically no school law was recognized. There were no rural schools. The usual salaries of teachers in primary schools averaged $9 a month for about eight or nine months a year. There were not more than 18,000 pupils in all schools. The statistics of the period before 1916 are unreliable, but such as can be gathered show that the average attendance of pupils was not over 40 per cent. Commercial instruction was offered in some schools, but never given. Real vocational schools did not exist. There was no record of expenditures for public education, and some of the municipal councils never made a budget. No record existed of what schools were located in the Provinces nor of the teachers employed in them. One of the initial acts of the military government was to appoint a committee of prominent Dominicans to report upon educational conditions and to submit recommendations for improvement. This committee or commission, after about a year's labor, prepared and recommended seven laws for establishing a proper educational system for the country. Six of these laws were promulgated, with very few modifications, and now constitute the school code of the Republic. A tremendous improvement in public instruction has resulted. From a nominal attendance of about 18,000 the actual attendance has increased to over 100,000.

The increase in school attendance is not alone due to compulsory attendance. It is a consequence also of the more efficient teaching methods, improved buildings, and better social conditions resulting from the occupation. The average attendance has risen from about 40 per cent to more than 85 per cent. There are still upward of 100,000 children of school age who have still not been accomplished, and extension of school facilities will therefore continue to be necessary. Although the majority of schools are still in rented buildings, an extensive program of construction of schoolhouses is being carried on. In addition, many rural districts have been provided with temporary schoolhouses by the parents' associations who have already contributed some 150 such buildings. More than $200,000 worth of school furniture has been distributed to the schools, and this distribution is continuing. The largest primary school in the country before the reform had less than 100 pupils. There are now scarcely a single school that has less than 100 pupils and many have 300 or more. Several primary schools in Santo Domingo City have more than 500 pupils each. Teachers' salaries have been materially increased, and now range from $55 to as high as $150 per month, the scale before the occupation being from $8 to $60 per month. The last statistics show that there are 1,200 primary schools, 7 secondary and normal schools, 6 completely developed industrial schools for girls, 2 schools of fine art, 2 correctional schools, and 1 central university. In addition, there are 647 rural schools and about 100 additional ones projected. Most of the rural schools have school gardens attached and agricultural instruction is stressed. The central university is now being used as a training institution for the professions. It is the aim of the military government to lay the foundation of a self-supporting democracy, believing that such a democracy can be maintained only by an intelligent public opinion. In turn can be developed only by extensive interchange of information and exchange of views. In keeping with this aim it has been the primary object of the educational system to concentrate for the present on the reduction of illiteracy, which is now found in more than 90 per cent of the adult population. When illiteracy is reduced to a nominal percentage in the Dominican Republic, democracy in that Republic will have a chance of success. It is laid on the fact that the military government has endeavored to give the Dominicans their own kind of education in the Spanish language, in accordance with a system devised by Dominicans of high attainments, such as have arrived at being secured by the Dominicans themselves. In this ber of pupils, much greater than by any novel method, can be given the fundamentals of an education by methods to which they are accustomed. No pupil has ever been made to force the English language on the Dominicans.

AGRICULTURE.

Under Dominican administration nothing was done along the line of agricultural education. In June, 1917, the first agricultural instructor was employed, and now 35 instructors throughout the country are conducting farmers' meetings, demonstration plots, and farmers' associations. They personally visit farms and give advice and instruction on the best methods of preparation of the soil for planting, cultivating, and harvesting crops. The introduction of modern agricultural implements has been fostered by the Government's purchasing a supply of such instruments and selling them to farmers at cost, giving demonstrations of their use meanwhile. Specialists have been employed in the cultivation of cacao and tobacco. A central agricultural experimental station of 150 acres has been established near Santo Domingo City, two substations of 30 acres, one at Monte Cristi on the north coast and one at Constanza, 1,200 kilometers above sea level. Pure-bred poultry, horses, cattle, and hogs have been imported, and orchards of American fruit trees appear to be doing well. Mention has been made of the school gardens and of cultural instruction in the rural schools. In addition, demonstration plots are being worked on various farms, with a view to indicating the best agricultural methods. A forestry law and laws debarring from importation certain plants subject to serious plant diseases have been promulgated. A monthly Government publication, the Agricultural Review, containing information of agricultural value, has been established and has a free circulation of 3,000. The use of the military government is to better the condition of the Dominicans, both those of great possessions and those with only small plots of land.

METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE.

The military government established and has extended a meteorological service. A main station at Santo Domingo City and two principal substations at Romana and Puerto Plata are provided with suitable apparatus and calculate the necessary data, while 60 local stations throughout the Republic observe local weather conditions, including rain distribution. Hurricane and flood warnings are sent out, and marine disasters have been much reduced in frequency. The meteorological information is also of inestimable value in connection with agricultural enterprises.

LAND AND TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEY.

In common with many Spanish settled countries, the lands of Santo Domingo originally pertained entirely to the Spanish Crown. The Kings of Spain from time to time made grants of land to various persons, these grants being only roughly delineated. Records were badly drawn and loosely kept. The country was ruled variously by Spain, France, and Haiti. The loss and destruction of such records as existed and could be considered as reasonably accurate provided opportunities for wholesale fraud. Titles became clouded and tenure insecure. Attempts of the Dominican Government to remedy the situation were half-hearted and led to small results. The military government has proceeded vigorously in cleaning up the debris of the old order by erecting a new system of land registration under which previous conditions are to be possible. A law has been issued providing adequate machinery to create all titles in the Republic under the "Torrens system," by means of which the validity of title is guaranteed. Adjudication and registration have been made compulsory. It has been the plan that a cadastral survey by Dominicans and a topographical survey under engineers loaned by the United States Geological Survey; extensive progress has been made with both these surveys, but a modification of plan in respect to these surveys was made necessary upon the announcement last June that the military government would withdraw at an early date. The settlement of the land question is particularly important to the new government may be in power in the Dominican Republic, inasmuch as it will determine the extent of the public lands and clear the way suitable homestead law by which the development of small land holdings be fostered.

JUSTICE.

20. Dominican jurisprudence is based on a very old form of the Napoleonic. Court stenographers are not employed and only the main points of evidence are recorded, longhand being used. The legal code needs revision, in its present form, it is a translation from the French, dating from the first half of the last century. The military government found the members of the ministerio publico, lawyers, notaries, and public officials exercising their functions without any effective responsibility. Various punitive orders have provided an effective discipline, with attendant penal violation. During the occupation there has been no case of corrupt judge nor has any venal act upon the part of a judge been reported. The ramshackle and insanitary prisons of preoccupation times have been repaired or rebuilt and new ones have been constructed. A modern penitentiary has been constructed, providing for a total of 500 prisoners. Two commercial schools for young boys have been established, where normal training is given. Much has been done to ameliorate the hard lot of prisoners in keeping with modern ideas of prison administration. Penal offenses have decreased principally to the disarmament of individuals.

MISCELLANEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE FEATURES.

21. In view of the great mineral wealth of the country, the military government early took steps to prevent exploitation of mineral deposits and to work on in good faith. A new mining law covering mining concessions has been established and a number of concessions have been granted.

A road law and regulations for motor-driven vehicles has been put into operation.

A law for the conservation and distribution of water in arid and semi-arid regions is in operation.

At the time of the occupation only civil marriages were recognized by law. The judges civiles had a monopoly of the business and fees were reasonably high. In consequence many persons lived openly as husband and wife without ever having gone through a legal ceremony. The military government broke the monopoly of the judges civiles, legitimized church as well as civil marriages, and established provisions which have brought the matter down to as low as $1. The result has been the joining of many parents in wedlock, thus legitimatizing the children.

A law requiring fathers and mothers to shelter, clothe, support, and educate their children has corrected the astounding neglect of children, common during the occupation, and has saved many from vagabondage, banditry, and prostitution.

Numerous other laws of a corrective liberalizing and constructive character have been enacted, including a civil-service law, a pension law, a law permitting the practice law, a law on asylums and for the protection of persons in institutions, and others have been promulgated and are in operation.

DOMINICAN NATIONAL POLICE FORCE.

22. The Dominican national police force, until recently known as "Guardia Nacional Dominicana" and formerly as the "Guardia Republicana," from being an instrument of oppression or revolution under Dominican rule has become an increasingly satisfactory organization of disciplined troops charged with the preservation of law and order and the suppression of the long-established practice of banditry. The force is officered partly by foreigners and partly by Dominicans. The medical officers are of the United States. It has been found necessary during the current year, due to decreased strength, to reduce the strength of the force to—officers (line), 64; officers (staff), 13; enlisted men, 493. The planned force considered adequate for the maintenance of normal order is 1,000 men, comprising two mounted companies, 200 men, six cars, six airplanes, and the necessary trucks. Continuous training of the force goes on, with a view to preparing it for the expansion and the new recruits necessary to bring the force to adequate strength.

aims of the military government has been to bring this force of national ice to such a high state of efficiency and esprit de corps that Dominicans good families will more and more be glad to be identified with it.

SANITATION AND PUBLIC HEALTH.

3. Before the establishment of military government in November, 1916, there was an almost complete absence of sanitary and public health activity. Attention was paid to the sanitary law existing, and only a slight attention to the medical practice law, which was itself inadequate. The practice of the medical profession was in a chaotic state. Cities and towns were dirty; elementary sanitation was neglected; the few hospitals were inadequate and neglected, disease control was not really attempted. Soon after the establishment of the military government a naval medical officer was appointed chief sanitary officer. His functions were confined to supervising the administration of the existing sanitary and medical practice laws, but all real authority remained in the Dominican bodies provided by these laws. There was improvement in sanitary conditions, due to a better administration of existing laws, but progress was slow and necessarily not fully satisfactory. The latter part of 1919 a national department of state for sanitation and beneficence was established, the old sanitary and medical practice laws were superseded, and the entire direction of public health measures was placed under a secretary of state for sanitation and beneficence coordinate with other department secretaries. The whole country is divided into sanitary districts under the charge of district sanitary officers. A national public health council is set up upon all sanitary regulations. All municipal sanitary budgets are excluded under the immediate direction of the district sanitary officer having jurisdiction. A hospitalization program has been drawn up, but its development is retarded through lack of funds. A series of small dispensaries is being established throughout the country for the treatment of the poor. Doctors and nurses testify to the decrease of disease, especially that of an infectious nature. Infant mortality rates have been lowered. Adequate national sanitary organization now exists for the administration of sanitary and public health, including municipal sanitation, hospitalization, quarantine, the practice of the medical professions, the sale of drugs, national and municipal charity work so far as the public health is concerned, the compilation of vital statistics, the control of disease.

GENERAL.

The administration of the Dominican Republic has been in the hands of the United States Navy for about five years. The question of whether or not administration shall continue is not, as has been already stated, a matter of concern to the Navy Department. If the military forces now administering the Dominican Republic are withdrawn, they can readily and will be used elsewhere in keeping with governmental policy. If, however, the military forces are to remain for a time, it becomes highly important that certain steps be taken in respect to policy to insure to the Navy the possibility of performing its function in the Dominican Republic in a creditable manner. The proclamation of 14 June, 1921, provides for a possible withdrawal of our military forces in eight months of the time the proclamation was issued. It is practicable for the military government to withdraw in that time, but it can not withdraw without the people, through their leaders, refuse to operate the machinery for setting up a suitably constituted governmental organization for taking over the administrative functions now being exercised by the military government. Such a proposal has been submitted. The immediate situation in the Dominican Republic therefore presents itself as one of suspended action. Enterprise of all kinds is paralyzed and the recovery of the country from its period of economic depression is hopelessly retarded. No enduring plan of governmental policy to the Dominican people can be formulated, only the routine day-to-day functioning being practicable. Commercial activity is hampered and business development arrested by the prevailing uncertainty. The United States, in due faith, has offered to withdraw its military forces from the Dominican Republic and turn over all administrative functions to a duly constituted Dominican Government. The offer is unacceptable to the Dominican people at the present time. Therefore, while holding open the offer to withdraw in favor of a native Dominican Government, it is necessary for the immediate welfare of the country that a strong policy be enunciated, giving assurances of continuing status of peace, good order, and the ability of individuals, Dominicans primarily and others also, to proceed unhampered in carrying on their own activities with reasonable prospect of freedom from governmental interference. It is an obvious corollary that such assurance can only flow from a Government inspired by belief that the tenure of the existing government is secure within known and definite limits. A Government whose fall is continuously imminent can not inspire such confidence.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will adjourn until 9 sharp to-morrow morning when it will expect the attendance of at least the first of these witnesses. I may add as we close that we are very glad to show this courtesy to the witnesses and to meet the convenience of the gentlemen who are arriving from Santiago de Plata.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until 9 a. m., December 10, 1922.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Santo Domingo City.

The committee met at 9 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment, Senator McCormick presiding.

Present: Senators McCormick, Oddie, Pomerene, and Jones.

Also present: Mr. Howe and Mr. Knowles.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, I have presented a list of the witnesses who will be called, in the order that their names are on the list. And by way of giving some outline of how the testimony of the witnesses will be given and the witnesses called, I will say that of the two parts of the investigation, the first part is directed to the occupation, and the second part to the administration of the Dominican Republic by the United States. We will take those up in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you make clear what you mean by those terms?

Mr. KNOWLES. The resolution of the United States Senate states that the investigation is to be or relates to the occupation and administration of the Dominican Republic by the United States. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. I only want to make sure whether you understand that the terms may be synchronous; that one does not, in point of time, necessarily follow the other.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought, by implication, your language denoted that perhaps you thought that occupation preceded administration.

Mr. KNOWLES. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that it did.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will think upon the English commentation of the terms you will realize that occupation and administration may very well be contemporaneous. You administer a territory which you are occupying. If you wish to distinguish between taking possession and the later occupancy and administration for any reason—

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; as Senator Pomerene has suggested, that is exactly what was going to say now.

The CHAIRMAN. If you will note the distinction, the language of the resolution did not say "taking possession."

Mr. KNOWLES. No. Then our testimony as we shall produce it will be directed first to the first landing of the troops, which was on May 4, and, secondly, as to the occupation, with the formal proclamation on November 29.

Senator POMERENE. May 4, 1916?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; May 4, 1916. As to the occupation and landing of troops on May 4, our testimony will be presented on the order of combating the specific reasons given in the declaration presented by the Navy Department to the commission that appears in the records of the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask, Mr. Knowles. You will file a written brief covering that?

Mr. KNOWLES. Oh, undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. You will not make an oral argument, I assume?

Mr. KNOWLES. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Because the tedium of the translation would be considerable and the time consumed considerable.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; I am only making this very brief statement now, Senator, let the committee know the order in which I shall present our witnesses.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. I mean the witness who comes forward to discuss the first landing will file a written brief; he won't make oral argument thereon before the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, we did not plan to present a written brief as to that; I was to present himself here to the committee and make his statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, I suggest now—I assume you are a practical man; that oral argument involves translation of sentence by sentence, whereas written argument, introduced as we required the Navy to introduce that, can be translated in advance or after submission.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, our first witness will be able to give his testimony in English to the committee.

The next stage of the testimony will be directed to the proclamation of occupation and the administration that followed that proclamation, and direct reasons given and assigned in the proclamation for the occupation.

Now, starting with that, or having that plan of presenting the testimony I will call as the first witness Dr. Francisco J. Peynada.

Senator POMERENE. Now, before you go to that, let the record show what you represent.

Mr. KNOWLES. I represent the political societies of the Dominican Republic; I represent the Junta Nacionalista—

The CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. "Political societies." Can you tell me names and by whom constituted?

Mr. KNOWLES. I can get that information and give it to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. You have not it yourself?

Mr. KNOWLES. I have not it right now.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give us beforehand the number of those societies?

Mr. KNOWLES. I can say this: All of these organizations, these many patriotic organizations, have now been embodied in the Junta Nacionalista.

The CHAIRMAN. Were they at the time of your retention?

Mr. KNOWLES. They were. They are organizations that have been formed and have their headquarters—that is, their provisional headquarters—in each of the 12 Provinces of the Republic. In addition to that, I represent and have formal credentials from, if the committee wishes me to present them, the deposed Dominican Government, the President De Jure of the Republic, Francisco Henriquez y Carvajal. I will present that document to the committee at its next session, because I left it with my papers at the hotel.

Senator POMERENE. Let me suggest for the information of the committee when you give a list of these various authorities whom you represent, that you give not only their names but their location; the president and secretary of these organizations—I assume they have such—and also that you make a statement as to the number of members in each of these societies, and also as to how they are financed.

The CHAIRMAN. And the sums collected, and from whom, and their aggregate amount.

STATEMENT OF DR. FRANCISCO J. PEYNADA, LAWYER, SANTO DOMINGO CITY.

Senator POMERENE. Doctor, I assume that you will understand that the hearings that we have had heretofore, all witnesses have been sworn; you will understand the reason for that.

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly; and I am ready to be.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of an interpreter we will dispense that formality this morning and I will ask Senator Pomerene to do that.

Dr. PEYNADA. I waive the notary.

Senator POMERENE. I will administer it, at the same time realizing that I do not have legal authority. I doubt our authority outside of our Government to administer these oaths.

(The witness was then sworn by Senator Pomerene.)

The CHAIRMAN. Will the witness give his name?

Mr. KNOWLES. Doctor, will you state your name, your occupation, and your residence?

Dr. PEYNADA. Dr. Francisco J. Peynada.

Mr. KNOWLES. A native of where?

Dr. PEYNADA. Puerto Plata. I am a Dominican; pure Dominican; proud of it.

fr. KNOWLES. Your profession?

fr. PEYNADA. Lawyer.

fr. KNOWLES. Will you state in the beginning, Doctor, whether you have connection with any political organizations in the Republic?

fr. PEYNADA. Not at all.

fr. KNOWLES. Have you ever been connected with any, directly, as a lawyer?

fr. PEYNADA. Never.

fr. KNOWLES. Will you please, in your own way, proceed with a statement the committee bearing upon the occupation and administration by the United States of the Dominican Republic?

fr. PEYNADA. Well, I must declare, first, that I do not believe that I am able to speak well in English.

Senator POMERENE. You are doing very well, Doctor.

fr. PEYNADA. So you will excuse me for any shortcomings. I do that in order to help.

Second, I want your excellencies now before me to have in mind that I have personal grievance against the members of the military government of Santo Domingo nor against any of the officers of the military government, because I have been treated with exceeding kindness by every one of them with whom I have come in contact.

fr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, pardon me just a moment. As the witness is speaking very slowly, the newspaper men say that they would like very much if you could have what he says translated, so that the papers can get it.

fr. CHAIRMAN. Would they be satisfied to have a translation from the notes at the end of the hearing? I only ask that, as I suggested at the beginning.

fr. KNOWLES. That will be all right.

fr. PEYNADA. Second, I beg you to keep in mind that I have no grievance against the military occupation, because it could deprive me of any political position, as I am ready at all times for one cent to give up my chance for public position. I do not want any position and I have never needed it. I am here only as a Dominican, proud of his nationality, and sorry for the present condition of the Dominican Republic. As a Dominican who has learned from the people of the United States I regret exceedingly that this occupation destroy the feeling toward the United States that every Dominican had in heart up to the moment of the occupation.

I am not a politician, and as I do not belong to any political party of the Dominican Republic, I have the confidence of many people belonging to all parties, and I am thus in position to affirm to you that every Dominican, notwithstanding his political affiliation or his relations with the military government, agrees on one point: That the Dominicans do not want the American occupation of their territory. And I believe I have authority to say that; and I am ready, if you will permit it, to present witnesses from all parts of the country to support that. We may disagree regarding methods, but not on that point.

Third, I affirm that there was no reason at all for the occupation. I know perfectly well that when the papers in the United States had published the news that there was a revolution in Santo Domingo the American people supposed it was such a revolution as they had in Mexico, where they destroyed railways, where bridges were blown up, and people—especially foreigners—were killed. But the revolutions in Santo Domingo never put in danger the life or the property of any foreigner. Here the sugar and other crops were always harvested, regardless of what party controlled the provinces in which the plantations were situated. I remember at one time the Province of Macoris was under the control of one revolutionary party and the Province of Santo Domingo was under the control of the Government, but the sugar cane was gathered and converted into sugar without the least interference. At the time that General Caperton came here nobody had been killed and no property was injured in what he called a state of revolution.

Fourth, Even if you want to believe that there was a reason, even slight, for the landing of the troops in April or May, 1916, because you believe that there was a revolution here at that time, you must admit that there was no reason for the proclamation of martial law on the 29th of November, 1916, because at that date the Republic was perfectly at peace. We had at that time a Constitutional Government. The President had been elected unanimously by all parties, and the Government of the United States was ready to accept it as the constitutional Government if only we would accept the conditions tried to impose on us.

Senator POMERENE. Give the date of that election, if you please.

Dr. PEYNADA. The election, I believe, was in August or July, 1916. I am here; but what I affirm is that if in April or May Admiral Caperton had said that he needed to land troops because there was danger, I affirm that at that time Admiral Knapp proclaimed the military occupation of Santo Domingo by the troops of the United States, which was in November, there was no pretext, because there was no revolution at all, and nobody could say there was in danger here. Property was in no danger, and there was an established constitutional Government, elected unanimously by the electoral college established by the constitution.

Senator POMERENE. When should that President have assumed the office? Mr. KNOWLES. July 26 was the election.

Dr. PEYNADA. At that time there was no revolution at all.

Senator POMERENE. And his inauguration on July 31?

Dr. PEYNADA. He was not here at that moment—

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask the witness in that connection: The President discharged the duties of his office?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. From the 1st of August until the 29th of November?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes. The point I want you to keep in mind is that it was a government acceptable by the United States as a constitutional government because it was according to our constitution; that there was no reason for maintaining martial law, because the United States were trading with us to recognize our Government if we accepted their terms. They said that if we did not accept them they would proclaim the military occupation and military law. So that proved that our contention was good; that there was no revolution at all and there was no reason for proclaiming martial law.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you remember the date when the treaty was proposed to you?

Dr. PEYNADA. No, sir; but it was presented to me by the American Minister, Hon. W. W. Russell, after the election of Dr. Henriquez as President, not secretary of foreign affairs, but as I was the only member of the Government who could speak English the matter of accompanying Secretary Baez in his conference with Mr. Russell and Admiral Pond was left to me.

The CHAIRMAN. You were in the President's cabinet?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes, indeed, without any salary at all, because I proposed without any salary. I want you to keep that in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. What office did you hold?

Dr. PEYNADA. Secretary of the treasury. I had the distinguished honor of being the only secretary of the treasury in the world without a treasury; that was a honor for me, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. You can not indicate about when that treaty was proposed to you?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; I remember it was proposed to the Government of the year before; I think in November, 1915. To me it was proposed in September or October of 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. Why was it proposed to the Government of the year before that time?

Mr. KNOWLES. Was there any disorder?

Dr. PEYNADA. Not at all. There was no disorder in the Republic at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. What office did he hold in November, 1915?

Dr. PEYNADA. The President of the Republic, Jimenez.

The CHAIRMAN. You said governor.

Dr. PEYNADA. No, no; the President of the Republic.

Senator POMERENE. You used the word "governor."

Dr. PEYNADA. The Government of Jimenez.

The CHAIRMAN. November, 1915?

Dr. PEYNADA. 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, at all events it was proposed to you before the 1st of August, when President Henriquez took office, and the 29th of November. The treaty was proposed to you in that interval?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes; in exchange for the recognition. The United States Government would recognize us if we were ready to accept that treaty. Hon. W. W. Russell and Admiral Pond were representing the United States.

Senator POMERENE. Let me see if I understand you, Doctor. Do I understand that the Dominican Government was ready to accept the treaty and would have accepted it provided the United States Government would recognize—

Dr. PEYNADA. No; it was proposed to us that if we would accept that treaty we would be recognized. And the last meeting was held by Dr. Henriquez y Larvajal and myself, with the Hon. W. W. Russell and Admiral Pond, I believe, but this I remember very well; Gen. Pendleton, who was chief of the army of occupation at that time, resided at Santiago and came here for that purpose, as I suppose. He was in the conference, and when I asked him or him, "You have no modification at all?" he said, "No"; it must be accepted as it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me interrupt to ask the stenographer to introduce the text of the proposed treaty in the record at this point.

(The treaty will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

Dr. PEYNADA. Those are the words of Gen. Pendleton. I can not say it was Admiral Russell or Admiral Pond. It was the only meeting he had with us.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the last conference?

Dr. PEYNADA. The last conference. He said to me, "You must accept, because otherwise we shall proclaim military law and appoint a military governor of Santo Domingo," and I said to him, "What does that mean, military law?" and he said, "Military law means that if you put your head or one finger in the way of the Government, the head or the finger will be cut off." I said, Gen. Pendleton, if you have no modification to that proposition, it is useless to go on with this meeting, because I declare in the name of President Henriquez in that of the Dominican Republic that we will not accept that proposition." That ended it. A few days afterwards Admiral Knapp came with the proclamation of military government.

Gentlemen, I believe that the Dominican people until that moment loved the people of the United States, and I hope the Dominican people still love the American people as I love them. All the depredations, the injuries to the lives of the Dominicans, all the bad actions of the troops, are secondary questions for me. The principal question is that there was no reason at all, no right at all, to land troops on Dominican territory and to impose on peaceful people like the Dominicans, who were not at war with the United States and who loved the United States, a military government for over five years. That is my principal grievance, and all the others are secondary. There were grievances, I don't deny, but the principal is that.

I have, as I told you, learned to love the people, the traditions and the history of the United States. In 36 trips that I have made to the States in 20 years and my study of their constitution, I have confirmed that sentiment, but more than this, that sentiment became a profound conviction when I learned that Secretary Root, in the Conference of Rio de Janeiro, speaking with the highest authority of the United States, said, "We, the United States, wish for no victories but those of peace; for no territory except our own; for no sovereignty except over ourselves. We neither claim nor desire any rights, privileges, or powers we do not freely concede to every American Republic." And I think everybody, was it right that after those words, the Government of the United States should jeopardize the confidence of the Latin-Americans by the actions taken in Santo Domingo.

Now, I am ready to answer any questions you want to ask me.

Mr. KNOWLES. In the direct testimony of the doctor, I would like to ask one or two questions. Doctor, were you in the city and in the country here continuously from the 1st day of July, 1916, up until the 29th of November of that year?

Dr. PEYNADA. In that year, I was in the United States. While I was in New York I was appointed Secretary of the Treasury, and I arrived here shortly after President Henriquez had taken office. I came here some day in August, when he was sworn in as President, I was not here, I was in New York. When he was sworn in?

Dr. KNOWLES. On July 31.

Dr. PEYNADA. I was not here. I came some day in August to this country. For one month I was fighting with him because I did not want to accept the position he offered me, until finally he prevailed on me to accept. But from the moment I accepted I was requested by him and by the Secretary of Foreign Relations to accept responsibility in all the meetings with Hon. W. W. Russell and Admiral Pond.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the witness speak of Admiral Kuntz?

Dr. PEYNADA. Admiral Pond.

The CHAIRMAN. But earlier. You never mentioned Kuntz? I misunderstood you.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you recall the date, Doctor, of your accepting the portfolio?

Dr. PEYNADA. I have no interest in recalling that, because I did not want to draw my salary. For me it was immaterial what day I accepted it.

Mr. KNOWLES. It was, in any case, in the month of August?

Dr. PEYNADA. I believe so. You know I came unprepared for this. I did not know that I would testify this morning, so I have no data at all.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, from the date of your arrival from the States in Santo Domingo City, until the 29th of November of that year, which was the date of the proclamation, was there any disorder of any kind whatever in the city of the country that you heard of?

Dr. PEYNADA. None at all. The first action of the United States was to take over our Government of all the treasury, and President Henriquez had not a cent and consequently had no paid soldiers, only volunteers. Notwithstanding this condition, there was not a case of banditry in the country. The banditry began after the occupation by the United States. I think the United States took money on the pretext that they had not yet recognized the Government. It was a new theory, of course.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you a question or two right there: In your direct examination you said, as I understood you, that under the conditions which existed at the time that Admiral Knapp took possession in, as I recall it—was it May?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; in November, 1916.

Senator POMERENE. Well, in November, 1916—that neither the person nor the property of any foreigner was in jeopardy?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

Senator POMERENE. Now, what am I to infer from that? Was the property or person of the Dominicans, or any portion of them, in jeopardy?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; not at all. Neither the property or life of foreign Dominicans. The revolutions we have had have never endangered the property of Dominicans.

Senator POMERENE. Will you not describe for us what the so-called revolutionary conditions were from May, 1916, up until November, 1916, when Admiral Knapp took control?

Dr. PEYNADA. What may be called—but which I do not call—a revolutionary place in April or May, when the secretary of war opposed some measure proposed by the President in deposing the chief of the fortress and the chief of the guardia, who were friends of the secretary of war. The constitutional President of Santo Domingo decided to depose those two people.

Senator POMERENE. That is, the secretary of war?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; the President decided that. To depose the chief of the fortress and the chief of the guardia, who were particular friends of the secretary of war.

Senator POMERENE. Oh, I see.

Dr. PEYNADA. Then the secretary of war assumed an attitude that was against the President, and some people went to help the President, and the secretary of war was with some troops in the capital. You may call that a revolutionary situation, not. When the Americans landed, Gen. Pendleton went to Santiago and obtained the surrender of the secretary of war, whose name was Desdery.

Senator POMERENE. Was there armed conflict between those opposing the secretary of war?

Dr. PEYNADA. I was not here during the time. They say there was some fighting. I was here at the beginning.

Senator POMERENE. What is your information about it now?

Dr. PEYNADA. That there was some skirmishing outside the city, but not in the city. Then President Jimenez decided to resign. I can not affirm that a skirmish occurred, because if I was here when the secretary of war assumed an attitude against the President I left the city some days after to go to the United States for a lawsuit, and came back only a few days before President Jimenez resigned. If there was some fighting it was while I was not here. I have heard that there was only one very sporting—no more than a sporting—action; but even that there was no danger at all for the property of anybody nor for the person of anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean that skirmishing did not endanger life?

Dr. PEYNADA. Not at all. When we have our sport we may kill each other—not many. The taking of the Government never took many lives, but only a few of the people who liked the sport. Outsiders never were in danger. During the worst revolution we had the outsiders were never in danger. We went every day to the clubs, played cards—the same as to-day—during the revolution. In Puerto Plata during a fighting I have been playing cards in the club, which is a wooden house.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask: Do the officers of the contending armies come to the clubs during the trouble?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; no. The outsiders go to the club, the same as they do at the present time.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, let me ask you another question in that connection, because I want to develop the situation as you see it.

Dr. PEYNADA. Now, wait a minute. Excuse me. I have not finished answering your first question.

Senator POMERENE. Certainly, sir.

Dr. PEYNADA. After the surrender of the secretary of war to Gen. Pendleton there was absolute peace in the country until in November, and that is the reason why I say that if you take as a pretext that Admiral Caperton thought it was necessary to land troops in April or May, there was not even that pretext for the action in November. Admiral Knapp had no reason at all to proclaim martial law, because there was no revolution at all.

Senator POMERENE. What number of people were involved in this revolution in April or May?

Dr. PEYNADA. The number of people?

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

Dr. PEYNADA. Well, the secretary of war had 200 men, and I don't know how many the President had. I don't know the number.

Senator POMERENE. Did he use the regular military forces that were in existence at that time or did he summon people from the rank and file of the public?

Dr. PEYNADA. Nobody went to help him. He didn't summon anybody. He was in the fortress with his people. I don't know how many people, perhaps 50. But he did not call any help from outside. He didn't require anybody.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me ask you another question, Doctor. As I call the fact, there was a treaty made in 1907 at the time when the United States Government provided for a loan.

Dr. PEYNADA. A reconversion. It was not a loan.

Senator POMERENE. Well, whatever it was. At that time there was a receiver of the customs, was there not?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. And are you able to state whether or not in the spring of 1916, April or May, the Dominican Government had met its financial obligations under that treaty?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes, indeed. Our principal obligation was to pay the external debt and $100,000 per month that we had to send to New York for the sinking fund, and the interest on our debts had been paid.

Senator POMERENE. Up to that time, as I understand that treaty—I don't have it before me—it recited that no internal debt should be incurred by the Dominican Government. Are you able to state whether any such debt had been incurred?

Dr. PEYNADA. There is a question there. The United States pretends that that article means any kind of debt. The Dominicans believe that we could not contract any public debt, but that if a debt resulted on account of anything, such a claim was not a debt contemplated by the treaty. But even if it was an internal debt contracted by the Dominican Government, and if the treaty of 1907 should refer to such kind of debt, there was not a reason for intervention, because the only thing the United States had to do was to say that such debt was not a debt, as the United States had not authorized it. The United States did not need to land troops to say that.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, I am not in my questions expressing any opinion of my own either one way or the other. I am here questioning you for the purpose of eliciting the truth, and I know you are going to give it to us if you understand it. What I want you to do is to give us the exact situation that existed. Now, my information is that this debt which was thus incurred without the consent of the United States Government aggregated in excess of 6,000,000, and that since that time and during the occupation by the American Government a commission was appointed, two of whom were Dominicans, two of whom were Americans, one of whom was a resident of Porto Rico—that in the adjudication of these claims that amount was reduced from in excess of $16,000,000 to something in excess of $4,200,000. Am I right about that?

Dr. PEYNADA. I think so.

Senator POMERENE. Substantially?

Dr. PEYNADA. More or less.

Senator POMERENE. There, of course, is a very considerable difference. The adjudication would indicate that only about 25 per cent of those claims—am I judging from the ordinary course of litigation—were bona fide, legal claims, and that the other 75 per cent were illegal. Am I right about that?

Dr. PEYNADA. I think so.

Senator POMERENE. I understand also—my information is not complete—is that many of these claims were what we in the States would call "padding" claims. That is, they were not genuine claims. And that many of them were claims held by, it may be, officers of the Dominican Government and perhaps some others who had contractual relations with the Dominican Government. Is that your understanding about it?

Dr. PEYNADA. I think so. Yes, indeed.

Senator POMERENE. Were these facts generally known to your people—that this large amount of indebtedness which was outstanding was for greater part spurious?

Dr. PEYNADA. I do not know that the people knew that there was such an amount. The people knew that there were people who claimed to be creditors.

Senator POMERENE. Well, now, Doctor, how do you explain the fact that these large amounts of claims were outstanding against the Government of the Republic here? Was it due to fraudulent action on the part of Government officials or on the part of citizens or sojourners here? What was the reason for it?

Dr. PEYNADA. I do not know; but members of the commission that acted it may inform you better than I. I do not know.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I am sure, Doctor, that if you had been the secretary of the treasury during all this time there would have been no such claims.

Dr. PEYNADA. I believe so, and I thank you for your opinion; but I cannot explain anything of that. But what I say is that without intervention by the United States could have helped us to reject those claims.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, I want you to aid the committee in asking another line of questions which I am about to ask, if I may. You have just said to the committee that it was your judgment that there was occasion for intervention here by Admiral Knapp. Will you give to this committee the reasons—I do not expect you to approve them, because you have already indicated that you felt that, in your judgment, there was no reason for it—what were the reasons advanced by those who were active here in the interest of the United States Government, for the intervention? Now, I realize the fact that you might answer that the proclamation sets them on fire—was there anything in addition to that—anything which might be of use to the committee? What reasons were given in your conferences with United States officials or others?

Dr. PEYNADA. No other reason but that the Dominican Republic had violated the treaty of 1907 by incurring debts that were not authorized by the United States Government. That was the reason given by them. Only that, of course, we believe that was a pretext; but I can not say that they had any other reason.

Senator POMERENE. Well, what in your judgment was the basis for the pretext, if we may call it that, to use your own words?

Dr. PEYNADA. It might have been the proximity of the war.

Senator POMERENE. You mean the World War, of course?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes. And the desire of the United States to control Mexico, Nicaragua and Samana Bay.

Senator POMERENE. Well, Doctor, I am only one Senator and I am only an American citizen, but the people of America and the United States Government, in my humble judgment, never in their lives have entertained any such policy for your Republic here except what is for the good of your people.

Dr. PEYNADA. Senator, I know perfectly well the generous attitude of the United States through all their history. I remember the great impression caused on me by a little case decided by the Secretary of State of the United States against an American who pretended that the Island of Alta Vela ged to him by virtue of a law, and the Secretary of State decided in favor of the Dominican Republic without the Dominican Republic presenting any sense at all. I remember also that when an American President, to the dismay of the patriotic party in control of the Dominican Republic, planned the annexation of our country to the United States, the Congress of that great nation opposed that plan. But times have changed, and as I have not the record of information that you have as Senator of the United States, I can be blamed if it seemed to me in 1916 that the minds and hearts of the American Government had changed. Now, it is a satisfaction to me to hear it you have to say.

Senator POMERENE. Well, we sometimes get wrong impressions.

Mr. PEYNADA. Certainly; I recognize that.

Senator POMERENE. And lest what I said a moment ago may be misunderstood I want to say for the record that I am perfectly clear that the occupying forces here have no desire other than what is for the good of the Dominican.

Mr. PEYNADA. Thank you for that.

Senator POMERENE. Now I want to ask you another question. It is looking to the future rather than to the past. What, in your judgment, for the good of the Dominican people, should be done by the United States Government?

Mr. PEYNADA. To give us our independence with the security of your friendship.

Senator POMERENE. You have got that.

Mr. PEYNADA. And that is all.

Senator POMERENE. There are some financial troubles down here and some social obligations, some of which have been incurred under the protection of the treaty of 1907. There are possibly some other obligations which it may be necessary for the Government of the Republic to incur. What have you to say with respect to these obligations, either present or contemplated?

Mr. PEYNADA. Senator, I am not a leader in my country.

Senator POMERENE. I beg to differ with you; I think you are.

Mr. PEYNADA. Thank you. My personal opinions are good for nothing, take into consideration the rest of the country; and, second, I came here prepared to answer as to the facts of the past. Necessarily, I am not prepared to answer for the future.

Senator POMERENE. I think you can give us a pretty intelligent idea on the subject, if you will permit us to have the benefit of your judgment.

Mr. PEYNADA. If you will give me the time.

Senator POMERENE. I was just about to suggest—and it has, I am sure, the concurrence of my colleague here on the committee—we would be very glad to have you formulate and present concretely what your views may be upon the subject as to what should be done. Go into the details. Just as you would be advising a client with regard to a very important business transaction. We may not accept your views, but we want the benefit of them.

Mr. PEYNADA. Well, Senator, I do not know the extent of the financial crisis. I do not know how the treasury is. I do not know the obligations incurred by the military occupation outside of our obligations derived from the treaty of 1907. I do not know anything regarding that. I do not know how I shall be able to give you a good opinion.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, let me suggest, I think about the best thing we have heard about your former President was the fact that he wanted you in his cabinet; and I think that you are very well informed, not only as to the conditions of your island but as to world-wide conditions, and your financial troubles here are not peculiar to the island.

Mr. PEYNADA. I know.

Senator POMERENE. We have it everywhere. Our people are suffering just as much as your people are suffering. I speak from an economical and industrial and an agricultural viewpoint. All of that must be borne in mind. And I am going to insist, with all the courtesy possible, that you shall give us the benefit of your views on that subject.

Mr. PEYNADA. I will try.

Mr. KNOWLES. Doctor in respect to the Henriquez government, I wish before you retire to ask you one or two questions. It was brought out in cross-examination that some time prior to the Henriquez government there had been disorders under the Jimenez government. I think you stated some time ago. When Dr. Henriquez was elected, on July 25, was he elected by the unanimous consent of all the parties of the Dominican Republic? And as any evidence was manifest, was he not the choice of all the Dominicans?

Dr. PEYNADA. I was in New York when he was elected, so the only I know is that he lived in Santiago de Cuba, and he could not have personal influence in any election at that moment in Santo Domingo. The parties of the Republic decided to elect him as a man of great moral power, as a great Dominican who had been 12 years outside the Republic and who was not mixed up in the actual differences of the country and he was elected, as I understand, unanimously by all parties.

Mr. KNOWLES. From the time that he took possession of office as chief of the country, as long as he was permitted to exercise his duty, was the country under a peaceful reign and a complete constitutional government?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes, indeed; and without money, but all the Dominicans in that position notified him that they would continue without salary, and the country during that period. All were working without salary, voluntarily.

Mr. KNOWLES. You say, Doctor, without money?

Dr. PEYNADA. Without money.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was the Dominican Government, constitutionally formed, entitled to any money?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly, because—

Mr. KNOWLES. From whom?

Dr. PEYNADA. From the receivership. Because our customhouse was only up to $100,000. The rest belonged to the Dominicans. And, we have internal rentes, not pledged, so besides the internal rentes that were collected by Dominican functionaries, the American receivership was in the act of delivering to the Dominican treasurer the amount produced by the customhouse in excess of $100,000 for the debt and 5 per cent for the cost of collection. And it was agreed that if the customhouse produced more than $3,000,000 a year, the excess should be applied to the debt.

Senator POMERENE. What proportion of the excess?

Dr. PEYNADA. I can not remember that.

Senator POMERENE. Was it 60 per cent?

Dr. PEYNADA. I don't know. I do not like to talk about what I do not know, but I know in excess of $3,000,000 something was to be taken by the receivership to be sent to the Guaranty Trust Co. But the Americans came to the Dominican Republic not only ordered the receiver not to deliver one cent to the Dominican Government, but went to the Dominican treasury and appointed an officer who would collect the money and not give one cent to the Dominican Government.

Mr. KNOWLES. Doctor, that provision that you state that the United States was to receive, or rather not to receive, but to retain from the collection of custom revenues, belonging to the Dominican Republic, after the receipt of the $100,000 and 5 per cent for the cost of collection, was it the treaty of 1907 that that money should be paid to the Dominican Government?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly. The treaty says that.

Mr. KNOWLES. And at that time the Dominican Government was a constitutional government?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLES. The country in perfect peace and quiet?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLES. And the treaty of 1907 that provided for the payment of moneys to the Dominican Government was not lived up to?

Dr. PEYNADA. Of course not.

Senator POMERENE. Doctor, before we get away from it, you have to outline the election of your president. I ask, for the benefit of the record, to outline what your method of election is, from the beginning to the end of the election.

Dr. PEYNADA. Well, there are different methods, according to the question. One of the methods was employed in the case of Dr. Heredia. The method is this: When a president resigns or dies or is deposed, the legislative assemblies are not called to make the election. Then both chambers of Congress have the power to elect a president who shall be constitutional, a provisional president until the country is called to elect the permanent president, which are designed to elect the President finally. Congress, when President Heredia resigned, was begged by Admiral Caperton not to elect at that time because there was trouble. But when all the troubles that Caperton mentioned there were over by the surrender of the men who resisted at San Juan, Palta and the surrender of the Secretary of War in Santiago, when the peace in the country, Congress elected Dr. Henriquez unanimously, because the Congress was the electoral college, according to the constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Congress fix the term of office of President Henriquez?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. For how long?

Dr. PEYNADA. I think it was six months. I don't remember.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that according to the constitution?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Doctor, for our information I was going to ask you to describe the election of Dr. Henriquez's predecessor, which I presume was held under the other provision requiring primary election.

Dr. PEYNADA. It is better to consult Mr. Bryan, because he gave, under his authority, the announcement to the United States that the people had elected President of the Dominican Republic very fairly.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. who?

Dr. PEYNADA. Secretary of State Bryan. He had an inspector here, who reported to him and put him in a position better than I am to know, because was not here at the time, to say to the world, and especially to the people of the United States, that the elections of the Dominican Republic had been legally and orderly effected.

The CHAIRMAN. That was an election of the primary assembly?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly. That elected Jiminez, who was the predecessor of Henriquez.

Senator POMERENE. Define the legal procedure, etc., in the election of your primary assemblies from beginning to the end so we shall have it in the record.

Mr. KNOWLES. Of the Congress?

Senator POMERENE. No; of the presidency.

Dr. PEYNADA. According to my idea the citizens elect the members of the electoral colleges of the Provinces, and those electoral colleges meet in the capital of each Province at a fixed date. Then the vote of each member is put in a box and sent to Congress. Each one of the 12 colleges sends to Congress the result of the election, and Congress proclaims who has the majority.

Senator JONES. How many members of the electoral college are there in each Province?

Dr. PEYNADA. About 600. I don't remember exactly.

Senator JONES. Is it in proportion to the population?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; because we had no census at that time, and the constitution says that until we have a census and we could ascertain the population of each commune must appoint so many. In the Province of Santo Domingo 28—the electoral college of the Province of Santo Domingo. Each commune must appoint so many. So it is the constitution that fixes the number. It is very easy. I may provide you with the constitution.

Senator JONES. And the members of the electoral college for each Province decide on the candidate for whom the vote of that Province is cast?

Dr. PEYNADA. I beg your pardon?

Senator JONES. And the members of the electoral college meet together and decide on the person for whom, when they vote, the vote of that Province is cast?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

Senator JONES. And the number of votes depends upon the provisions of your constitution?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Doctor, just one other question along that line. I have said to us that President Jiminez was elected, you thought, for six months.

Dr. PEYNADA. No; for six years. President Henriquez for six months. President Jiminez resigned.

Senator JONES. What was the cause of his resignation?

Dr. PEYNADA. I think it was the pain caused in his heart by the landing of troops. That is my opinion. But I think there are people here who know exactly well the reason, because I was not with him at the time. I was in the capital. He was outside of the capital, and I could not see him.

Senator POMERENE. Through whom did he present his resignation?

Dr. PEYNADA. I don't know. I have not seen it. He resigned before 2 p.m. I don't know. I have not seen his letter.

Senator JONES. Was that resignation accepted by any constitutional authority?

Dr. PEYNADA. I do not know. I can not answer that.

Mr. KNOWLES. We have very competent evidence on that point. Dr. Peynada, you were asked by the chairman for what term Dr. Henriquez was re-elected President. You replied you thought it was for the term of six months.

Dr. PEYNADA. I think so.

Mr. KNOWLES. And whatever term it was, it was according to the constitution?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will ask you if Dr. Henriquez was permitted to serve a constitutional term for which he was elected?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; because Admiral Knapp came on the 25th of November before the six months had elapsed.

Mr. KNOWLES. And he was prevented serving out the term for which he was elected under the constitution by the people of his country or by whom?

Dr. PEYNADA. By the Army of the United States.

Senator JONES. Mr. Knowles, would it interfere if I were to ask the question there in what way did the Army of the United States interfere with the election of a successor?

Dr. PEYNADA. With the election?

Senator JONES. Yes.

Dr. PEYNADA. With the election?

Senator JONES. Yes. You say he was not permitted to serve out his six months' term, I suppose that was an ad interim term, and the idea was to elect a permanent successor.

Dr. PEYNADA. The idea was to depose him in order that the Army of the United States might be the President and Congress of Santo Domingo.

Senator JONES. Well, I don't think you have got my thought. Why was the term limited to six months?

Dr. PEYNADA. Because Congress considered that it was only necessary to elect a President for six months in order to elect another President.

Senator JONES. And in what way did the Army of the United States interfere with the election of a successor to serve after the expiration of six months?

Dr. PEYNADA. By proclamation of Admiral Knapp, chief of the Army, came here, which said "The territory of the Dominican Republic is hereby occupied and declared under American control and under the government of the United States. All elections will be postponed indefinitely," and by proclamation of Admiral Knapp, and taking possession of this palace, which is the residence of the President of the Dominican Government, and that room, which was the room of the President of the Republic. Then the President of the Republic could not come here any more, to be governor.

Senator JONES. You are going to present that proclamation of Admiral Knapp?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Stenographer, although it has already appeared in the record, I present the proclamation at this juncture, in order that it may be read here for the convenience of the committee and others as they read the report, if it is agreeable to you, Doctor.

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

(The proclamation is as follows:)

"PROCLAMATION OF OCCUPATION.

"Whereas a treaty was concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Santo Domingo on February 8, 1907, Article III of which reads:

"Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of its public debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States. A law shall be necessary to modify the import duties, it being an indubitable condition for the modification of such duties that the Dominican Executive demonstrate, and that the President of the United States recognize, that, on the basis of exportations and importations to the like amount and the like character during two years preceding that in which it is desired to make such modification, the total net customs receipts would at such altered rates of duties have been for each of such two years in excess of the sum of $2,000,000 of United States gold'; and

Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has violated the said Article III on more than one occasion; and

Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has from time to time explained such violation by the necessity of incurring expense incident to the repression of revolution; and

Whereas the United States Government, with great forbearance and with a friendly desire to enable Santo Domingo to maintain domestic tranquillity and observe the terms of the aforesaid treaty, has urged upon the Government of Santo Domingo certain necessary measures which that Government has been unwilling or unable to adopt; and

Whereas in consequence domestic tranquillity has been disturbed and is not now established, nor is the future observance of the treaty by the Government of Santo Domingo assured; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is determined that the time has come to take measures to insure the observance of the provisions of the aforesaid treaty by the Republic of Santo Domingo and to maintain the domestic tranquillity in the said Republic of Santo Domingo necessary thereto:

'Now, therefore, I, H. S. Knapp, captain, United States Navy, commanding the cruiser force of the United States Atlantic Fleet and the armed forces of the United States stationed in various places within the territory of the Republic of Santo Domingo, acting under the authority and by direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Republic of Santo Domingo is hereby placed in a state of military occupation by the forces under my command, and is made subject to military government and to the exercise of military law applicable to such occupation.

'This military occupation is undertaken with no immediate or ulterior object of destroying the sovereignty of the Republic of Santo Domingo, but, on the contrary, is designed to give aid to that country in returning to a condition of normal order that will enable it to observe the terms of the treaty aforesaid and the obligations resting upon it as one of the family of nations.

'Dominican statutes, therefore, will continue in effect in so far as they do not conflict with the objects of the occupation or necessary regulations established thereunder, and their lawful administration will continue in the hands of such duly authorized Dominican officials as may be necessary, all under the oversight and control of the United States forces exercising military government.

'The ordinary administration of justice, both in civil and criminal matters, through the regularly constituted Dominican courts will not be interfered with by the military government herein established; but cases to which a member of the United States forces in occupation is a party, or in which are involved contempt or defiance of the authority of the military government, will be tried in the tribunals set up by the military government.

'All revenue accruing to the Dominican Government, including revenues heretofore accrued and unpaid, whether from custom duties under the terms of the treaty concluded on February 8, 1907, the receivership established by which customs in effect, or from internal revenue, shall be paid to the military government herein established which will, in trust for the Republic of Santo Domingo, disburse such revenue and will make all the proper legal disbursements therefrom necessary for the administration of the Dominican Government, and for the purposes of the occupation.

'I call upon the citizens of, and residents, and sojourners in Santo Domingo, to cooperate with the forces of the United States in occupation to the end that the purposes thereof may promptly be attained, and that the country may be restored to domestic order and tranquillity, and to the prosperity that can be attained only under such conditions.

"The forces of the United States in occupation will act in accordance with military law governing their conduct, with due respect for the personal property rights of citizens of and residents and sojourners in Santo Domingo upholding Dominican laws, in so far as they do not conflict with the provisions for which the occupation is undertaken.

"H. W. KNAPP.

"Captain, United States Navy

"Commander Cruiser Force, United States Atlantic Fleet

"U. S. S. 'OLYMPIA,' FLAGSHIP,

"SANTO DOMINGO CITY, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC,

"November 29, 1916."

Mr. KNOWLES. Referring to the question Senator Jones put to you as to the action of the American armed forces here in regard to the election of a successor of Dr. Henriquez, I think there was some confusion. When did that action take place, the interference of the armed forces? Was it before or after the expiration of the constitutional term for which Dr. Henriquez was elected?

Dr. PEYNADA. Before the expiration of the term that Admiral Knapp issued the proclamation, certainly.

Mr. KNOWLES. One other question, Doctor, I was about to ask you. In connection with what you said in your direct testimony as to the safety of American foreigners in this country. Can you tell the committee how many cases have been in which Americans particularly have been in danger of either being molested or injured, or their property in danger in any way whatever?

Dr. PEYNADA. Regarding property I don't know, because my belief is that the property in the Dominican Republic has been in danger by what we call revolution. Regarding life I assure you gentlemen that more foreigners have been killed in New York in one day, on any day of the year, than died in the revolution in Santo Domingo in 40 years. I remember one case in 1885 where an American called Platt was killed in a hotel, because the hotel was on the second floor of a house on the first floor of which lived an ex-President of the Republic and the actual President at the time sent the governor of the Province of San Pedro de Macoris officers to make him prisoner. The man was sitting in his house and told them, "General, please come with us to the city fortress." And he said, "I will go with you," and fired on them and ran away, climbing the stairs and blowing lights on the staircase, running to the floor above the office, and then followed him. The American was in his bed and heard the shots and went to his door to see what happened, and these officers believed that he was the man they were looking for and fired on him, and he was killed, and $33,000 for that.

Senator POMERENE. When was that?

Dr. PEYNADA. That was in 1885. I don't say there is no other case, but it is the only case I remember.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you recall any other case, Doctor?

Dr. PEYNADA. No; but I will tell you one thing: It is a profession of foreigners here. They enjoy all our rights, with our consent, because we protect them, the foreigners, and they have not our charges. This is a country where from many you know, where the foreigners are in danger.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Peynada, the vocation of foreigner, then, is more important than that of President or ex-President?

Dr. PEYNADA. Of course. Nobody doubts that. It is a business to be a foreigner, I assure you.

Mr. KNOWLES. So on that point, Doctor, that is your testimony on the safety of the city and country being in such a state of disorder at the time the proclamation was issued that the lives and property of foreigners were in danger. Is that your answer to that declaration?

Dr. PEYNADA. Well, wait a minute. No; indeed. My declaration was that there could be no danger at all by what Admiral Caperton believed to be a revolution, which, in my opinion, was not a revolution, because revolutions destroy the property and lives of the foreigners or Dominican citizens. We were not in danger; 1912 was a year in which we had a revolution which lasted 11 months.

The CHAIRMAN. Was that at the end of President Caceres's administration?

Dr. PEYNADA. Yes. We had 11 months of revolution, and the country carried out its agricultural, industrial, and commercial activities in normal times is the fact that in that year this country imported and more than six other Republics in America, notwithstanding the 11 months of revolution and notwithstanding the circumstance that of all of the Republics in America only two are smaller in area, Haiti and Salvador, and only two were smaller in population, Panama and Costa Rica.

Senator JONES. How many revolutions have you had since 1907?

Dr. PEYNADA. I don't know.

Senator JONES. Several?

Dr. PEYNADA. Several; but they do not trouble us very much.

Senator JONES. They don't interest anybody except the immediate participants?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly.

Senator JONES. The remainder of the Dominicans are not molested?

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly not.

Senator JONES. I believe you called it a sport?

Dr. PEYNADA. Why, it is a sport for a certain type.

Senator JONES. How many people lost their lives during that revolution, which lasted 11 months?

Dr. PEYNADA. Perhaps 200, I don't remember; but I am sure it was not many. It is a case of taking positions you know. The others don't feel very comfortable and they retire, and the people who have more power go into the capitol to take it. It is merely a question of position.

Senator JONES. What was the cause of that revolution?

Dr. PEYNADA. The belief of the opposition that the elections that resulted in the nomination of President Victoria were not fair.

Senator JONES. Doctor, what is your view about the fairness of the elections generally?

Dr. PEYNADA. While we have the kind of laws that we have just now we can have fair elections.

Senator JONES. Explain that, will you, Doctor?

Dr. PEYNADA. That will take too much time.

Senator JONES. That is all right. We shall be glad to hear you.

Dr. PEYNADA. My opinion is that we have not the fraud they have in other countries, by putting more votes in the box than were cast for the party which controls. That is not the trouble. The trouble is that as we have no census, as our election laws do not provide for registration, a man could vote seven or eight times, because each commune was an electoral district, so instead of having an electoral district for them all those people over there couldn't say to a man, "You can't vote because you have already voted," because they don't know him, and it was possible for the party in control to allow some people to vote seven or eight times. Until we change those laws we shall never have a fair election. There are other features, but I need time to go into them. That is enough.

Senator JONES. How many votes were cast at that election?

Dr. PEYNADA. Oh, I don't know, Senator, because I was not interested. I was not with one party or the other, so I did not take notice of that.

Senator JONES. They don't pretend to cast the vote for the absent ones, do they?

Dr. PEYNADA. No.

Senator JONES. I asked that question, because sometimes it is done in the United States.

Dr. PEYNADA. Certainly. But here it is chronic. Those frauds are more prevalent here, on account of our defects.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Peynada, if I understand Mr. Knowles, you wish to discuss the first period involving the taking possession of the country and continue with the issuance of a proclamation, and then later discuss the actual administration of the government of the country by the military governor.

Dr. PEYNADA. I have not said anything about that.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I was asking you if you did wish to talk about that. I were not present, perhaps, when Mr. Knowles made his introduction?

Dr. KNOWLES. I stated the order in which we were going to introduce the testimony.

Dr. PEYNADA. Well, I don't think I am the most useful witness on that line, I suppose.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Peynada, I want entirely to follow your wishes.

Dr. PEYNADA. I believe there are others who might take my place to answer that question, because I don't know anything at all about the treasury—what has been done in the treasury. I don't know personally that some one has done some one else. I have heard that, and I believe many other things, because I have been told me by reliable people, but I can not say to you that occurred in such a place, because I did not see it, and second, it is to me immaterial that the military government had behaved very well and they contributed to my own happiness I would still stand for the liberty and independence of Santo Domingo.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other questions to be asked of Dr. Peynada?

STATEMENT OF MR. PEDRO A. PEREZ.

MR. KNOWLES. What is your full name?

MR. PEREZ. Pedro A. Perez.

MR. KNOWLES. Where do you live?

MR. PEREZ. In Santo Domingo city.

MR. KNOWLES. Of what country are you a native?

MR. PEREZ. El Seibo.

MR. KNOWLES. Of the Dominican Republic?

MR. PEREZ. Yes.

MR. KNOWLES. Have you been actively connected with any political party or leader?

MR. PEREZ. I belonged to the Jiminista Party—formerly Hermanista and Jiminista.

MR. KNOWLES. You have lived in this Republic continuously for how many years past?

MR. PEREZ. The last time for six years, after returning from the United States.

MR. KNOWLES. What is your profession?

MR. PEREZ. I was a lawyer at El Seibo. I am not practicing at present.

MR. KNOWLES. Were you invited to become a member of the Junta Consultiva?

MR. PEREZ. Yes.

MR. KNOWLES. What was the object and purpose of that body?

MR. PEREZ. The Junta Consultiva had the duty to study some laws and report in laws to submit to the consideration of the military governor.

MR. KNOWLES. Who were the other members of the Junta Consultiva?

MR. PEREZ. Seven, including myself.

MR. KNOWLES. Will you please name the other members?

MR. PEREZ. Archbishop Noel is chairman of the Junta Consultiva. Jacinto R. De Castro, Mr. Francisco J. Peynada, Mr. Frederico Velasco, Rafael J. Castillo, Mr. Manuel Gonzalez, Mr. Marrero, and myself.

MR. KNOWLES. About when was the Junta Consultiva formed?

MR. PEREZ. There was one other board before this, of which I did not form a part, which had other duties. The last Junta Consultiva was originally composed of five members, and two more were added, myself being one. It was in accordance with the Wilson plan, which gave us the duties we have.

MR. KNOWLES. How was that Junta Consultiva formed? Who organized or invited the members to participate in it?

MR. PEREZ. Admiral Snowden.

Senator POMERENE. Has it continued down to the present time?

MR. PEREZ. By proclamation of June 14 it was dissolved.

Senator POMERENE. June 14, 1921?

MR. PEREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. And there have been no sessions of the Junta Consultiva since that time?

MR. PEREZ. No. It was dissolved on June 14.

Senator POMERENE. I want to ask you if you were in the city all of the time during the Jimenez administration?

MR. PEREZ. No, sir. I was the governor of El Seibo Province.

MR. KNOWLES. Were you here any time during the session of congress when elected Dr. Henriquez President?

MR. PEREZ. I was at El Seibo.

MR. KNOWLES. Can you give the committee any information regarding the selection of Dr. Henriquez for President?

MR. PEREZ. He was elected by the congress of the Republic.

MR. KNOWLES. By and with the consent of all of the party leaders?

MR. PEREZ. No; it was by authority of the congress, after the resignation of President Jimenez.

Mr. KNOWLES. But did all of the party leaders agree to that election?

Mr. PEREZ. The different parties were represented by the members of congress, and they accepted the designation of President Henriquez.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he elected unanimously by congress?

Mr. PEREZ. I don't remember. He obtained a majority.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were you present at any time in the city after the election of Henriquez?

Mr. PEREZ. I was.

Mr. KNOWLES. About how soon after the election of Dr. Henriquez did you come to Santo Domingo?

Mr. PEREZ. Almost immediately.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you remain here for some time?

Mr. PEREZ. Two months.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was Dr. Henriquez elected in accordance with the constitution of the country?

Mr. PEREZ. Of course. The country was altogether at peace.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was there from the time of Dr. Henriquez's taking office, during all of the time that he was in Santo Domingo, any disorder of any kind whatsoever?

Mr. PEREZ. No, sir.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was there, so far as you know, any disorder of any kind outside of the city in the country?

Mr. PEREZ. I don't remember. It is five years ago.

Mr. KNOWLES. As far as you know, was Dr. Henriquez the choice of the people of the Dominican Republic?

Mr. PEREZ. According to the terms of the constitution, the Dominican people ad to accept him, because he was named by Congress.

Mr. KNOWLES. And in accordance with the constitution?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes. Mr. Henriquez was a provisional President. He came to fill the term of President Jimenez, to call the people to election.

Senator POMERENE. Was there an election after that?

Mr. PEREZ. No, sir. Then came the occupation.

Senator POMERENE. There has been no election since?

Mr. KNOWLES. No election since.

Senator POMERENE. So if he was elected for six months, there is in fact no resident at the present time?

Mr. KNOWLES. There is the question which I have not yet raised at all, as to exactly what was the term of a President.

Senator POMERENE. Well, state for the record, so that we may have the information now, so that we may be able to interpret his testimony as we go along.

Mr. KNOWLES. There is some difference of opinion as to the exact term for which the President was elected. Later in the investigation I will present the resolution adopted by Congress electing Dr. Henriquez, specifying under what conditions and for what term, in order that it, or the translation of it, may speak for itself.

Senator POMERENE. For the benefit of the committee, let me suggest that you express your view as to this proposition. When a President is elected, it is only for a given term of years, or is it for a given term of years and until his successor is elected and qualified? In other words, in the United States some of our officers are only elected or appointed for a given, specified term. Others are appointed to serve for a given term and until their successors shall be elected. The purpose of my question is, as you will readily see, to ascertain whether or not, under the law, you would have a President who was not qualified to act. I do not care to discuss it now, but bear that in mind.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I will be prepared at the afternoon session, Mr. Senator, to present evidence bearing directly on that point.

Senator POMERENE. All right.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you remember about the date that you left Santo Domingo on the occasion of the visit you have referred to, to return to your office at El Seibo?

Mr. PEREZ. About the 12th or 13th of October, 1916, more or less.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you return after that any time prior to the 29th of November?

Mr. PEREZ. No. It is so long ago I can not readily ascertain whether I did return or not before November.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you remember if you were here on the day or about the day of the proclamation of occupation?

Mr. PEREZ. I was not here.

Mr. KNOWLES. Then from the 1st of August until the 12th of October, were continuously in Santo Domingo city?

Mr. PEREZ. So it is.

Mr. KNOWLES. During all of that time Dr. Henriquez was President?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. KNOWLES. Exercising the office in accordance with the constitution?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. And without any discontent that you knew of on the part of the people against this Government?

Mr. PEREZ. Dr. Henriquez exercised his office with the pleasure of Dominican people. The people were content.

Mr. KNOWLES. During all of that time were there any disorders of any kind in the city?

Mr. PEREZ. I was not at the city, but I heard that American troops had been on some people on the other side of the river.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a correct translation? Did not he say that they killed an individual?

The INTERPRETER. He says he can not well remember, but in his mind there is a recollection of a case in which American troops had killed an individual on the other side of the river.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Interpreter, you have got to be more accurate. You do not know Spanish very well, but if I can correct you, that will hardly be the purpose.

The INTERPRETER. He said he did not have a ready recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand what you said, but you did not tell the interpreter what he said.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was that the only case that you heard of up to the time you left for El Seibo?

Mr. PEREZ. The matter happened after I was at El Seibo.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, as I wish to ask this witness something relating to the other part of the testimony to be presented, I will not continue further with him on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you wish to change the subject, or change the witness?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now a quarter past 12. Do you wish to put a witness on now, or after lunch?

Mr. KNOWLES. Either.

The CHAIRMAN. The members of the committee then will examine the witness, if any of them care to.

Senator POMERENE. A moment ago counsel asked you as to whether there was peace and quiet in the city of Santo Domingo. What was the condition of other sections of the island or the Republic during the administration of Dr. Henriquez?

Mr. PEREZ. The country was in a state of convulsion. That was not a revolution or anything like against President Henriquez, but it was a direct consequence of the disagreement between the secretary of war and the President, and consequently the country was in an unsettled condition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does he speak of the whole country or of parts of the country, especially?

Mr. PEREZ. In the Cibao section in the northern side of the island.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness means that as Desiderio Arias came from Cibao, there was unrest in the Cibao, in view of the differences between him and President Henriquez.

Mr. PEREZ. When Desiderio came from the Cibao?

Mr. KNOWLES. Jiminez.

The CHAIRMAN. No. He speaks of the term of office of President Jiminez.

Mr. KNOWLES. No, Mr. Chairman; when you were out, Senator POMERENE asked a question as to what was the state of order in other parts of the country outside of Santo Domingo City. He testified in his direct examination that it was all quiet here in the city at that time.

Senator POMERENE. The witness simply answered the question, what was the condition in the city? "Was it quiet in the city?" and that attracted my attention, and so I wanted to know what the condition was outside of the city in the rest of the country during the Henriquez administration.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the reason I am asking about the condition of El Cibao. Was I wrong? Had not there been a difference of opinion between Sen. Desiderio Arias and President Jiminez?

Mr. PEREZ. Oh, undoubtedly there was.

The CHAIRMAN. I was trying to learn if that unrest continued in the Cibao after the election of President Henriquez.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to know, Mr. Perez, if in the Cibao during the administration of President Henriquez there continued the agitation which was caused by the differences between Desiderio Arias and President Jiminez.

Mr. PEREZ. No, no; Desiderio had not coincided with the occupation of the American forces. He withdrew to Cibao. And when President Henriquez came he remained quiet.

Senator POMERENE. How many revolutions were there in the Santo Domingo Republic after the treaty of 1907 was ratified and up to the time of the occupation by the American forces?

Mr. PEREZ. There were several.

The CHAIRMAN. President Morales left office when and how?

Mr. PEREZ. That is a question of history. I do not remember, because, unfortunately, I have not a strong memory. From 1907 to 1916 there were several revolutions in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Knowles, will you supply the names of the Presidents, beginning with President Morales and concluding with President Henriquez, the periods during which each held office, or for which each held office; the method, the way by which each came into office and went out; and if anything happened to them either during their incumbency or thereafter?

Mr. KNOWLES. I will, Mr. Chairman.

The data was subsequently supplied by Mr. Knowles and is on file with the committee.)

PRESIDENTE MORALES.

Este renunció constitucionalmente la Presidencia de la Republica, en Enero de 1906, y entonces fué promovido, constitucionalmente, a la Presidencia. Vice Presidente Ramon Caceres.

PRESIDENTE CACERES.

Gobernó hasta 1911; el día 19 de Noviembre, de este año, fué matado y entonces el Congreso Nacional eligió Presidente, constitucionalmente, al Senador don Victoria.

PRESIDENTE VICTORIA.

Fue el primero que luchó contra una fuerte revolución, y a fines de 1912, renunció constitucionalmente, construido por la Comisión americana compuesta por él y el Gral. McIntyre, que vino a investigar nuestros asuntos. El Congreso Nacional eligió Presidente, con forma a la constitución, al Arzobispo Nouel.

PRESIDENTE NOUEL.

Renunció por motivos de salud en Abril de 1913, constitucionalmente y constitucionalmente, también, el Congreso eligió Presidente al Senador Jose Bordas.

PRESIDENTE BORDAS.

Gobernó hasta el 13 de Abril de 1914 y cuando los partidos políticos observaron que el Presidente trataba de postularse para ejercer por un plazo mayor que había sido elegido (un año), se coaligaron e hicieron una poderosa revolución. Vino entonces al país, una nueva Comisión americana, compuesta por el Gobernador Fort y Mr. Smith. Esa Comisión, se impuso a Bordas y derrocó nuestro Gobierno Constitucional, inclusive el Congreso. Entonces los miembros de partido y Bordas, de acuerdo, nombraron Presidente, por tres meses, a hacer elecciones, al Dr. Ramon Baez. Esta forma de elección no era constitucional pero fué impuesta por los representantes de los Estados Unidos.

PRESIDENTE BAEZ.

Este cumplió su cargo de dirigir elecciones libres, en las cuales salió triunfante obteniendo la mayoría el señor Juan Isidro Jimenes.

PRESIDENTE JIMENES.

Goberné desde que se hizo cargo constitucionalmente, de la Presidencia. Diciembre 5 de 1914, hasta el día 7 de Mayo de 1916, cuando renunció. Desembarcaron los marinos y obstruyeron la elección constitucional; debía y quería hacer inmediatamente el Congreso, hasta que este eligió presidente, con la unanimidad de los votos, de todos los Senadores y Diputados. Dr. Francisco Henriquez y Carvajal, en Julio 25 de 1916.

PRESIDENTE HENRIQUEZ.

Hacia doce años vivía en Cuba alejado de la política. Vino, como presidente de la Presidencia en Agosto 1° y fue arrojado de su posición por los marines americanos, conforme a la Proclama del Capitan Knapp de fecha 29 de noviembre de 1916.

De 1907 a 1916, solo ha habido en el país, tres revoluciones; Una en 1907 otra a principios de 1913, durando un mes; y la última, en 1914.

En este país, durante toda su historia, solo han sido matados dos Presidentes: Heureaux y Cáceres. Uno menos que en los Estados Unidos, donde han sido matados: Lincoln, Garfield y McKinley.

Senator POMERENE. How many do you mean by your expression, "three revolutions" between 1907 and the beginning of the American occupation?

Mr. PEREZ. Four or five—about four.

Senator POMERENE. How long did these revolutions last?

Mr. PEREZ. I can not say. They lasted two, three, four months—one month.

Senator POMERENE. Dr. Peynada told us that one revolution in 1912 lasted about 11 months. Is that right?

Mr. PEREZ. Please say which.

Senator POMERENE. The revolution of 1912.

Mr. KNOWLES. Cáceres.

Mr. PEREZ. Against Cáceres? It may be.

Senator POMERENE. How long did the other revolutions to which you referred last?

Mr. PEREZ. I can not say definitely, because I have a poor memory.

Senator POMERENE. During these revolutions was there fighting between armed forces?

Mr. PEREZ. Of course.

Senator POMERENE. Was the Government overthrown during these revolutions?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. How often?

Mr. PEREZ. I do not remember those details.

The CHAIRMAN. About how many men were engaged in the forces of the Government and in the forces of the revolutionists each time?

Mr. PEREZ. That can not be ascertained here. Revolutions have people, governments have people.

The CHAIRMAN. Would one side or the other recruit in Cibao?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes; in the country sections.

The CHAIRMAN. If the governor of Cibao was friendly to the Government, the capital, what steps did he take to secure troops?

Mr. PEREZ. The authority at El Seibo had at its disposal the troops the Government had authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. Would he add to their number?

Mr. PEREZ. No. That varies. The Government also had the right to put the men under arms, to call them from the country sections.

The CHAIRMAN. They had a right under the law to call the men from the country by compulsion to serve under arms?

Mr. PEREZ. According to the constitution, all citizens must serve the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. In arms?

Mr. PEREZ. In arms. The governor kept the arms in the—

The CHAIRMAN. No; but under the constitution, the governor had the right to require men in the country to come in and take arms in defense of the Government.

Mr. PEREZ. Yes; in accordance with the law of Santo Domingo, which provides for a special organization. Here there has always been a small army. In .

places there are military corps composed of all of the people of the country over 21 years of age up to the present, and the authority in accordance with orders from the Government, which is compelled to sustain public order, issues orders to the governor, and he may bring the people from the country and arm them to suppress any disorder that may occur.

The CHAIRMAN. What steps would the chief of the insurrection take to secure troops to oppose those of the Government?

Mr. PEREZ. To fight to put them down.

The CHAIRMAN. How would the leaders of the revolution secure men—troops—to make up their armed forces in Cibao?

Mr. PEREZ. All the men who were displeased with the Government would form the troops of the revolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the chiefs of the revolution use any active measures to induce men to join the forces of the revolution?

Mr. PEREZ. They call them simply.

The CHAIRMAN. Would they use any persuasion or moral pressure on the people out in the country to join their forces?

Mr. PEREZ. I have said that those who were discontented with the Government would join the opposing party.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary, let me say, to repeat his testimony. If I ask a question I, conformably with our rules, seek a direct answer. It is now 12.30, and the interpreter gets tired easily, and I have arranged for relief for the interpreter. I hope Mr. Perez will be ready to continue the examination about 4 o'clock, when these other gentlemen have been here. The committee will rise until 2.30.

(Whereupon the committee took a recess until 2.30 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment at 3 o'clock p. m., Senator McCormick presiding.

Present: Messrs. McCormick (chairman), Jones, and Pomerene.

Also present: Mr. Knowles and Mr. Howe.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, which was very happy to be able to oblige Mr. Knowles yesterday and recessed to afford his clients an opportunity to be present this morning, regrets that the chamber of commerce, which made an engagement for this afternoon, is unable or unready to be present, and that the Junta Consultiva, for which likewise an engagement was made, is likewise unready. We are grateful to Mr. Perez for his presence here, which permits us to go on at this time instead of at 4 o'clock.

As some attention has been given to the history of events about the time of the resignation of President Jimenez and the election of Dr. Henriquez, with the permission of Mr. Perez I will ask him some questions.

Mr. PEREZ. I would like to say something first.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PEREZ. Do I have to reply only to the questions addressed to me, or can, as a citizen of a free country, make any statement I wish?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. He is free to answer in any fashion; only I trust that if questions be directed to certain subjects, he will be able to answer those questions. If he wishes to add anything more, we shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. PEREZ. There is something special that I may have to say that has no relation to the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps Mr. Knowles will explain the course which the investigation has followed in Washington and elsewhere until this time, either in English or in Spanish, Mr. Knowles.

Mr. KNOWLES. Say to the witness that the hearings that have been heretofore held—and I think will be held from now on—have been completely open to anything that any of the witnesses might wish to say bearing upon the subject matter of the investigation, and there is no restriction whatever, in reason, as to what information they can give to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. These are questions which I ask in order that we may have in mind the sequence of events. How long before President Hermanez was elected were the Chambers and the Senate elected?

Mr. PEREZ. I have not an exact memory of all the happenings of the country, but that is something that is well known. Together with the election of President Jimenez the legislative powers were also elected.

The CHAIRMAN. Simultaneously?

Mr. PEREZ. Simultaneously.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand, then, at the same election in which the colleges were chosen which subsequently elected President Jimenez there were also elected the members of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate?

Mr. PEREZ. That is correct. It was a constitutional government.

The CHAIRMAN. The president of the Senate and the president of the Chamber therefore were later elected?

Mr. PEREZ. From the same corporation, the Senate elects its president and the members of the House elect its president.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean that the election of the president of the Senate and the election of the president of the House must necessarily follow the election of President Jimenez?

Mr. PEREZ. According to the constitution of the country, on the 27th of February the regular meeting of the Congress—or any other date that Congress meets—when they meet the Congress elects its president and the Senate elects its president.

The CHAIRMAN. Who were the presidents of the Senate and the Chamber after the time that President Jimenez was elected in 1914 and had relations with the Senate and that Chamber at that period, who were the presidents of the Senate and the president of the House?

Mr. PEREZ. I don't remember well now. It is in the official gazette.

The CHAIRMAN. How long a time passed between the election of President Jimenez and the day upon which he formally took the oath of office?

Mr. PEREZ. I do not remember exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any delay in the assembly of the Chamber?

Mr. PEREZ. The President was elected in the latter part of December, 1914 and he took oath on February 27, 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you first hear talk of the impeachment of President Jimenez?

Mr. PEREZ. I think between March and April, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. When did you first hear of the differences between President Jimenez and his friend, Desiderio Arias?

Mr. PEREZ. At the beginning of the year 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. When was it that President Jimenez removed or attempted to remove Comandante de Arias and the comandante of the citadel, the brother of Jimenez?

Mr. PEREZ. Although I can not state definitely, I think that in the month of March or April, 1916. Not being at the capitol, being at El Seibo, I can not state the happenings at that time. Only in a general way.

The CHAIRMAN. When did President Jimenez resign?

Mr. PEREZ. In May, 1916.

The CHAIRMAN. I think, Mr. Perez, I have no further questions to ask perhaps other senators have.

Mr. PEREZ. After finishing. I would like to state what I have to declare.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Senator POMERENE. Have you lived in the Republic all your life?

Mr. PEREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. And you are very familiar with the history of the Republic?

Mr. PEREZ. In general; yes.

Senator POMERENE. I have been advised that during the last 40 years there have been 16 principal revolutions in the country. Is that correct?

Mr. PEREZ. I have not counted them on my fingers, but we have had revolutions in all the countries of the world there are revolutions.

Senator POMERENE. Oh, surely. Give the committee your best judgment to the number of these revolutions during the last 40 years.

Mr. PEREZ. Exactly. I can not state. We have had several, but as I am this morning, I can not state.

Senator POMERENE. In each of these revolutions which you recall, was there an armed conflict between the opposing forces?

Mr. PEREZ. Of course.

Senator POMERENE. How many men have been killed as the result of these revolutions?

Mr. PEREZ. I can not tell that.

Senator POMERENE. How many times during the last 40 years has the government of the Republic been overthrown by revolutionists?

Mr. PEREZ. Several times.

Senator POMERENE. How many times did the Government overcome the revolutionists?

Mr. PEREZ. Sometimes the Government overcame and other times the revolutionists overthrew the Government.

Senator POMERENE. Now, our chairman, before the luncheon hour, asked the witness how the forces of the revolutionists were recruited. I want to pursue that a little further. How would the revolutionists get their supplies, their horses, their food, or produce, and other supplies?

Mr. PEREZ. I told this morning the way revolutionists have done in this country.

Senator POMERENE. No; as I understood you, your answer was only confined to the securing of the men or recruits. I am addressing myself now to their supplies, their military supplies. How did they get them?

Mr. PEREZ. I do not wish as a witness to continue declaring under that text.

Senator POMERENE. For what reason?

Mr. PEREZ. For the reason that the matter is unimportant, as it is not referring to the United States, because Santo Domingo is a free country.

Senator POMERENE. If that is your answer to my question I will not pursue that further. We will get the information somewhere else.

Mr. PEREZ. As I am allowed and will have complete liberty I would like to declare now.

Senator POMERENE. Let him make any statement that he wishes.

Mr. PEREZ. I, as a Dominican citizen, protest against the intervention of the United States, because the United States and the Dominican Republic were and are friendly nations. The Dominican Republic has given no reason to the United States to exercise the oppression that was acted on the Dominican Republic. I, as a civilized man and as a citizen of a free country, could not understand as yet, nor can I do it ever, that a country so advanced and so democratic and so willing to fulfill the republican practice, could have invaded with troops a sovereign country as the Dominican Republic was, and having treated us as though we were Negroes from the Congo. We were friends of the United States. We would have gone to their help during the World War with Germany.

In conclusion I protest against the American invasion, and I believe that the best service that the honorable senators while present here could do to the civilized cause of the world would be to report to the Senate of the United States the necessity that the United States is in to evacuate the Dominican Republic.

We were more happy in our previous condition than in the present status. The Dominican Republic is administratively lost. We do not know where the money of the nation goes nor from where it comes. The Province of El Seibo, to which I belong, is completely ruined. There is a condition of bandits there that never existed before the arrival of the American forces.

(The following members of the junta consultiva here appeared before the committee: Mr. Jacinto R. De Castro, Francisco J. Peynada, Manuel Gonzalez Marrero, Pedro A. Perez, Federico Velasquez, and Rafael Justino Castillo.)

The CHAIRMAN. The committee of the Senate of the United States is very happy to meet the junta consultiva.

Mr. DE CASTRO. The consultative committee appreciates highly the manifestation of sympathy of which it has been the object on the part of the honorable committee of Senators of the United States, a powerful nation which we consider as a friend. The presence of the consultative committee here collectively is not to produce any testimony against the procedure of the military occupation under which the country suffers, because none of its members have experienced personally any of the happenings that could be charged to the military occupation. In the capacity in which we were invested as men representative in character, we accepted on two occasions a place on the consultative committees that were created during the administration of the rear admiral of the United States Navy, Snowden, and as our mode of being on that occasion divided in a certain way the public opinion of the Dominican people, we considered it as a high duty of patriotism on our part to say that that disagreement was never fundamental. In the contact we had with the American military government, the same as the people who were in front of that American government, we protested and protest the occupation of the territory by forces of the United States, and the dismemberment of its government, and the planting of its government by a military government, and the prolongation to-day of that state of affairs. In all the public documents that we submitted and in all our public declarations to the Dominican people we sustained a reparation that it by all means is due to the Dominican Republic that is reinstated in the plenitude of its attributes as a sovereign state. Because we do not recognize neither in the convention of 1907, nor in any other nor in any principle of international law, nor in any fundamental of law that the Dominican people could be given the intervention that has been posed. And I restate those declarations so that it may be always known all the services that we lent during the occupation were not to mean by implication that we recognized that anything can limit the sovereignty of the people of the Dominican Republic, and that we are the first to ask, and solemnly do, the end of this military occupation and the restitution of National Government, as the only means to repair the deep wound that has been done to the Dominican people. We have finished.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank the consultative committee for the presence of members here and for the considerate statement of its views through the of its very able and distinguished spokesman.

(The junta consultiva then withdrew.)

STATEMENT OF MR. ARTURO LAGRANO.

Mr. LAGRANO. The committee has not the right to make me swear in this country. In the interest of the country I have no objection to making a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you ask him to observe that the committee has sought through any members of the committee to have him take oath; that is taking oath voluntarily, through the medium of a notary of his own country. The committee has already said that it has no jurisdiction to administer an oath.

(The witness was then sworn.)

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your full name

Mr. LAGRANO. Arturo Lagrano.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?

Mr. LAGRANO. In the city of Santo Domingo.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

Mr. LAGRANO. Here.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your profession?

Mr. LAGRANO. Lawyer.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you any direct and immediate interest or connection as leader of any political party here?

Mr. LAGRANO. In my capacity as secretary, which I was to President Jimenez I have an interest in clearing up some circumstances that the interest has been a little bit, presenting them at the same time as expressing the sentiment which I as a free citizen of a free country have toward the situation in that country finds itself to-day.

In virtue of that, I ask that the honorable committee of the United States Senate may make in the interest of truth and justice all the questions that I think convenient in connection with the last days of government of President Jimenez, or of any other period of our political history.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Lagrano, what was your connection with President Jimenez?

Mr. LAGRANO. I was secretary to President Jimenez from two years before he was President of the Republic, and I continued being so even after he was no more President of the Republic.

Mr. KNOWLES. What date was it that Jimenez became President?

Mr. LAGRANO. The elections took place in the month of October of the year 1914. President Jimenez was proclaimed by the National Congress on the afternoon of the 4th day of December of the same year. The next morning, the 5th—he took oath of office and took possession of that high chair to which he had been legally elected and freely by the wishes of the Dominican people in an election that the Secretary of State, Hon. Mr. Bryan, described happily as legal and as the happy augury to the Dominican Republic of its relations with the United States.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long did Mr. Jimenez remain President?

Mr. LAGRANO. A year and five months.

Mr. KNOWLES. What was the general condition respecting order during the administration of Jiminez?

Mr. LAGRANO. Absolute peace. In the first few days of the Government there were little disturbances that never became armed clashes, but that were just the consequences of the changes of military authority. Those difficulties were solved with success by the Government and there was no interruption of peace until the happenings of May, 1916.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, will you, in your own way, state, without any reservations whatever, to the members of the commission the occurrences that led up to the ending of the administration of Jiminez?

Mr. LAGRANO. Certainly. And I take advantage of this opportunity to have noticed that if it is true that between the secretary of war, Gen. Arias, and the President of the Republic there was misunderstanding in relation to the nomination to a military position of the second rank in the national guard, that misunderstanding would never have been a bloody clash. But after the disembarkment of the American marines, President Jiminez relieved Gen. Arias, because Gen. Arias did not obey his orders in the matter of putting as chief of the guardia republicana Gen. Mauritio, who was governor of the Province of San Francisco de Macoris, taking the place of Gen. Cesario Romano, who was brother of the commander of the army, Gen. Romano Romano. The disagreement between the President of the Republic and the secretary of war would never have resulted in war. There were many persons interested in trying to avoid the continuance of the friction. I believe that if a mediation of influence as powerful as that of the American minister had intervened in a manner to avoid a petty clash—though it had been with the least moral pressure—the clash would have been avoided.

On the 3d of May Capt. Crossley, captain of the United States transport Virgie, announced in the press a proclamation that if it was necessary for the American marines to disembark to guard the legation, as was the custom, they would not be responsible for any hostile act they would be permitted to make if they were attacked.

On the 4th the marines disembarked on the beach of San Geronimo, without any authorization from the President of the Republic. This is very interesting, because it has been said frequently, even by some of the people in the country that don't know very well the matters, that there were certain agreements between the Government in the capitol to allow the disembarkment of the marines with the consent of the Government. There was never and there will never be able to be found any official document, nor any private document, either, subscribed by President Jiminez in which it appears or in which it may appear that consent was given. Furthermore, Minister Russell, on the 10th of May, 1916, allowed the publication under his personal responsibility of a declaration which he made on that date—about 15 days after the disembarkment of the American forces in San Geronimo by the spontaneous initiative of the American legation and to guard the legation. On landing the American forces at the legation and around the receptory they placed upon which they brought, a few in number, but that were growing progressively in number, until they amounted to 750 marines on the 15th day of May, the day which they entered the city. On land those forces, as I say, remained in a state of expectation during two or three days. While there occurred the happenings which I am going to refer to immediately. On the 16th the President, having lost all hope of arriving at a friendly conclusion, decided, as it was natural to and within his capacity under the constitution, to dominate by force the city, which was in the power of the minister of war. The minister of war had, not by right but by fact, the possession of the city, because, due to our laws, the military forces are under the direct command of the minister of war, and more indirectly under the President of the Republic. So that the minister of war has more contact with the forces than the President. The President was not in the city. He was 23 kilometers out, at a summer resort, and he thought that he was not able to exercise at that moment in an effective manner authority over forces which were directly under the command of the minister of war. So that in reality there was a disconcertment, a crisis, as was the command between the President and the minister of war that lasted four or five days, and a state of uncertainty, and it was then that occurred the proclamation of Capt. Crossley, and subsequently the disembarkment of the marines, from the 28th of April to the 5th of May.

That was the reason why I said at the beginning that in fact there was any coup d'état, but that what really existed was merely a friction of inferior character, that could have been settled by a little good will part of a powerful mediator. It is so more true that there was no coup; that could justify, and even so it could not have justified that dismemberment of the American marines, that even Gen. Arias made efforts to give respect to his own disregard of the President's authority. It is possible if in our constitutional laws there would have been provided a mode of arbitration in similar cases, it would have been settled as to who was right. Arias's friends in the chamber began to agitate anew an accusation that had been presented five months before, with the object of putting the President in a peculiar state of intradiction and to prevent in that way adopting an official position for removing the secretary of war. The President of the Republic on his part, believed that he could not appear before the senate to answer charges brought by the chamber of deputies. The process here is the same as in the United States.

Impeachment is instituted in the chamber of deputies, and the senate acts as a high court. The President thought, and he so made it known to the senate by means of the secretary of the interior and police, that he could not physically appear in the city before the senate, because the chamber was surrounded and supported by military forces that he thought were rebels.

That was the situation on the 3d of May, when Capt. Crossley demanded his marines upon the island and the legation of the United States according to declaration of the 22d of May of the same Minister Rusconi. Landing coincided with the resolution made by President Jimenez to remove by force the rebel secretary of war. The rebel secretary of war in that case of not obeying the authority of the President of the Republic, but not the author of a coup d'état that never existed in fact.

On the 6th of May the forces of the Government, two days after the embarkment of the marines, attacked, without any help of the marines, were in a state of expectation—

Senator POMERENE. During this period, from April 28 to May 5, if I stand you correctly, the armed forces of the Republic were under the command of the secretary of war and were not obeying the President.

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes. I must explain that it is not the forces of the Republic. The forces in the city—the garrison of the city of Santo Domingo—were under the control of the President of the Republic had the control of the rest of the country, with the exception of the fortress of Santiago, where there was a commander-in-chief of the secretary of war, who was not either in a state of open rebellion or in a state of expectation.

Senator POMERENE. Let me put this in another way: Then, if I understand you correctly, you mean to say that the forces of the Republic which were in the city were under the control and command of the secretary of war?

Mr. LAGRANO. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. That they were in active sympathy—these forces—were in sympathy with a majority in both chambers, unfriendly to President Jimenez.

Mr. LAGRANO. The military forces of Santo Domingo, according to the law, have no right to deliberate, but just obey according to law the orders of the minister of war.

These events coincided in point of time, but independently of one another.

(Whereupon the committee adjourned until Monday, December 12, 1893, 9 o'clock a. m.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Santo Domingo City.

The committee met at 9 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Senators Pomerene and Jones; Senator Pomerene presiding.

Also present: Mr. Howe and Mr. Knowles.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that we convened and Mr. Knowles withdrew the witness, Mr. Lagrono, temporarily, for the purpose of introducing me other and additional testimony.

Mr. KNOWLES. Senator, I was asked on Saturday to present certain credentials. One of the credentials I have in my hand, and I would like to submit it to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they in English or Spanish?

Mr. KNOWLES. They are in Spanish. I can, however, have a translation made.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would have them translated for the record, and then we can incorporate them a little later on.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I will do that. There are certain records that I would like to have produced before the commission that are in the possession of the military government. I would like to have a record showing the total amount of fines that has been collected from the natives during the military occupation.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me understand. Do you mean the total, or do you want an itemized list?

Mr. KNOWLES. No. I will be content with the total. It would take too much time to have it itemized.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if you desire yourself to investigate these records any time, they will be placed at your disposal.

Mr. HOWE. You mean, collected in the military court?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. If those records, however, are in such form as they are immediately available, I would like to see them now; but if not, I will take the total amount for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. If the committee had known that it was your desire to have them we would have had them placed at your disposal at once.

Mr. KNOWLES. I would like also the record of the proceedings, or the official account, in regard to the death of Gen. Ramon Bautista, also of Vincente Angelista and of Capt. Knox.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that in respect to Capt. Knox?

Mr. KNOWLES. The record in connection with his death.

I would like to have brought from the prison, under such circumstances as the military authorities deem proper, that he may be available for my examination. Armando Cabral.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean before the committee—examination before the committee?

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, possibly, later, after I have had an opportunity of talking with this witness. I think it will be that I will ask that he come here to testify to the committee. In any case, I would like to see the witness Armando Cabral.

Mr. HOWE. When and where do you want him produced?

Mr. KNOWLES. They could bring him here to this building.

Mr. HOWE. To the palace?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Why can not you go down there and see him and make some arrangement to have a conference with him?

Mr. KNOWLES. If that is available to me.

The CHAIRMAN. I don't know what the military regulations are.

Mr. KNOWLES. It would be better that way.

The CHAIRMAN. And then at any time you indicate we will see that arrangement is made. At least we have no objection now to it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you just add one more record I would like to have.

There is a document that has been published, either here or in Washington that gives a report of the commission on claims. And also an itemized statement of the different public works contemplated, with the estimated cost of each of the constructions.

Mr. HOWE. At what period the estimates?

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, this is for works to be constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us see what you mean by that. There are a number of works that the committee are advised have not been completed, and I am without knowing anything about the facts, that it is the purpose to complete all of these works which are incomplete for one reason or another, principally because of financial conditions, as I take it. Will you want a complete statement of the works that have been contemplated?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; Senator. This is what I am asking. There is a pamphlet that is published that I had with me on the steamer and in some way somehow it has disappeared.

The CHAIRMAN. A pamphlet printed by whom or by whose authority?

Mr. KNOWLES. By the military government.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, well, that ought to be available.

Mr. KNOWLES. Showing the estimate of the different public works that proposed to construct and the amount of the total cost and the particulars of each one of the projects.

Mr. HOWE. Is that the one [showing Mr. Knowles a pamphlet]?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; it is not that.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, what you want is the information that is contained in that pamphlet?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; or the pamphlet, if it is available.

Mr. HOWE. The point is, Mr. Chairman, there have been several projects of public works.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you give a little more definite description? Commander Lake says he does not recognize it from your description.

Mr. KNOWLES. This is an official publication, something about the size of one that Mr. Howe just held up to me that contains among other things a report of the commission on claims, the total amount of the claims, the amount that the committee agreed to pay, and how the payment was made. Some in bonds and some in cash.

Senator JONES. That is all in this report [indicating a pamphlet].

Senator POMERENE. Is this the report that you had in mind?

Mr. KNOWLES. That is not the report I refer to.

Senator JONES. Well, it contains the information you refer to.

Mr. KNOWLES. In addition, that pamphlet contains, which this does not, a page long of some 30 or 40 different buildings that it is proposed to build and the estimated cost of those buildings.

Mr. HOWE. All in one pamphlet?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; all in one pamphlet.

The CHAIRMAN. All right. The commander will look that up, and he will inform the committee tentatively that it may take some little time to get some information.

Mr. KNOWLES. I understand. I don't expect it immediately. As soon as we can get it.

Senator JONES. Is that what you want on that page [indicating]?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator JONES. "The history of the public debt," as appears in the report of the department of state of finance and commerce of the Dominican Republic for the period of 1916 to 1919, inclusive, and estimates for 1920 submitted by Arthur H. Mayo, and on pages 59, 60, and 61, the list of the actual and prospective expenditures appear, and also on pages 53, 54, 55, and 56.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that these portions to which Senator Jones has referred and which are parts which Mr. Knowles wanted introduced in the record will be introduced here tentatively, with this reservation.

er Senator McCormick comes here I think we may introduce the whole record, that if that is done we will introduce the whole record at this point, instead of the particular parts to which you refer. My own judgment is that the whole report will be of interest to those who are investigating the subject. I think we might just as well dispose of this now, and we will introduce this report of the department of state of finance and commerce of the Dominican Republic for the period of 1916 to 1918, inclusive, and estimates for 1920, submitted by Arthur H. Mayo, lieutenant commander of Supply Corps, United States Navy, the officer administering the affairs of the department of state of finance and commerce for the military government. And you can furnish a stenographer with another copy of this. I want to keep this.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have a copy of that, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. I want to keep this for my own record.

Mr. HOWE. Then, Mr. Chairman, it may very well be that the report for the coming year should be presented and introduced here.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I think that is proper.

Mr. HOWE. Because in that report the project was changed.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is that in pamphlet form, Mr. Howe?

Mr. HOWE. I believe so.

Senator JONES. Yes; it is in pamphlet form.

The CHAIRMAN. Then furnish Mr. Knowles with a copy of that. Now, we are ready to proceed.

Now, Mr. Knowles, for the advice of the committee have you in mind now any other special parts of this report to which you wish to direct the attention of the committee?

Mr. KNOWLES. No other part, Senator.

The document directed to be introduced in the record at this point is as follows:)

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF STATE OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE OF THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC FOR THE PERIOD 1916 TO 1918, INCLUSIVE, AND ESTIMATES FOR 1920.

Submitted by Arthur H. Mayo, lieutenant commander, Supply Corps, United States Navy, the officer administering the affairs of the Department of State of Finance and Commerce for the military government.]

SANTO DOMINGO CITY, R. D., November 30, 1920.

MILITARY GOVERNOR OF SANTO DOMINGO,

Santo Domingo City, R. D.

INTRODUCTION: As an introduction to this report it seems fitting that a brief record should be made of the causes leading up to the intervention of the United States in Santo Domingo.

Disturbed political conditions in the Dominican Republic created debts and claims against the Government amounting in 1907 to over $30,000,000. These debts and claims were a burden to the country and a barrier to progress. The Republic effected a conditional adjustment under which the total sum payable amounted to not more than $17,000,000. Part of the plan of settlement was the issue and sale of bonds to the amount of $20,000,000, of which that part not required for the settlement of claims was to be devoted to the purchase of public concessions and to public works. The plan was conditional upon the assistance of the United States in the collection of the customs revenues of the Republic, and the Dominican Republic requested the United States to give assistance. This the United States consented to do, and in pursuance of the consent the American-Dominican convention of 1907 was entered into. Under this convention bonds to the face value of $20,000,000 were issued in 1908 and the service of the 1908 loan has proceeded regularly and without interruption. In the year 1912 the United States Government consented to an increase of Dominican public debt by $1,500,000, and the Dominican Republic contracted an amount secured by the customs receipts, subject only to the prior payment of the 1908 bonds. This loan was finally paid off in 1917.

Meanwhile the contracting of new indebtedness by the Dominican Government, without the consent of the United States, went on rapidly until the debts and claims against the Government aggregated over $15,000,000. In a great measure the new indebtedness was due to the political disturbances and revolutions which were of continual occurrence in the Republic. In June, 1916, during a period of revolt and particularly unfortunate financial management, the American Government took action to establish order.

The control of the finances was taken over temporarily by the general receiver of Dominican customs. A special deputy general receiver was appointed—James Horton Edwards—and placed in direct charge of the contaduría de hacienda. This official, with three American assistants, immediately commenced work in an endeavor to bring order out of chaos and to do away with the thousands of accumulated accounts which the creditors of the Government were loudly demanding be paid. The cash balance of the Government in June, 1916, was $14,234.63 minus, and supply bills and salaries unpaid for many months. Orderly government had been broken down in time and the morale of the employees of the Government, who had not been paid for months, was very low. Fraud against the revenues of the Government had for some time flourished without fear of either detection or punishment.

The financial system of the Government was disorganized. The collection of the internal revenue was irregular and only a fraction of what was due to the Government ever reached the national treasury. There was no effective check on disbursements, and while a budget system existed, the provisions of the budget received little attention and were only adhered to in so far as convenient to do so.

The immediate problem confronting the United States officials in charge of the finances was to sift the legitimate pending current accounts from the fraudulent ones. The difficulties attending this task will be realized when borne in mind that the frequent and violent changes in Government had led the people in general to believe that there was little wrong in defrauding the Government. Public office was considered more in the light of a license to take tribute from the national funds than as a sacred trust. In fact, the salaries paid to officials were so low as to almost make imperative the augmentation of their salaries by any means available. Pay rolls of a dozen or more were presented with unmistakable evidence of having been prepared and signed by one man who had attempted to simulate the handwriting of a dozen or more men. Instances were found where officials duly certified their right to the salary of an office who had never been within 30 miles of their work or office. In some cases it was discovered that it was the custom of the heads of some offices to certify the salary of all the employees of the office and to pay the employees as they deemed necessary. Pay rolls were found pledged by the heads of offices to local speculators who had purchased them for trivial amounts. Accounts for supplies never delivered, yet certified to as correct by the heads of the country, were presented and the number of accounts in which quantities delivered had been raised were almost innumerable. Reparations and damages committed by Government and revolutionary troops in the wake of political disturbances amounted to a very considerable item. The general office of the Government did not and could not, under the lack of system, contain an accurate record of the finances. Attempts to audit and rectify them were found hopeless, and they were only useful in determining the amount of pending accounts. Even for that purpose they were found to be worthless as in many cases they had been deliberately falsified.

At first an attempt was made to pay current accounts where their necessity could be established, but on August 14, 1916, all payments were suspended for the time being.

PROCLAMATION OF MILITARY OCCUPATION.

On November 29, 1916, acting under the direction of the President of the United States, Capt. (now Rear Admiral) H. S. Knapp, United States Army, declared the Republic in a state of military occupation and subjected it to military government.

The proclamation of occupation was as follows:

"Whereas a treaty was concluded between the United States of America and the Republic of Santo Domingo on February 8, 1907, article 3 of which reads:

"Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the debt its public debt shall not be increased, except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States. A like agreement shall be necessary to modify the import duties, it being an indispensable condition for the modification of such duties that the Dominican Executive should recognize that the President of the United States recognize that on the exports and importations to the like amount and the like character as two years preceding that in which it is desired to make such modification."

at customs receipts would at such altered rates of duties have been for each such two years in excess of the sum of $2,000,000 United States gold.'

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has violated the said article 3 more than one occasion; and

"Whereas the Government of Santo Domingo has from time to time explained such violation by the necessity of incurring expense incident to the repression of revolution; and

"Whereas the United States Government, with great forbearance and with a friendly desire to enable Santo Domingo to maintain domestic tranquillity and observe the terms of the aforesaid treaty, has urged upon the Government of Santo Domingo certain necessary measures which that Government has been unwilling or unable to adopt; and

"Whereas in consequence domestic tranquillity has been disturbed and is not now established, nor is the future observance of the treaty by the Government of Santo Domingo assured; and

"Whereas the Government of the United States is determined that the time has come to take measures to insure the observance of the provisions of the aforesaid treaty by the Republic of Santo Domingo and to maintain the domestic tranquillity in the said Republic of Santo Domingo necessary thereto:

"Now, therefore, I, H. S. Knapp, captain, United States Navy, commanding the cruiser force of the United States Atlantic Fleet and the armed forces of the United States stationed in various places within the territory of the Republic of Santo Domingo, acting under the authority and by direction of the Government of the United States, declare and announce to all concerned that the Republic of Santo Domingo is hereby placed in a state of military occupation by the forces under my command and is made subject to military government and to the exercise of military law applicable to such occupation.

"This military occupation is undertaken with no immediate or ulterior object of destroying the sovereignty of the Republic of Santo Domingo, but, on the contrary, is designed to give aid to that country in returning to a condition of eternal order that will enable it to observe the terms of the treaty aforesaid and the obligations resting upon it as one of the family of nations.

"Dominican statutes, therefore, will continue in effect in so far as they do not conflict with the objects of the occupation or necessary regulations established thereunder, and their lawful administration will continue in the hands of such duly authorized Dominican officials as may be necessary, all under the oversight and control of the United States forces exercising military government.

"The ordinary administration of justice, both in civil and criminal matters, through the regularly constituted Dominican courts will not be interfered with by the military government herein established; but cases to which a member of the United States Forces in occupation is a party, or in which are involved contempt or defiance of the authority of the military government, will be tried in tribunals set up by the military government.

"All revenue accruing to the Dominican Government, including revenues thereto accrued and unpaid, whether from custom duties under the terms of a treaty concluded on February 8, 1907, the receivership established by which remains in effect, or from internal revenue, shall be paid to the military government herein established, which will, in trust for the Republic of Santo Domingo, hold such revenue and will make all the proper legal disbursements therefrom necessary for the administration of the Dominican Government and for the purposes of the occupation.

"I call upon the citizens of and residents and sojourners in Santo Domingo to cooperate with the forces of the United States in occupation to the end that the purposes thereof may promptly be attained, and that the country may be restored to domestic order and tranquillity, and to the prosperity that can be attained only under such conditions.

"The forces of the United States in occupation will act in accordance with the military law governing their conduct, with due respect for the personal and property rights of citizens of and residents and sojourners in Santo Domingo, holding Dominican laws in so far as they do not conflict with the purposes for which the occupation is undertaken.

H. S. KNAPP,

Captain, United States Navy,

Commander Cruiser Force, United States Atlantic Fleet.

U. S. S. 'OLYMPIA,' flagship,
Santo Domingo City, D. R., November 29, 1916."

It will be noted that this proclamation provided that:

"All revenue accruing to the Dominican Government, including revenue hitherto accrued and unpaid, whether from custom duties under the treaty concluded on February 8, 1907, the receivership established by the treaty remains in effect, or from internal revenue, shall be paid to the military government herein established which will, in trust for the Republic of Santo Domingo, hold such revenue and will make all the proper legal disbursements there necessary for the administration of the Dominican Government and for the purposes of the occupation."

On December 1, 1916, the military government resumed payments, because apparent at once that it would be impossible to meet the large amount of claims presented from current income.

By executive order No. 4, dated December 8, 1916, Paymaster I. T. Hagler (United States Navy (now Commander I. T. Hagner, Supply Corps, United States Navy) was appointed to administer the office of secretary of finance and commerce for the military government. The military government proceeded at once to reorganize the finances of the country. A new system of accounts was opened. The collection of internal revenue was placed under the direction of an American official—Mr. Walter M. St. Elmo—and a supply department was organized under the direction of Mr. John Loomis. Provision was made for an audit of accounts and an effective control over disbursements was put in effect.

By executive order No. 9, issued December 18, 1916, an auditing department was established for the purpose of auditing all revenue, disbursement and property accounts of the Dominican Government.

At the time the military government began it was the practice to require in payment of customs and other taxes certificates of indebtedness from former Dominican Governments when legally due accounts could not be paid in cash. In view of the imperative necessity of administering the affairs of the Dominican Republic under the military government and meeting its obligations from current income it became necessary to issue executive order No. 15, requiring that all revenues and income due to the Dominican Republic be paid in cash and that no document or evidence of indebtedness of any kind be received in lieu thereof. It was also ordered that no account, claim, or certificate antedating or originating before the establishment of military government be paid except duly authenticated salary claims for services rendered and for supplies actually furnished and covered by appropriations in the budget of 1916.

There had been during 1916 such an extensive business conducted by speculators and others in loaning money on prospective salaries of officers and employees, and these speculators had become so insistent in their demands against the Government for the payment to them of the salaries of the officers and officials that it became necessary for the military governor to dictate executive order No. 16, to the effect that the departments of the Government were not and would not be regarded as collecting agencies for debts against individuals and inviting attention to the fact that the remedy of creditors against personal indebtedness lay in the ordinary process of law. It was plainly evident that the Government did not condone the nonsettlement of indebtedness by its employees and that evidence of such nonsettlement might, in the discretion of the Government, suffice to cause the removal of offenders.

The military government having been in effect but a short time and no recent data being available to render the preparation of a new budget for the year 1917 practicable, executive order No. 17 was enacted and by it the budget for the year 1916 was ordered continued in force for the year 1917 until it should be practicable to prepare a new budget. This in effect the enacting of the appropriations in the same amount and for the same purpose for 1917 as had been in force for 1916.

Effective February 1, 1917, the duties and functions of the commanders of the ports were transferred from the department of war and marine to the department of finance and commerce and the deputy receivers of customs were put in charge of the duties which had formerly been performed by the mandancias de puertos. This change was inaugurated by executive order No. 18, dated January 8, 1917, and effected the centralization of responsibility for the handling of shipping and of port facilities, which rendered an improvement in port conditions practicable.

There being insufficient shipping under the Dominican flag to carry the coastwise trade of the Republic, by executive order No. 22, dated January 15, 1917, 917. foreign vessels of any nation were permitted to engage in coastwise trade between Dominican ports subject to regulations to be issued by the general receiver of Dominican customs. This facilitated commerce.

As has been mentioned above various claims were being presented to the military government for payment based on services rendered, materials supplied or funds loaned to the Dominican Government for purposes of an extraordinary nature, and which were not specifically provided for by any article of the budget. Such claims and pending accounts constituted part of the floating indebtedness of the Dominican Republic incurred without the consent of the United States required by the American Dominican convention of 1907. It was decided that all such claims and accounts should be placed in a class of claims reserved for future adjustment, and provision was made by executive order 32, dated 30 February, 1917, for acknowledgment and registration by the contaduría general de hacienda.

One of the troublesome matters which arose at this time was that frequently more than one person held appointment to the same office, and in some cases those holding appointment had never officially been to their offices or rendered any service, yet they demanded their salaries on the ground that an appointment entitled them to a salary no matter whether they had rendered any services or not. This class of appointment holders was so persistent in urging its claims, that it became necessary to enact executive order No. 34, dated 3 February, 1917, serving notice that the possession of an appointment did not in any sense imply a right to the salary corresponding to an office unless the appointee had actually occupied such position and performed the duties hereof; and advising that vouchers covering same might legally and honestly be certified to for the payment of salary only in accordance with the above. It was also necessary to set forth in this order that the amounts appropriated for the purchase of supplies or for defraying expenses in connection with the performance of official duties were in no sense perquisites of an office nor a part of the salaries of such officials to whose office the allowances pertained. This order declared it to be an infraction of law to sign any false receipt or certify any rolls or other documents or in any manner attempt to collect or procure the collection of an improper or fraudulent account against the Dominican Government, either for services rendered or materials or funds alleged to have been furnished and placed a penalty of a fine of from $100 to $1,000 or imprisonment for from one month to one year for any violation of the terms of this order. This law had a very salutary effect. It had the immediate effect of deterring the unscrupulous from manufacturing false claims and, although it has been violated on a few occasions, there is no doubt that it materially reduced the number of fraud against the revenues.

The next important step taken in the form of legislation affecting this department particularly was executive order No. 36, dated 23 of February, 1917, which provided that no material, supplies, or property should be purchased, or indebtedness of any kind incurred for the account of the Dominican Government by any officer or employee, except upon formal authorization of the officer administering the department of finance and commerce. In the past almost any official of the Government would, if he chose order supplies for his account of the Government. Such a practice resulted in the creation of needless indebtedness, and as no records of the property purchased were maintained and no accountability required for the same, though typewriters and office equipment and materials of kinds were being purchased continuously, at least 80 per cent of the public offices were either without any furniture or equipment at all or with but a table or desk or two and a few miserable chairs. It seems to have been the practice to procure equipment by purchase for the Government's account only to sell it out of the back door of the office for the private account of some individual officeholder. Officials collecting revenues frequently paid for supplies ordered by them but never delivered, from revenues collected, deducting the said payments and depositing in the treasury the balance only. The enactment of executive order No. 36 stopped a practice which had undoubtedly cost the Dominican Government many thousands of dollars. At the same time a system of property accountability was placed in effect and it was provided that unexpendable property could only be disposed of upon recommendation of a board of survey. The supply division of this department will be treated of further in a separate section of the report.

Under executive order 42, dated 17th of March, 1917, the International Banking Corporation, of New York City, was appointed depository of funds for the Dominican Government, and the officer administering the affairs of the department of finance and commerce was authorized to execute the necessary work to establish the respective rights, obligations, and duties of the contracting parties.

A special tribunal, to be known as the Dominican claims commission of 1917, was created for the purpose of settling outstanding claims against the Dominican Republic which had their origin after the adjustment made to conform to the terms of the American Dominican convention of 1907 and before the establishment of the military government by the United States under the provision of November 29, 1916, and of making an estimate of the amount due to the claimant, and for the purpose of recommending ways and means for the settlement of these claims. This commission was composed of the following members:

Mr. J. H. Edwards, president.

Lieut. Col. J. T. Bootes, United States Marine Corps.

Mr. M. de J. Troncoso de la Concha.

Mr. Emilio Joubert.

Mr. Martin Travieso, jr.

On June 8, 1919, Lieut. Commander Ralph Whitman replaced Col. Bootes as a member of the claims commission, Col. Bootes having been ordered to return to the United States.

Mr. John Brewer was named to succeed Mr. Martin Travieso, jr., who resigned effective November 29, 1919.

This commission was created on the 26th of June, 1917, by executive order No. 60. By executive order No. 65, dated July 9, 1917, the powers of the commission, and its duties were set forth. Executive orders Nos. 77 and 169, issued at various periods, amplified the powers of the claims commission.

By the middle of 1918 the claims commission had rendered a preliminary report to the military governor covering the claims presented for registration but not yet adjudicated, showing that more than 8,800 claims had been presented, representing a face value of $15,000,000. The commission expressed the opinion that many of the claims would not be sufficiently substantiated to warrant payment of the full face value as claimed, and that in all probability the amount required to liquidate the awards would be much less than the value of the claims presented.

The consent of the Government of the United States, required by the terms of the American Dominican convention of February 8, 1907, for the increase of the financial debt of the Dominican Republic, was obtained, and executive order No. 193, dated August 2, 1918, provided that all awards made by the Dominican claims commission of 1917 should be paid in bonds of the Dominican Republic at par, provided, however, that all fractional amounts of such awards in excess of $50 should be paid in cash. This measure was necessary, due to the abnormal conditions existing in the financial centers of the world and to the impracticability of negotiating a foreign loan at this time for the purpose of providing for the payment in cash of the said awards. For the payment of interest on said bonds and of the principal the good faith of the Dominican Republic was irrevocably pledged, and it was ordered that the obligations created should not be impaired by any law or decree which the Government of the Dominican Republic or any other authority thereof might subsequently enact or issue, or by any interpretation thereof, or by any interpretation of any law or decree heretofore enacted or issued, but said bonds, when duly issued, should constitute a legal and binding obligation of the Government of the Dominican Republic until properly redeemed and paid. The necessary amounts for the payment of the amortization and interest were pledged from the customs receipts of the Dominican Republic as an additional charge upon the customs revenues after their application to the first four objects designated in Article I of the American Dominican convention of 1907 and before any amount from the customs receipts could be made to the Dominican Government. The general receiver of Dominican customs was authorized to make the necessary deductions and to pay same to the International Banking Corporation, New York, the fiscal agents of the bond issue.

Certain bankers and others who deal in such securities expressed the opinion that there was a possibility of the termination of the American Dominican convention of 1907 before the retirement of all the bonds of 1918, issued under the provisions of executive order 193, above mentioned, and the termination thus raised affected adversely the market value of the said bonds, increasing the possibility of the termination of the said American Dominican convention before the redemption of all the bonds of the 1918 issue, which was wholly dependent upon the amount of customs revenues collected, and consequently the value which additional amounts are applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds first issued in 1908, it became advisable and necessary to provide for additional payments for account of the amortization fund for the redemption of the 1918 bonds in order that the market value of the said bonds might be maintained on a parity with the bonds of 1908. Therefore by executive order 272, dated March 31, 1919, additional amortization to the extent of 60 per cent of the one-half of the surplus above $3,000,000 of customs revenues from imports and exports collected by the general receiver of Dominican customs, which would otherwise accrue to the Dominican Government, was made applicable to the purchase and retirement of the 1918 bonds, and the general receiver of Dominican customs was authorized to make the necessary segregations and payments to the fiscal agents of the loan.

This department has constantly endeavored to assist claimants to whom bonds of the 1918 issue were awarded to market their bonds and in 1919 entered into a contract with the Fletcher American Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., for the purchase and resale of these bonds. Bonds of the par value of approximately $1,000,000 were delivered to the Fletcher American Co. on this contract. The Dominican Claims Commission had expected to complete the adjudication of the claims before it by December 31, 1919, and the contract with the Fletcher American Co. had therefore been so worded as to require delivery of such bonds as they were obligated to purchase by January 31, 1920. The claims commission was not successful in completing its work in time to permit of such delivery, and as in the meantime the bond market in the United States had been depressed to such an extent that these bonds could not be successfully marketed in the United States at a reasonable price, the Fletcher American Co. declined to renew their contract. At the date of writing this report conditions have improved considerably and during the past month or two it has been possible to remarket a considerable quantity of bonds in the United States.

The Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 completed the settlement of the existing debt of the republic in August of this year. Inasmuch as there were approximately 9,000 claims filed and as the records of the treasury were inaccurate, involved, and in some cases had been falsified, it is easy to imagine a tremendous amount of work involved. A résumé of the work just finished by the claims commission is given below:

FIDELITY FUND.

Because of the fact that employees of the Government had not proved themselves to be entirely worthy of trust in the past it was an impossibility for them to obtain fidelity bonds from any reliable bonding companies. It seemed expedient to arrange some method for the bonding of all Government officials occupying positions requiring the handling of funds or property. There was therefore established under the terms of executive order No. 88, issued the 27th of October, 1917, a fidelity fund of $100,000 and it was required that every person, officer, or employee handling public funds, or who was responsible for the custody or safe-keeping of public property, should give bond under this fund for the faithful performance of his duties. The premium for this was fixed at three-fourths of one per cent per annum; two-thirds of the premium to be paid by the Government and one-third to be withheld from the salary of the bonded officer or employee. It was provided that all claims against the fidelity fund should be prepared and certified to by the Encargado de la Contaduría General de Hacienda and forwarded together with evidence relating thereto to the secretary of finance and commerce. Upon approval by the secretary of finance and commerce and by the executive the claim would then become a legal claim against the fidelity fund and the necessary amount paid to the account from which the loss or defalcation occurred. This plan has so far worked successfully and, while there have been a number of losses, the premiums paid by the employees have covered the losses to date. There is at present pending a case which may result in the first appreciable loss to this fund. The employee guilty of embezzlement in a case committed suicide when detection became a certainty. It has been found, however, only by requiring a regular and frequent inspection of accounts that losses have been avoided. While this inspection has effected good results in the case of National Government funds, there are only too frequent occurrences where inspectors find that municipal treasurers have misappropriated funds belonging to the municipalities and in their care.

The conservative policy maintained resulted in the accumulation of a surplus of 1919 of $3,270,203.97, from which it has been practicable to make special appropriations for public works totaling $3,270,203.97. These appropriations have been used for the building of roads, schools, public buildings, and for port improvements. Every effort is being bent to the prompt completion of the roads, which will open up and permit of the development of the interior. When it is remembered that when the United States intervened in the finances of the Dominican Republic the treasury balance was minus $14,234.63 and that current salaries and bills had been unpaid for six months, the effect of the change in the management of the finances is made clear. At the second Pan-American financial convention held at Washington, D. C., in January, 1920, at which the Dominican Republic had the honor of representing the Dominican Republic, the conference committee from the Dominican Republic, composed of bankers, economists, and business men of large affairs, in its resolutions stated that from a study of the financial condition and information supplied by the official delegation that it had been established that:

"(a) That the financial condition of the Dominican Republic as a result of the currency reforms and fiscal system described in the annexed report is excellent and that the finances are established on a sound basis which will permit the further growth and development of the Republic," and resolved

"(1) That this committee takes pleasure in endorsing the policy pursued and at present pursued in establishing currency reform and a fiscal system which has resulted in the present satisfactory financial condition of the Dominican Republic and which will permit of the further growth and development of the Dominican Republic's resources."

REVENUE LAWS.

very effort was made beginning at an early period of the military government to insure that all revenue of every nature reached the national treasury; guard expenditures and to prevent illegal incurring of indebtedness. Administrative audit regulations Nos. 1 to 7 were issued during this period, as also Executive Order No. 89, dated October 29, 1917. These orders and regulations dealt mainly with the depositing of collections; the accountability funds and property; the inspection of accounts and their audit.

he one certain source of income at the time that the military government established was the customs revenues which had, under the American dominican convention of 1907, been collected by a general receiver of Dominican customs appointed by the President of the United States. Under honest control collections of this revenue had increased from $2,500,000 in 1905 to $4,000,000 in 1916. The internal revenues had not been efficiently administered, however, those charged with their collection were careless and negligent in requiring compliance with the laws. While the general laws affecting the internal revenue had some good points, in other particulars they were bad and all of them had been poorly enforced because of the almost impossibility of punishing offenders against the law and because in many cases the officials charged with the collections either because of friendship or through bribery winked at violation of the law. The internal revenue taxes were therefore made a subject of study with the object of replacing them by laws which would insure the taxes due to the Government would be collected and would find their way to the national treasury without deduction of any nature. Mr. Walter St. John did excellent work in the drafting of the new measure, which was placed in effect. Prof. Fred R. Fairchild, of Yale University, was also called into consultation by the Military government, and under date of January 26, 1918, rendered a comprehensive report covering the existing sources of revenues and making recommendations in regard to such changes as appeared to him to be necessary and practicable. The chief sources from which internal revenue was derived were the following: Papel sellado, estampillas, sellos de correos, derechos consularios, muelles de Estado, alcoholes, radio and telephone charges, derechos de registro, arrendamientos, marcas de fabrica.

Executive Order No. 158, enacted a new ley de patentes, the product of which was to support public education, and under Executive Order No. 197, dated August 19, 1918, a new general internal revenue law was enacted.

Executive Order No. 282 of April 10, 1919, placed in effect in the Dominican Republic for the first time a direct tax on property. This latter order has been amended in such manner as to make it more equitable and just and such changes as were found expedient after a year of operation. The section of internal revenue will be treated of somewhat more in detail in a subsequent section of this report.

WHARFAGE AND STORAGE CHARGES.

Early in 1918 it became advisable to revise the tariff of wharfage and storage charges. This was accomplished by Executive Order No. 139 of February 16, 1918, which provided a schedule for wharfage dues and charges and placed the collection of the same under the several interventores de aduana requiring them to account for and remit all funds collected to the aduana general de hacienda. The administration and control of the wharves, warehouses, and customs premises, including the necessary police power, also vested in the interventores de aduana. The general receiver of customs was given authority by this order to arrange by contract with reliable individuals and firms for the lighterage and handling of goods on wharf and to fix the rates to be charged by the contractor for such services. This department has in course of preparation an executive order modifying the mentioned and exempting from wharfage dues all articles either imported or shipped from wharves not owned by the Government. It is held by this department that inasmuch as no service is rendered by the Government in such cases, no charge should be made.

SALE AND TRANSFER OF VESSELS.

Under Executive Order No. 140 it was prescribed that no vessel registered and licensed under Dominican law, should be sold or transferred without the permission of the Military government in each individual case. A violation of the order was made subject to a fine of not more than $200,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, and vessels sold or transferred in violation of the order were made subject to confiscation. This order was enacted March 22, 1918, and made effective immediately. The order has been successful and no violations thereof have come to the attention of this department.

REGISTRATION OF TITLES UNDER EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 203.

There have been registered in this department under the provisions of Executive Order No. 203 to November 1, 1920, 523 titles recording legal sales of land from the Government to those persons who were entitled to titles who were able to prove that they had fully complied with the requirements of the said executive order and the decrees of the Dominican Government which the said order was based.

DOMINICAN SURVEY FUND.

By executive order No. 207, dated September 12, 1918, the sum of $1,000,000 was set aside as the "Dominican survey fund" to provide for a topographical survey, with triangulation control, of the Dominican Republic and of its natural resources. The survey is being made by the Geological Survey of the United States, and to December 31, 1919, expenditures to the amount of $80,487.92 had been made from this fund. The cost of the work according to date indicates that the appropriation of $900,000 will be insufficient to provide for the completion of the work, and it is believed that an additional appropriation of $200,000 will be necessary to carry the work through to its completion. The present funds will cover all expenditures during 1920 and however, the matter of additional appropriations will be taken up at a later date but in ample time to insure that there will be no interruption or delay in the completion of the survey.

LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES.

In order to encourage the municipalities of the Republic to undertake works which would improve the living conditions of the people and promote health, comfort, and convenience, the military government, by Executive Order No. 208, dated September 12, 1918, authorized loans to ayuntamientos of not over $500,000, the individual municipality being limited to $50,000.

one time. It was required that the principal of such loans made be liquidated by a fixed number of equal payments to be determined by the executive through this department, but in no case to be less than 5 per cent of the principal. The rate of interest was to be determined in like manner, but in no case was the rate of interest to be less than 5 per cent. The interest and liquidation charges were made a first lien upon the revenues of the municipality. In order that the Government might be thoroughly protected it was provided that the financial affairs of any municipality should, during the existence of a loan contracted by it under the provisions of the above order, be subject to inspection and audit at any time by agents of the National Government, and that should occasion arise, in the discretion of the executive, the financial affairs of the municipality should be subject to control and actual administration by an agent of the National Government. It was further provided that contracts for works for public utilities constructed from loans received from loans made under this order should be subject to the approval of the secretary of fomento y comunicaciones. This order has been issued by Executive Order No. 439, dated the 27th of March, 1920, which set the limit of the total of such loans to $1,000,000 and provided that the loans should not exceed the following amounts:

Municipalities having a population of—
10,000 or less.....	$50,000
10,000 to 15,000.....	75,000
15,000 to 25,000.....	100,000
25,000 or over.....	200,000

Loans made under the provisions of these two orders up to the time of this report are as follows:

Loans to municipalities for public works.

ELIMINATION OF CUSTOMS SEIZURES ON TECHNICALITIES.

Under the Dominican law the proceeds of sales and fines arising from violations of the provisions of the law of customs and ports were distributed among the customs employees and others who detected the said violations. The law of customs and ports was very strict in its requirements, and made liable to seizure even though it were plainly evident that such errors were not made from any intent to violate the law or evade the payment of customs charges. This system, while putting the employees of the customs on their inquiry for violations of the law, resulted in a great deal of injustice being done under cover of the law, since the merest technicalities invoked for seizure of goods and the application of fines. This condition was so bad as to discourage exporters in foreign countries from doing business in the Dominican Republic, many exporters preferring to pass up the losses rather than run the risks of losses by seizure of goods and fines. There had been no intent to defraud the revenues. To correct this situation, Executive Order No. 218, dated the 3d of October, 1918, was issued, amending articles 176 and 180 of the law of customs and ports. This amendment, while clearly defining under what circumstances merchandise could be seized and fines applied, also provided that the proceeds of such sales and fines should be paid to the Government; that no part thereof or other compensation should be paid to informers or other persons who seized or caused to be seized merchandise under the provisions of the order. This amendment has thus eliminated the cases of injustice, and now where simple and evident violations are made the customs authorities are able to waive same, or if it seems necessary assess merely a nominal fine.

LIEUT. COMMANDER I. T. HAGNER BY LIEUT. COMMANDER ARTHUR H. MAYO.

Under date of October 15, 1918, and under authority of executive order No. 1, Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo, Supply Corps, United States Navy, was temporarily relieved Commander I. T. Hagner, Supply Corps, United States

Navy, of the duties of the administration of the affairs of this department. Commander Hagner returned to the Republic on December 4, 1918, and date resumed his duties in this department. He was permanently relieved Lieut. Commander Mayo on February 5, 1919, under authority of Executive Order No. 253, who still has the honor to administer this department.

NEW CUSTOMS TARIFF.

By executive order No. 207, dated September 12, 1918, a commission composed of the following gentlemen was appointed to prepare a revision of Dominican customs tariff:

Mr. J. H. Edwards, special deputy general receiver of customs, president Alfredo Ricart y O., president of the chamber of commerce, Santo Domingo; Mr. R. H. Vorfeld, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. Julio Senior, special customs receiver; Mr. R. Aburquerque, interventor de aduana, Santo Domingo; Mr. L. E. Lavandier, official translator, customs receivership.

The commission made a very careful study of the tariff in force at the time and of the changes desirable, and on July 21, 1919, rendered a preliminary report of a comprehensive nature, discussing in the said report the requirements of the Government; the advisability of reductions and curtailments in revenues other than customs duties; the advisability of the addition of certain groups of imports to the free list; tonnage and wharfage dues; the reduction of storage charges; stamps on customs documents; the condition of export duties; protection to Dominican industries and to Dominican culture; the possibility of quasi reciprocity with the United States; transportation to and within the Dominican Republic; the project of a free zone in Samana Bay; and the extension of bonded-warehouse facilities. This report also outlined in general the plan which the commission recommended be followed in the preparation of a new tariff.

The recommendation of the tariff commission was approved by the governor, and the preparation of the new tariff was proceeded with. Completion of the tariff, as required by the American-Dominican convention, the consent of the United States Government was secured and the tariff placed in effect on January 1, 1920, by Executive Order No. 322. Under the new tariff transportation media, agricultural machinery and tools, industrial machinery, building material, and in general all articles necessary for the development of the Republic were placed upon the free list. The rates of duty were reduced on articles of necessity where the reduction would assist in the cost of living.

That this action has been for the best interests of the country, when it is known that it has resulted in an increase in importations. In the first five months of its operation amounting in tons of cargo imported to 70 per cent, while following the rule of tariff revision the increase in importations even at the reduced rates has resulted in record collections. The customs collections under this tariff from January 1 to December 30 are given below, together with the collections for the corresponding months of the previous year under the old tariff.

Comparative statement, by months, of the customs collections for 1919, and 1920.

The president and members of the tariff commission deserve the gratitude the Republic for their careful, conscientious, and valuable work in the preparation of the tariff.

DEPOSITARIES FOR GOVERNMENT FUNDS.

Under Executive Order No. 292, dated May 12, 1919, it was provided that government funds may be deposited in such bank or banks as may be designated in writing by the officer administering the affairs of the department of finance and commerce. This order also provided for the deposit of bonds of the Government of the Dominican Republic or of the Government of the United States of America as security for deposits. Bonds to an amount equal or exceeding at par value of 25 per cent of the amount of any deposit were required and also that all funds of the Dominican Government or of the municipalities intrusted to or collected by the municipalities should be deposited only in such banks as may have been designated as a Government depositary under the terms of the order. To date the following banks have been designated as depositaries for Government funds: International Banking Corporation, American Foreign Banking Corporation, and the Banco Territorial y Agrícola de Puerto Rico.

ADDITIONAL FUNDS FOR THE MUNICIPALITIES.

On the 15th of February, 1920, by Executive Order No. 402, additional funds amounting to $250,000 annually were provided to be paid the several comunes in proportion to the proportion which the collections under the tax on patentes in common for the preceding calendar year bears to the total collection of patentes of the Republic for the same year. Under this order the ayuntamientos of each municipality are required to submit their budgets to the secretary of interior and police for approval, who takes such action thereon as he deems advisable after reference to the secretary of finance and commerce for comment and recommendation. Provision was also made for the rendition of accounts of the comunes to the contador general de hacienda. In the event of failure to comply with the above provision, payments to the comunes may be withheld. It is believed that this order will have a good effect on the municipal treasurers and will lead to better methods of collection, disbursement, and accounting for the funds with which they are intrusted.

To provide the funds to be appropriated to the comunes under Executive Order No. 402, commented on above, an additional tax was placed upon alcohol and manufactures of tobacco by Executive Order No. 403.

Executive Order No. 413, issued February 28, 1920, provided that the remaindances of public instruction funds for the year 1919 should be deposited in the municipal treasurers in the national treasury in a special account to be called "Balances of public instruction funds for 1919," the said funds to be subject to appropriation by the Executive power upon recommendation of the secretary of justice and public instruction, for the purpose of providing schools in those comunes in greatest need thereof.

FUNDS FOR BENEFICENCE.

Executive order No. 496, amending executive orders No. 420 and No. 466, relating to lotteries conducted for charitable purposes, it was prescribed that in the event that it should become necessary to revoke the permit granted to a person or persons to conduct a lottery in the Dominican Republic the executive power might at its option continue the operation of the lottery through the agency of the secretary of finance and commerce. It was soon necessary to institute the prescriptions of this order and this department is at present conducting the lotería benéfica. The sums due to the beneficence fund and to the municipalities as well as all prizes have been regularly paid and the administration of the lottery is being efficiently conducted and at a cost considerably less than the allowance for administration purposes. Such balance as may exist in the administration fund at the end of the year will be deposited in the beneficence fund and used for the upkeep of hospitals, insane asylums, and other charitable institutions. The conduct of the lottery by this department has met with the approval of the people in general who have shown their confidence in its management and in the safeguards provided by the Government by purchasing all tickets available. The demand for tickets has been so great that it is proposed to increase the number from 15,000 to 20,000 on January 1, 1920. The additional revenue thus made available for beneficence purposes permit that very helpful work to go forward more expeditiously with the greater good to the people of the Republic in need of the assistance by the institutions maintained from this fund.

LAW OF EMINENT DOMAIN.

Under executive order No. 480, dated May 20, 1920, the law of eminent domain was enacted. This law has assisted this department in securing land needed for public purposes with a minimum of delay. It provides for the expropriation of values in an equitable and just manner.

LAW OF PENSIONS.

The law of pensions was enacted by executive order No. 456, dated April 1, 1920. The benefits of this law accrue to every officer and employee of the Dominican Republic, including all persons paid from the national treasury who at the time of applying therefor have the following qualifications:

(a) Twenty years' Government service; service after the 1st day of January, 1917, to have been continuous.

(b) Sixty years old, or shall have suffered physical disability incurred as an officer or employee of the Government which render him physically unable to perform the duties of the position.

(c) Shall have been a Dominican citizen for at least 10 years. Civilian employees retired under the operation of this law receive one-half of the compensation of the position from which retired.

Members of the navy and military forces of the Republic receive three-fourths of the compensation which they received at the time of retirement.

DISBURSING SECTION.

A disbursing section was established in the contaduría general de hacienda shortly after the advent of the military government. It was essential that disbursements be legally made and be free from even a suspicion of irregularity. The centralization of this work in one office was decided upon only after a careful study of the subject, and it was adopted in the beginning with the rule that all revenues be deposited immediately upon collection in the Government depository and that all payments for salaries or materials would be made by official check drawn after the preparation and proper verification of voucher and bearing a notation on the face of the official check of the object for which it was drawn and the appropriation chargeable.

At first, to prevent the pledging of salary vouchers by officials with creditors in Government accounts, only nonnegotiable checks were issued by the Government, but after a lapse of two years the old pernicious practice was passed and it became possible for the convenience of the Government to resume the issue of negotiable Government checks.

The disbursing section does not handle one cent of actual cash. All payments on the Government depository are met by funds transferred daily on the books of the depository from the general account to a special disbursement account. The amount of the disbursement is recorded on the books of the depository in an amount equal to the checks issued. This is done by transfer of the amount approved daily by the contador general de hacienda.

The disbursing section has since its organization paid out more than $1,000,000 by checks without a single loss. The personnel of this section consists of 10 employees by whom an average of 4,000 payments are recorded monthly. While the section was at first in charge of an important part of the Government work, for some time only Dominicans have been employed by it, and it is what may be accomplished by training in careful and accurate habits and by an adequate and carefully guarded system.

SECTION OF BOOKKEEPING AND ACCOUNTS.

This section had to be reorganized and a new and modern system installed. A complete new set of books were opened. An effort was made to accomplish the work with the Dominican personnel found in the Government. The bookkeepers were not competent, however, nor were any Dominican bookkeepers to be obtained, as the books kept in the hands of ments in the country have been of the simplest kind and no trained accountants have been developed. As the activities of the Government increased, accurate accounting data became a necessity, it was found wise to place an American accountant in charge. The books are now intelligible and show a record of the Government's transactions in simple but complete form. The section is gradually developing a set of competent bookkeepers, but the changes in personnel are frequent, due to the fact that bookkeepers trained in this section find little difficulty in obtaining employment in the growing private business in Santo Domingo city. Until many more bookkeepers have been employed in the Republic there will be great difficulty in obtaining a thoroughly trained, competent personnel. Taking into consideration the difficulties encountered, the section is doing excellent work and the improvement in the books of the Government is quite noteworthy.

This section serves as an efficient check on the disbursing section, and errors in payment or classification of accounts would be discovered immediately by bookkeepers since the entries in the general cash book of the Government are based on the vouchers forwarded from the disbursing section.

SUPPLY SECTION.

Earlier in this report reference has been made to the irregularities in common practice in the purchase of supplies and equipment and of the necessity for the organization of a supply section. Executive Order No. 36 placed the responsibility on this department for the purchase of all supplies and equipment for the entire Government, and in order that such purchases might be efficiently made it became necessary to organize the present supply section. Purchases in Santo Domingo are made direct by this section. Purchases in the United States are made through the Government purchasing agent, W. R. Grace & Co. under requisition issued by the supply section and in accordance with the regulations prescribed by it. All purchases, except those of a trivial nature, are made competitively by sealed offers with public opening, the award being given in each case to the lowest responsible bidder on material, conforming to the specifications set forth in the schedules issued by the supply section. The purchasing agent in New York is also required to make all purchases in similar manner, submitting for the approval of the chief of the supply section a complete file of all bids received on each purchase made. The services of the purchasing agent have been in the main satisfactory, and it is believed that the difficulty in securing supplies has not been due to want of zeal on the part of the purchasing agent, but rather to the unusual conditions existing in the industries in the United States, such as underproduction, strikes, and transportation troubles. The purchasing agent has an organization equal to or superior to any such house in the United States, and is equipped to handle business of any nature. They have shown a disposition to render as prompt and efficient a service as is physically possible and have at all times shown an earnest willingness to go out of their way to accommodate the Dominican Government.

When the supply section was first established, practically all Government supplies were possessed of very inadequate equipment, and as soon as funds became available requisitions were submitted, totaling to an amount which the treasury at that time could not have well borne. It became necessary for an officer in charge of the section of supplies to scrutinize carefully such requisitions, and he was given the authority to reduce all such requisitions to actual and necessary requirements of the offices submitting same. The supply section and the general supply account, established in connection therewith, have resulted in the necessity of carrying much smaller stocks of supplies for general issue than were each department to carry its own stock. Technical knowledge of stores and acquaintance with market conditions have prevented many unwise and unnecessary expenditures. It has been possible to standardize equipment in a much greater degree than would otherwise have been practicable. Considerable economies have been effected by purchase in large quantities where the nature of the material rendered same desirable, as served to simplify the accounting for Government property.

The supply section is also charged with the duty of maintaining a record of all equipment and unexpendable Government property in use in the several departments of the Government. Card records of same are maintained and an office is required to submit a semiannual inventory of articles actually on hand in the said office, expenditures only being permitted when a board of survey and appraisal have so recommended. Where equipment, when for further use in the Government service, still has a sale value, it is not that it be turned in to the supply section for public sale.

This section could be greatly assisted by the cooperation of the other departments since in view of the fact that the vast majority of supplies and equipment purchased must be purchased in the United States if it is to be obtained at a reasonable price, or, in many cases, if it is obtained at all, a reasonable amount of notice is necessary, and the foresight of departments in requisitioning for supplies frequently leads to ask impossibilities in the way of delivery or necessitates purchasing the local market at unnecessarily high prices. On such supplies as are by all departments, or continuously by any one department, the supply section will endeavor to keep an adequate stock on hand to fill the normal demand that is not possible in the case of special equipment.

The motto of the supply section is service and it is its desire to render departments the greatest degree of efficient service in its power.

The supply section occupies three warehouses, carries a large stock of standard supplies, such as cement, lumber, gasoline, drugs, and office supplies and equipment. It has two motor trucks and has recently moved its office building which has been reconstructed with a special view to its necessities.

SECTION OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

The old department of Alcoholes and Estampillas was reorganized and became known as the Dirección General de Rentas Internas. Attention at once turned toward improving the collection methods, the establishment of efficient safeguards to insure that revenues once collected would reach the treasury and also to insure that the revenue laws were applied equitably that the same interpretation was given in all parts of the Republic.

During the year of 1917 some measures were taken of a corrective nature to make the laws already existing more equitable and workable. Executive order No. 53, dated May 4, 1917, regulated the collection of consular fees. Executive order No. 64, dated July 3, 1917, regulated the matter of refunds of internal revenue taxes on goods exported. Executive order No. 68, dated August 1, 1917, regulated the collection of a tax on alcohol imported into the country. Executive order No. 69, dated August 2, 1917, regulated the collection of taxes on imported articles.

While these new regulations were being given a trial the operation of revenue laws existing was carefully watched and a study made as to the necessity for further legislation. Day by day it became more and more apparent that fraud on a large scale against the revenue was being committed. In July, 1917, the director general of internal revenue seized the books and records of the largest distillery in the Republic. Evidence was obtained of fraud in the books, where only a transparent effort to disguise it had been attempted. The seizure was so unexpected that no opportunity was given for the destruction of written evidence. Proceedings were at once instituted in the court, but the case was finally settled out of court by the payment of the distillery of the sum of $64,340.10. This case was typical of what was going on in the majority of distilleries in the Republic. Mechanics were installed in this distillery to measure accurately the alcohol produced, but the violator of the law had learned to cheat the meter. Mechanics, as they were at that time known, were employed by the Government to watch the meters, but no check was kept on the inspectors, and they were paid ridiculously low salaries, often as little as $25 a month, which forced them to accept bribes to wink at violations of the law.

It soon became clear that an entire revision of the laws of internal revenue was necessary as well as the building up of a corps of men subject to checks as would prevent collusion between them and the violator of the law. The preparation of a new law of internal revenue was commenced.

It was also determined to place a new license law in effect, and on November 27, 1917, by executive order No. 98, it was announced that a new law would go into effect on March 31, 1918. There was no intention of imposing new taxes, but the old tax law was to be rewritten, improved, revised and administered under a plan that would eliminate fraud. The tax collected was to be paid to the communal treasurers and set aside for their instruction. Enforcement of the old license law (ley de patentes) was to be in the hands of the local municipal governments. Due to poor methods practice of selling the right to collect taxes it was not a success. Of the taxes imposed and collected by the municipalities it is doubtful if more than 70 per cent of the taxes due and payable were ever collected, and in cases the cost of collection was enormously high, often reaching as much as 50 per cent. The license tax was collected in the same haphazard manner as the other taxes of the municipalities, and when the preparation of the new law was begun it was conservatively estimated that by centralizing collection under the National Government at least 30 per cent additional could be collected and that in addition the cost of collection would be very greatly lowered.

The best proof of the enforcement of a law and its proper administration is the result obtained. While exact figures are not available it is known that collections under this law, when entirely administered by the municipal government, did not amount to over $260,000. The collections since the promulgation of the new law have been as follows: 1918, $263,489.16 (part year); 1919, $630,306.25; 1920, $700,000 (estimated).

The ley de rentas internas, executive order No. 197, was issued on August 1918, only a few months subsequent to the license tax law. It took the place of the ley de alcoholes and the ley de estampillas. As indicated in the preceding paragraph the tax on alcohol had been poorly administered, but the abuses committed in the administration of the alcohol tax were far exceeded by illegal traffic in stamps and stamped paper. Government stamps and stamped paper had been used by the Government or by officials of the Government, to barter for the purpose of obtaining ready cash, and both were often used in large quantities at an almost ruinous discount. Officials of the Government frequently collected commissions on such sales. There was no efficient check to determine if stamps were used on documents as required by the law; therefore, the people were very lax on conforming to the requirements of the law.

Under the new law the former officials known as administradores de hacienda were made subject to the supervision of the director general of internal revenue and their title was changed to collectors of internal revenue. These officials as provincial collectors, as a basis, a corps of internal-revenue inspectors was built up and attached to the offices of the different cororias (collectors' offices) for convenience of administration. Directly under the contador general de hacienda were placed the special agents, five in number who were employed in checking up and inspecting the work of the collectors and collectors of internal revenue. A careful office inspection was also instituted of all reports of collections, and the records established soon were in such shape as to give warning if an inspector became lax in his work, and when it was found to be the case a special agent would immediately be sent to investigate the cause of the apparent falling off in collections. Special agents have authority to suspend collectors or inspectors if in their judgment it was necessary for the protection of the interests of the Government. That the system thus built up has proved efficient is evident when it becomes known that it has been necessary to prosecute but one inspector in the last year. The inspectors, 28 in number, are all Dominicans, very much better paid than heretofore, and when the temptations to which they are subject are considered they have made an enviable reputation for attention to duty and integrity.

Under the new internal-revenue law distilleries were required to discard the old meters and to store their alcohol in a separate part of their distilleries, the apartment is under complete supervision of the Government and to which alcohol can only be obtained in the presence of an inspector. The average collections on alcohol for the years 1909 and 1916, inclusive, was a little more than $210,000 yearly. The collections for the year 1918 amounted to more than $300,000, in 1919 to $809,000, and it is estimated that the collections from this source of revenue for 1920 will be very close to $1,000,000. The collections under the ley de rentas internas, executive order No. 197, for the year 1919, were as follows:

alcohol	$809,270.21
tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes	243,560.59
rights on merchandise importations	154,845.02
on documents	247,549.20
other sources	125,642.08
Total	1,583,867.10

NOTE.—It should be noted that the above figures do not include receipts for wharfage, consular charges, posts and telegraphs, Government lands, incomes, property tax, or license tax.

One of the great helps in the administration of this law is the system of applying administrative fines, as in each case the fine would be large enough to be carried to court. Administrative fines are almost always accepted without question by the violator of the law, and the fact that such fines are levied promptly and immediately upon detection of fraud acts as a very effective deterrent to violation of the law.

There is submitted herewith a comparative statement showing the collections of all internal revenue for the first six months of 1919 and 1920 as well as a comparative statement of the entire years 1918 and 1919.

The cost of collection of all internal revenue has been reduced from 14 per cent in 1915 to 5 per cent in 1919.

Early in the present year, 1920, by Executive order 403, the tax on cigars is slightly more than doubled in order to raise additional revenues from which to make payment of the $250,000 set aside for municipalities by Executive order No. 402. This increase in taxation has met with some opposition from the cigar industry but it is believed that such slight opposition at first met with soon disappear.

SECTION OF THE PROPERTY TAX.

On April 10, 1919, a tax on property, Executive order No. 282, was promulgated by the military governor. It became necessary to organize a force to supervise and collect taxes laid under this law, as this tax on real property was an absolutely new form of taxation in Santo Domingo and the first tax ever placed upon the people. It was necessary that it be administered in such a manner as to create the least possible friction, and it was therefore essential that the employees of this section, and especially the tax assessors, should be men competent in their work and tactful and diplomatic in dealing with the Dominican people. This tax took the place of a number of other taxes which had been collected by the various municipalities and which bore heavily upon the poor and acted as a drag to business in general, and it was provided by the law that there be paid to the municipalities an amount equal to that which each municipality had collected under the taxes suppressed during the year 1917.

The people in general were informed of the nature of the tax by the publication of notices in the newspapers, by the civil governors of the Provinces, and by the military governor. Notices were sent through the country to explain the requirements of the tax law. All officials of this department, no matter where located, were also instructed to render any needed assistance to the people in the preparation of their declarations. While there was some grumbling, as was natural and to be expected against the first direct tax ever promulgated in Santo Domingo, the opposition soon gave way and the people in general paid their property tax cheerfully. Some of the large sugar estates protested against the tax, on the cause of its rate but for certain technical reasons. These protests also were dropped.

A complete new organization was built up. The first tax assessors were almost entirely Spanish-speaking Americans, but it has now been possible to increase the assessment force by the addition of many Dominicans, and an American can be placed, however, in charge of the assessment work in each district. The work of appraisement is going forward as rapidly as possible. It hardly needs to be said that it is a long task. Protests to the board of review and equalization have been comparatively few, and the awards of the board have been well received, though in many cases the assessments have been withheld. In one or two towns it has been necessary to reassess the entire town due to the failure of an assessor to properly perform his duty. While this has caused a great deal of additional work, it has, as a matter of fact, reached the benefit of the Government, as the feeling of satisfaction and trust and confidence in the justice of the Government has been plainly expressed when the awards of the board of review and equalization were made known. One of the main causes of the tax on peso titles has been to cause the destruction of many fraudulent titles which have been manufactured for sale. This wholesale manufacture of titles was made possible by the fact that the original titles were split up into many small parts and a faulty system of records, and in some cases the destruction of records, rendered verification of the authenticity of the titles very difficult. The amount of uncollected tax at the present time is about $2,000,000 but in this amount is included taxes on a considerable portion of land which has been collected because existing owners are doubtful of their titles, and on property owned by the municipalities. The total declared valuation of the real property of the country is $141,000,000. This amount will be increased by a very considerable percentage when the reassessment of property has been completed. As a result, therefore, in a country of this kind with but few completed roads, the difficulties of the way are many. The present chief of the section of property tax, Mr. Oliver, deserves special commendation for his success in building up the efficient force.

Collections under the property tax for the year 1919 amounted to $741,000 and for the year 1920 up to June 30, $482,359.98 was collected. It is estimated that the total collections for 1920 will amount to from $800,000 to $1,000,000.

SHIPPING.

During the period of the war the shipping allotted to Santo Domingo, while entirely adequate, was still much more so than that of many other Latin American countries. At the close of the war the Clyde Steamship Co. placed additional ships in the Santo Domingo service as they were released from other service by the Shipping Board, but the very high freight rates were continued in effect. These rates were in many cases over 100 per cent higher than those in effect in January, 1917, and still higher than those in effect before the beginning of the World War. This department for a long period endeavored to interest other steamship lines in Santo Domingo, and in addition to the Clyde Steamship Co. we now have the Columbus Steamship Co. and the Bull Insular Steamship Co. regularly sending ships to Dominican ports. In addition, the R. Grace & Co. send a monthly steamer from New Orleans to Santo Domingo. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. also makes Sanchez and Puerto Plata regular trips of call as do also steamers of the Royal West Indian Mail Steamship Co. of Amsterdam. Competition has resulted in a very much better service and freight is being more carefully handled and claims are fewer than they have been for many years.

After a year's work, this department finally succeeded in obtaining a reduction from the Clyde Steamship Co. of half the surcharge applied to shipments from the ports of Puerto Plata and Barahona. Additional equipment was installed at Puerto Plata to handle freight exportations, and the wharf at Barahona was improved. The Columbus and Bull Insular Steamship Cos. immediately followed the lead of the Clyde Steamship Co. and made the same reduction in the surcharge under their tariffs.

The increase in trade and the large number of vessels visiting Dominican ports during the present year has strongly shown the need for immediately increasing and improving all port facilities to care for the natural increase in trade, and this department urges that the Government program for port improvements and roads be carried through to completion as rapidly as possible. Customhouses, wharves, and other properties of the State, were found by the military government in deplorable condition. Very little money had been spent on maintenance. These properties have now been placed in good condition. Wharves have been extended and warehouse facilities increased in practically all the ports. The program of this department calls for the continuation of this work. A report of the work already accomplished and that planned is given by ports below:

IMPROVEMENTS IN PORT FACILITIES SANTO DOMINGO.

In accordance with the military governor's policy, attention has been given to the reclaiming of the property of the Government in the vicinity of the port, which, though formerly belonging to the Government, had been given away by the Dominican administrations or leased for long period at nominal rentals. This property is either now needed or will be needed in the very near future for the development of the port. A number of these parcels have already been reclaimed.

A new customhouse has been completed at this port. Two additional warehouses have been purchased and a large modern warehouse is now under construction by the Government. Upon completion of this latter warehouse one of the present sheds will be torn down and replaced by a modern two-story fireproof warehouse. Two iron deposit sheds have been repaired, painted and had concrete floors laid in them. It is planned to extend the wharf on the west bank of the river and to install a marine railway and machine shop on the east bank of the river. The channel will also be dredged to a depth of 24 feet.

SAN PEDRO DE MACORIS.

At this port the existing wharf has been repaired and placed in good condition. Wharf extension and dredging estimated to cost $675,000 is under way. It is also planned to build a new customhouse at an estimated cost of $1,000. It is believed that one pier of the new wharf will be ready for use during the coming sugar season; the second pier will probably be completed the following year.

LA ROMANA.

A wharf at La Romana to cost $15,000 will be built to care for co-shipping, and the customhouse partially constructed at that port is completed at an estimated cost of $30,000.

SANCHEZ.

At this port the wharf facilities are furnished by the Samana & S. Railway Co. The present customhouse has been placed in good repair. It is planned to build an additional customs shed of iron to cost approximately $20,000.

PUERTO PLATA.

A new wharf and customhouse has been completed at this port and the customs warehouses have been placed in excellent repair at a cost of approximately $20,000. It is also planned to do some additional dredging at the

MONTE CRISTI.

Urgent repairs to the wharf at this port have been made, but it is in poor shape. No definite plans have yet been made as to what will be done here, but the subject will probably be taken up within a comparatively short time.

SAMANA.

The customhouse at this port has been repaired and placed in good condition.

AZUA.

Repairs to the wharf and wharf equipment at Azua have been made. It is considered undesirable to do further work or enlarge the port facilities at this port at the present time due to the fact that little shelter is available for vessels and the work of unloading and discharging can only be carried on during certain hours of the day. It is possible that this port may have been abandoned at a later date.

BARAHONA.

The customhouse at Barahona has been placed in good repair and the wharf widened. A contract will shortly be let for an extension to this wharf. It is also planned to construct an additional warehouse of iron.

GENERAL.

An examination of the comparative statement of revenues of the Republic for the years 1916 to 1920 shows a steady increase in the importance of the customs revenue compared to the customs revenue. Prior to the occupation, the customs revenue was comparatively insignificant and amounted to an average of approximately $700,000 for a term of years. For the year 1919 the customs revenue was almost three and one-half times that of 1916, an increase of $782,144.90 to $2,911,124.20 (net), and as a percentage of the total revenue had increased from 16.4 per cent in 1916 to 39.8 per cent in 1919. The collections for that year were the highest in the history of the Republic. This was largely due to the heavy importation orders placed by the Government that year in anticipation of difficulty in obtaining stocks during the war. Fortunately for Santo Domingo its shipping service was much better than that of other Latin American countries during the war, largely due to the fact that Santo Domingo sugar and tobacco by the countries at war. The military Government aided in this situation by arranging for commercial ships and Navy transports. The high prices sugar, tobacco, and cocoa were paid during this period all served to increase the purchasing ability of the Republic and consequently the importations. 1918 and 1919 collections, while high as 1917, were still satisfactory in amount. The importations and collections for 1920 will break all records, both in tonnage of cargo received and in the amount of duty collected, the latter notwithstanding the reduction of approximately 38 per cent in the customs tariff. At the date paration of this report it is estimated that the customs collections for 1920 reach the high mark of $6,200,000.

The increase in revenue due to additional taxation is estimated at $1,200,000, against this should be set the amount of municipal taxes, which were receded by the additional national taxes, from which the amount of approximately $850,000 will be allotted annually to the municipalities. This reduces net additional taxation to $350,000. The balance of the increase is due to the increase in the efficiency of the section of internal revenue and to the collection of taxes without fear or favor, and also to the general prosperity of the country with the corresponding heavy importations.

While the revenues have increased, so also have the budget appropriations. The general increase in the cost of living it became necessary to allow other salaries to Government employees; all material used by the Government increased very materially in price so that apart from the necessity of increasing the activities of all departments to provide better service to the public, an increase in appropriations was unavoidable. Many economies were in force, however, and greater efficiency demanded from employees, and as a safe statement that the Dominican Republic is now obtaining a decidedly better value for every dollar spent than ever before in the history of the public. Attention is invited to the statement showing the revenues in comparison with the budget appropriations and showing also the sums devoted to reduction of the public debt.

During the year 1918 an inspection of accounts of the Government railroad, Ferrocarril Central Dominicana, was made by the firm of W. T. Woodridge & Co., of Porto Rico. At the same time a complete audit of the accounts of the public works department from its inception to the end of the year 1917 was commenced. This was completed by the firm of W. T. Woodridge & Co. during the year 1919.

There is given below the public works program of the military government. This program includes items under way and also projects for which additional funds will be necessary before completion of the program is possible. It should be noted that the program includes transportation routes, port improvements, schools, and other national projects. It is confidently believed that the increased commercial and agricultural development of the country from the roads and port improvements will in a short time result in increased treasury receipts and that the projects will pay for themselves in a comparatively short term of years. The value to the citizenship of the country in the expenditures for schools will be inestimable.

will be noted from the following statement the degree to which the execution of the public works projects have been speeded up. This statement shows the expenditures by the public works department for the period from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920. It is estimated that the period from July, 1920, to June 30, 1921, will show expenditures for this purpose of approximately $1,000,000, as the public works department has now at work a full force of mechanics and many thousand laborers. It is needless to say that the prompt execution of the public works program is a matter of great moment to the Republic.

PUBLIC DEBT.

History of the public debt.—Disturbed political conditions in the Dominican Republic created debts and claims against the Government amounting in 1907 to over $30,000,000. These debts and claims were a burden to the country and an obstacle to progress. The Republic effected a conditional adjustment under which the total sum payable amounted to not more than $17,000,000. Part of the plan of settlement was the issue and sale of bonds to the amount of $10,000,000, of which that part not required for the settlement of claims was voted to the purchase of certain concessions and to public works. The Republic was conditional upon the assistance of the United States in the collection of customs revenues of the Republic and the Dominican Republic requested the United States to give such assistance. This the United States consented to do in pursuance of said consent the American-Dominican convention of 1907 was entered into. Under this convention bonds of the face value of $20,000,000 were issued in 1908. The service of the 1908 loan has proceeded regularly and without interruption.

In the year 1912 the United States Government consented to an extension of the Dominican public debt by $1,500,000 and the Dominican Republic contracted a loan to that amount secured by the customs receipts, subject to the prior lien of the 1908 bonds. This loan was finally paid off in 1917.

Meanwhile the contracting of new indebtedness by the Dominican Republic, without the consent of the United States, went on rapidly. The debts and claims against the Government aggregated over $15,000,000. A great measure of the new indebtedness was due to the political disturbances and revolutions which were of continual occurrence in the Republic. In 1916, during a period of revolt and particularly unfortunate financial management, the American Government took action to establish order. The management of the finances was taken over by the general receiver of Dominican Republic appointed by the President of the United States, and on November 1, 1916, the Dominican Republic was placed under military government.

The proclamation of military government recited that the Dominican Republic had failed to live up to the terms of the treaty of 1907, that the Dominican Government had patiently endeavored to aid the Dominican Republic but that the latter was not inclined or able to adopt the measures suggested wherefore the American Government believed the time at hand to take to assure the execution of the said convention and to maintain domestic tranquillity in the Republic. The object of the occupation was not to destroy Dominican sovereignty, but to restore order.

The military government so established proceeded to reorganize the government of the country and undertook the construction of roads and other public works.

To effect a settlement of the large floating indebtedness and the claims, the military governor created "the Dominican Claims Commission, 1917" to pass on all claims and evidence of debt against the Dominican Republic. This commission rendered a preliminary report showing that more than 8,800 claims had been presented, representing a face value of $15,000,000; that in all probability in liquidation of the awards to be made the sum much less than the face value would be required, and estimated the sum at $5,000,000.

To provide for payment of the commission's awards the military government issued Executive Order No. 193. This order recited that due to abnormal conditions existing throughout the world that it was impossible to negotiate a foreign loan; that the United States Government had agreed to an increase of the Dominican debt for the purpose of liquidating the indebtedness when adjudicated by the commission. It provided for the payment of all awards of said commission in bonds of the Dominican Republic par with accrued interest, except fractional amounts to be paid in cash. The bond issue amounted to $4,161,300.

The public debt of the Dominican Republic is as follows:

State of public debt of the Dominican Republic as of July 31, 1920:

AMORTIZATION POLICY.

$20,000,000 loan 5 per cent bond of 1908, due 1958.—The sum of $1,250,000 paid to the fiscal agent of the loan, the Guaranty Trust Co., as agent.

tion thereto 50 per cent of the annual surplus of the customs collections $3,000,000. All amounts received by the fiscal agent of the loan subsequent November 1, 1917, are applied by it, as far as reasonably practicable, to the purchase in the open market of 5 per cent bonds at prices not exceeding a premium of 2½ per cent, and unless so applied, and to the extent to which the same are not so applied, are annually applied to the purchase at said premium ½ per cent of 5 per cent bonds, the numbers of which are drawn by lot. All is held in the sinking fund continue to bear interest, and the fiscal agent collects the interest thereon as such interest matures, and the amounts so collected become part of the sinking fund.

18 issue 5 per cent bonds, due 1938.—One-twentieth of the loan is retired systematically each year by the fixed amortization, by semiannual drawings, and the provisions that when the customs revenues of the country exceed $10,000, additional amortization equal to 30 per cent of the amount the revenues are in excess of $3,000,000 is provided for. The additional amortization applied to the purchase of bonds for redemption yearly without regard to interest.

The fixed amortization is applied to the retirement of bonds by series as follows: First, series L; second, series C; third, series D; and fourth, series M. Attention is invited to the rapid strides which are being made in the payment of the public debt. Under the plans of the amortization of the two loans, the rate of payment will steadily increase, and it is believed that the statement can be made that the $20,000,000 customs administration loan of 1908, due in 1925, will be paid off by 1925, or 33 years before due, and that the issue of 1918, due in 1938, will be paid off by December 31, 1922, or 16 years before due.

THE MONETARY SYSTEM.

The standard currency is the gold dollar, equivalent in value to the United States dollar.

The circulation consists of the Dominican silver peso and subdivisions thereof, which pass by law at the rate of five pesos to one gold dollar. The Dominican government is gradually replacing the old debased Dominican silver currency with American fractional silver currency. Approximately $150,000 worth of this currency was shipped out of the country to be melted down during the past year, and the profit realized on same, approximately $55,000 over expenses, has been deposited to the credit of the national treasury. There is a large circulation of United States notes and fractional currency which is legal tender.

The history of conversion and present conversion policies.—In the early years of the Dominican Republic Mexican silver and Spanish gold were the principal coins in circulation, with the rate of exchange constantly fluctuating. In 1864 the Republic joined the Latin convention, and in the following year the Banque Nationale de Saint Domingue issued silver and copper coins to the value of $100,000. These coins soon became depreciated as silver fell in price. The gold standard was adopted in 1894, and though no coinage took place, official transactions were thereafter based upon gold values. In 1895–97 silver coins were issued to the nominal amount of $2,500,000, but the seigniorage was so enormous that the rate of exchange fell to 5 pesos to 1 gold dollar. This was legalized in June, 1905, when the American gold dollar was adopted as the standard of the Dominican Republic.

Paper money had been issued at various times, and large amounts of such notes were retired by the Spaniards during their occupation in the sixties. During the administration of President Heureaux an issue of $3,600,000 in the form of the Banque Nationale was floated. Demoralization followed and the notes were soon worth but 20 to 1. These notes were demonetized and large amounts purchased at auction by administrations succeeding that of Heureaux. The remainder has been redeemed at 5 to 1 under the 1907 debt settlement. The only paper in circulation at present is American paper money circulating at par with gold.

The replacement of worn and insanitary American notes has been undertaken by the military government. Such notes collected are replaced with new notes and are returned to the United States for redemption.

NEW BANKING LAW.

The new banking law at present in force is inadequate since the Banco Nacional de Santo Domingo, purchased by the American Foreign Banking Corporation, the only bank which came under this law, has disappeared. Under the present law there is no supervision of foreign banks or private bankers.

Almost every commercial house does a banking business in addition to regular commercial business. In order to safeguard the savings of Dominican people, it has become necessary that the present banking law be revised. To this end this department has prepared a new law, which was submitted to the principal bankers of Santo Domingo for comment. Their comments have now been received and the final draft is now in course of preparation for submission to the military governor.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS ACT.

A negotiable instruments act, based on the "uniform negotiable instruments act" enforced in the majority of the states in the United States, has been prepared and submitted to the military governor, and its promulgation is expected within a short time.

WAREHOUSEMEN'S ACT.

A warehousemen's act, based on the "uniform warehousemen's act" enforced in many states of the United States, has been adapted to the conditions of the Republic and has been submitted to the military governor for his approval and promulgation.

GENERAL RECEIVERSHIP OF CUSTOMS.

The customs duties have been efficiently collected by the organization of a general receiver of Dominican customs, appointed by the President of the United States, under the terms of the American-Dominican Convention. The General Receiver makes the deductions required for the service of the $20,000,000 customs administration loan of 1908 and the loan of 1915, and pays the same to the respective fiscal agents, the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and the International Banking Corporation of New York. Five per cent is deducted by the general receiver of customs to cover the cost of collecting the duties. The balance of the collections is deposited in the national treasury for the credit of the general account of the Government.

The following tables show total customs collections from April 1, 1905, to December 31, 1919:

Thirteenth fiscal period, Jan. 1 to Dec. 31, 1919.....	4,400,000
Total.....	$34,650,000

NOTE.—The collections for the period Jan. 1 to June 30, 1920, amount to $3,471,814.42.

The following statistics are taken from the report of the general receiver of customs for the thirteenth fiscal period:

"The foreign trade of the Republic during 1919 was the largest in the history of the receivership. Merchandise valued at $22,101,627 was imported during the thirteenth fiscal year, an increase over the preceding year of $1,932,675. The tonnage of cargo imported during 1919 was 7,716 tons, more than in 1918.

Exports during the period amounted to $39,716,692, the increase over 1918 of $17,340,118, or approximately 14 per cent, which clearly indicates increase in industry and progress and the healthy condition of the country.

The most gratifying feature of the increase in foreign commerce is the balance of trade in favor of the Republic, amounting to $17,615,065, eight times more than in 1918, and nearly double that of 1916, the previous banner year in this respect.

A notable increase is shown in the volume of wheat flour imported, 7,656 tons more than in 1918. Importations of soap increased 875 tons, biscuits and crackers 298 tons, butter 170 tons, salted or dry fish 146 tons, smoked fish 108 tons, and pickled fish 81 tons.

Importations of rice during 1919 decreased 4,469 tons as compared with preceding year, boots and shoes 107,000 pairs, coal 7,250 tons, jute bags 998 tons, lard 249 tons, salt or pickled beef 99 tons, and jerked beef 71 tons. Imports of cotton textiles were nearly 2,000,000 meters less than during the year 1918, representing a loss in duties amounting to approximately $100,000.

The principal increases in exports as compared with the year 1918 were:

	Tons.
grain	42,288
oil	3,578
rice	5,102
nuts	648
wood and dyewoods	1,754
skins and skins	827
textiles	16,743
rum-vin	465
organy	327

The outstanding item of decrease in exports is that of sugar cane, 114,110 tons less than in 1918. This decrease, however, is accounted for by the increased milling capacity of the central at La Romana, which is resulting in a diminished exportation of cane from that port to Porto Rico for grinding.

The decrease of 76 tons is shown in the quantity of coffee exported, but due to better prices obtained the value of that product exported during 1919 exceeded the value of the larger exportations during 1918 by $410,848.

The value of merchandise imported through the various ports of entry as compared with 1918 shows an increase at all ports with the exception of La Romana, there having been a large decrease at this port due to the discontinuance of the heavy importations of machinery, etc., which were being made during 1918 for the sugar estate at that port.

All ports of entry show a very large increase in exports."

This department wishes to record here its appreciation of the amicable relations existing with the receivership and to acknowledge the spirit of cooperation shown by the receivership in its relations with this department. It is the policy of both organizations to serve the public, and thus the Government, in an efficient manner as possible, and the administration of both organizations is bent to that end that the Republic may have better customhouses, port facilities, and the best possible personnel in charge of same.

REVISION OF THE LAW OF CUSTOMS AND PORTS.

The work of the revision of the law of customs and ports has been completed. The final draft prepared in English. This is now being translated into Spanish and will shortly be sent to the military governor for approval and promulgation.

This department desires to express its appreciation of the excellent work done by Commander Lybrand P. Smith in the preparation of this law and of the assistance afforded by the organization of the general receiver of customs.

WHARFAGE CHARGES.

It is the intention of this department to recommend to the military governor executive order No. 130, establishing a tariff for wharfage and storage charges, be amended effective January 1, 1921, so that cargo landed on private wharves will be free from payment to the Government of wharfage charges and no wharfage service is rendered by the Government.

SECOND PAN AMERICAN FINANCIAL CONFERENCE.

The following resolutions were adopted by the conference committee of the Pan American Republic, composed of bankers, economists, and business men of affairs. These resolutions speak for themselves:

Whereas, from a study of the reports hereto annexed and material concerning the Dominican Republic, furnished the conference committee for examination, and from information supplied by the official delegation, it has been established:

(a) That the financial condition of the Dominican Republic, as a result of currency reforms and fiscal system described in the annexed report, is excellent and that the finances are established on a sound basis which will permit further growth and development of the Republic.

(b) That the development of the country requires that the Dominican Government's program of roads, port improvements, and other public works be carried through to a conclusion, and that the negotiation of a loan in the amount of $5,000,000, to be secured by a first lien on all the revenues other than the revenues from duties upon imports and exports, is justified.

(c) That the adoption of the proposal of the Dominican Government for a trade agreement of a reciprocal nature be executed between the Dominican Government and the United States along the lines proposed by it would be of material assistance to both countries in the development of their trade.

Proposal by the Dominican Government.—(1) Abolition of tonnage duty on reduction in customs tariff and liberal treatment for foodstuffs, chemicals, and pharmaceutical products, manufactures of iron, steel, building materials, etc.; and (3) abolition of export duties on Dominican products.

Proposal by the United States Government.—(1) Admission of Dominican sugar, tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, cocoa, honey, and castor beans and Dominican exports on terms equal to those accorded the Republic of Cuba.

It appears that the position of Santo Domingo, geographically near the United States, and to a large extent economically dependent upon the United States, and the grave moral and political responsibilities of the United States toward Santo Domingo, entitle this latter to the concessions requested.

(d) That the shipping facilities of the Dominican Republic are entirely inadequate in that—

1. The passenger steamers employed in the service between the United States and the Dominican Republic are slow, old, and do not afford suitable accommodations for the traveling public. The passenger service between San Pedro Macoris and New York, with one stop, takes an average of 10 or 11 days compared with 4½ days between New York and San Juan, P. R., approximately the same distance.

2. Direct communication between New York and Santo Domingo depends entirely on one steamship line, and freight rates are extremely high and are based on the maximum that the traffic will bear, rather than on the basis of a reasonable profit over the cost of operation. This operates as a handicap upon the outgoing and incoming freight of Santo Domingo compared with her nearest neighbors, Cuba and Porto Rico.

3. That an express service from Santo Domingo city and San Pedro Macoris, on the south of the island, direct to the port of New York would stimulate commerce and reduce the time required for the voyage between the two ports by five days, cutting the present time required for the voyage practically in half.

4. That a freight and passenger service from the port of New Orleans to Santo Domingo would aid the introduction and distribution of American products and manufactures of the southern and middle western sections of the United States into the Dominican Republic, with profitable return freights of Dominican products, to the mutual advantage of both countries.

5. That the Dominican Republic is revising its laws relating to shipping ports to conform to the best modern practice; is engaged upon the improvement of its ports and port facilities, including the deepening of its southern ports so that tonnage dues will soon be removed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, (1) That this committee takes pleasure in endorsing the policy heretofore and at present pursued in establishing currency reform and a system which has resulted in the present satisfactory financial condition of the Dominican Republic and which will permit of the further growth and development of the Republic's resources.

(2) That this committee heartily indorses the public works program of the Dominican Government, and believes that the loan proposed by the said Government to secure funds for the completion of the said program is amply justified by the projects and by the condition of the revenues.

(3) That this committee is of the opinion that the trade agreement proposed by the Dominican Republic would be of mutual benefit to the United States.

Dominican Republic, and do hereby recommend it to the favorable consideration of the United States Government.

4) That the conference committee finds that the Dominican Republic is taking active steps to provide for liberal treatment of shipping and to aid and encourage it in every way; that it is the belief of the committee that the Republic is justified in asking for better steamship service to the United States.

The committee therefore recommends that the Shipping Board include in its program the provision for a proper and adequate passenger and freight service to New York and New Orleans with reasonable rates as compared with the neighboring islands.

5) Resolved, That in view of disagreements arising out of acceptance or rejection of merchandise entering Dominican ports, this committee recommends establishment at the various ports of boards, named by the respective chambers of commerce or otherwise, to hear such complaints and recommend terms of adjustment.

Closing this report attention is invited to the fact that the financial condition of the country is excellent in every respect. It may be stated that there are few nations, if any, that at the present time could show as excellent a balance sheet as can the Dominican Republic.

Generally, the methods of the treasury department have been revolutionized. Dishonesty, inefficiency, with which the former treasury organization was beset, have been eliminated. The contaduria has been reorganized and the final step is about to be taken by the division of the duties of the contador between a treasurer and an auditor with efficient staffs. Arrangements have been made by this department for the necessary reform of the communal accounting system, and from July 1, 1920, their accounts will be rendered in such manner as to permit of an efficient audit by the auditor of the Republic.

This department regrets to have to state that the standard of honesty in the Republic in so far as Government funds are concerned seems to be decidedly low and that it is only by continual watchfulness, careful supervision, and frequent and efficient inspections that considerable losses are avoided. Some losses have been suffered, and the total since the occupation is comparatively insignificant, but we still find frequent cases, such as one which happened a month or two ago, where an inspector telephoned in that a communal treasurer was short in his accounts and could not return the money for a month or two "because he needed it to use in his business." These cases have been only too frequent in occurrence, but we have been successful in securing the replacement of funds embezzled in the vast majority of cases.

The investigation conducted after the suicide of an employee in the postal department, the testimony shows that a witness testified "that he who had the custody of Government funds and did not advance money to his friends was considered a poor sort of fellow." It is needless to say that while such a spirit of only careful supervision and inspection will prevent losses. In the treatment of officials and employees before the courts for embezzlement, this treatment has been singularly unsuccessful in obtaining convictions, not because of lack of convincing evidence, but rather, it appears, because the conscience of the people is lax as to civic honesty and the embezzlement of Government funds is not considered in the same light as would be the theft of property of an individual.

The elimination of this spirit is believed to be merely a question of time, and this department has full confidence that the example of integrity set by the Dominican officials of the occupation will not be lost upon the Dominican officials and employees who work with them.

This report would not be complete without a word of testimony of the excellent work of my predecessor, Commander I. T. Hagner (S. C.), United States Navy; of former Special Deputy General Receiver J. H. Edwards; of John Loomis, who now fills the position of contador general de hacienda, formerly occupied by Mr. J. H. Edwards; and of appreciation of the industry, integrity, and loyalty of the officials and employees of this department. Credit for the success of this department in the administration of the many important duties confided to it is entirely theirs.

Respectfully submitted.

ARTHUR H. MAYO.

APPENDIX.

MILITARY GOVERNMENT OF SANTO DOMINGO.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 60—O. G. NO. 2316.

A special tribunal to be known as "The Dominican Claims Commission 1917" is hereby created for the purpose of investigating all outstanding claims against the Dominican Republic which had their origin after the American occupation of the country made to conform with the terms of the American-Dominican Convention of February 8, 1907, and before the establishment of military government in Santo Domingo by the United States under the proclamation of November 29, 1916, and of recommending ways and means for the settlement of such awards.

The commission will be composed of Mr. J. H. Edwards, in charge of the Contaduría General de Hacienda, ex officio presidente of the commission, and the following additional members: Lieut. Col. J. T. Bootes, United States Marine Corps; Mr. M. de J. Troncoso de la Concha; Mr. Emilio Joubert; Mr. Martín Travieso, jr.

The commission will be called to meet at Santo Domingo city by the president at as early a date as practicable after July 15, 1917.

The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby made available for the expenses of the commission from funds not otherwise appropriated.

H. S. KNAPP,

Rear Admiral, United States NavyHead of Military Government

SANTO DOMINGO CITY, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, June 26, 1917.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 65—O. G. NO. 2319.

The Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, organized as announced by executive order No. 60, will have vested in it the powers and will be concerned in the performance of its duties as hereinbelow prescribed.

Upon being convened and prior to entering upon its duties the commission and each member thereof individually shall take oath before the Court of Santo Domingo to the faithful and proper performance of duty. The secretary and the clerical staff shall take oath of similar effect administered by the president of the commission before entire commission. The oaths of the commission shall be registered in the archives of the supreme court and the oaths herein prescribed shall be recorded in the record of the commission.

The commission shall have its seat at Santo Domingo City, Dominican Republic, but may in its discretion and as may be necessary hold special sessions at other points in the Republic.

The president of the commission shall be the presiding officer and shall have a vote in all proceedings. The secretary of the commission shall keep complete records of all the proceedings and awards of the commission; he shall not have a vote. All resolutions, acts, and business transacted by the commission shall be by a majority vote of the members of the commission, but no award shall be valid unless subscribed to by at least three members of the commission.

In case any member of the commission is interested, directly or indirectly, or related in any degree to any person who is interested, directly or indirectly, in any claim brought before the commission, he shall bring the fact to the notice of the commission, which will as a whole determine his eligibility to act in the case.

The first duty of the commission shall be to prepare and submit to the president of the military government a plan to provide for the necessary means for liquidating the awards upon claims approved by the commission.

The commission shall have complete and final jurisdiction as a Government agency in the matter of adjudicating claims against the Dominican Republic coming before it. The decisions rendered and awards made by the commission shall not be subject to review or appeal before any Dominican court or other Dominican authority.

Any claimants who do not submit their claims to this commission for adjudication on or before December 31, 1917, shall be deemed to have forfeited and relinquished all rights to such claims. Claims shall be submitted to the commission in the form and manner prescribed by the commission.

For the prosecution of its business the commission is vested with the powers Dominican courts to subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses; to administer oaths and examine for the presentation of documentary evidence, public or private authorities. Such assistance as may be necessary to attain the ends of the Dominican Government, and, if required, by the forces of the military government.

Any person who refuses or neglects to appear before the commission when subpoenaed, or who refuses to produce any documentary evidence in his possession when such evidence is influenced by the commission or to obstruct its proceedings in any way, shall be guilty of contempt. Any person who gives false testimony before the commission, under oath, shall be guilty of perjury. Any person who signs a name other than his own on any document submitted to the commission shall be guilty of forgery. Any person who signs any voucher, receipt, certificate, or other document representing a claim against the Dominican Republic, in which any false statement is made to the prejudice of the Dominican Republic, shall be guilty of falsification with intent to defraud. The commission shall try and pass judgment upon all such cases; and the offenders, upon conviction of any such offenses, shall be punishable by a fine not less than nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one month nor more than five years or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the commission.

The commission shall consider as a notification only any claim heretofore admitted to or filed with any commission or official appointed for the purpose of receiving and recording such claims, or which may have been presented to any other office of the Dominican Government: Provided, however, That any claimant or interested party who may so desire shall be permitted, upon making written application and renunciation to the commission, to withdraw in whole or in part any claim or document supporting such claims filed by him prior to the creation of this commission: Provided further, That the commission shall, prior to the return of any such claim or document, cancel same by appropriate notation upon it in such manner as to render it of no further value as a claim.

The commission shall not consider nor approve for payment, in whole or in part, any expenditures made for the purpose of, or in connection with a revolutionary movement against a legally constituted government of the Dominican Republic, or any claim representing money, materials or supplies furnished in or out of such revolution, unless so furnished in submission to force majeure, in which the commission shall be the final judge.

Each member of the commission shall be authorized in the performance of the duties of the commission is hereby authorized. Any member of the commission from abroad shall be entitled to salary from the date of leaving his home for Santo Domingo up to the time upon which he could arrive at his home after dissolution of the commission, using the first available transportation in either case.

Members of the commission appointed from abroad shall also be reimbursed their actual and necessary travel expenses in coming to and returning from Santo Domingo, provided that such expenses shall represent only the travel from their homes and return thereto by the most direct route.

During its life the offices of the commission shall be open for the transaction of business during the regular office hours observed in the Dominican Government offices on all days excepting Sundays and legal holidays.

The commission shall cease to exist when the object for which it is created have been attained.

H. S. KNAPP.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 169—O. G. NO. 2917.

1. By virtue of the powers vested in the Military Government of Santo Domingo, the powers vested in the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, executive order No. 65, as enumerated below, are hereby conferred upon authorized committees of the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, for the purpose of investigating claims:

- (a) To subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses;
- (b) To administer oaths and examine witnesses under oath; and
- (c) To require the presentation of documentary evidence, public or private.

2. Such assistance as may be necessary to enable such duly authorized committees of the commission to accomplish their work of investigation, shall be rendered by the police agencies of the Dominican Republic, and, if necessary, by the forces of the military government.

3. Any person who shall refuse or neglect to obey a subpoena or summons, or who shall furnish documentary evidence called for by such duly authorized committee, or who shall testify falsely or fail to testify fully and completely before such duly authorized committees, shall be cited by the committees before the commission for "contempt" or other offense committed, and shall be punished by the full commission under the powers with which it is invested.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 193—O. G. NO. 2937.

Whereas the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917, created by executive order No. 60 for the purpose of investigating and adjudicating claims against the Dominican Republic, has rendered a preliminary report to the military governor covering the claims presented and registered but not yet adjudicated, showing that more than 8,800 claims have been presented, representing a value of about $15,000,000; and

Whereas said commission expresses the opinion that many of the claims will not be sufficiently substantiated to warrant payment of the full face value as claimed, so that in all probability the liquidation of the awards to be made thereon will require a sum much less than the face value of the claims presented; and

Whereas due to the abnormal conditions at present existing in all parts of the world, it is impracticable to negotiate a foreign loan for the purpose of providing for the payment in cash of said awards; and

Whereas under the terms of the American-Dominican convention of February 8, 1907, "until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the bonds of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by the agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States";

Whereas this increase has now been authorized and the consent of the United States of America has been obtained for the liquidation of the floating debt of the Dominican Republic hitherto unauthorized by the United States, when it shall have been adjudicated and the corresponding awards made by the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917;

Now, therefore, by virtue of the powers vested in the military government of Santo Domingo, and with the consent of the United States, the payment of the awards to be made by the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 is hereby authorized and ordered to be made as follows:

1. The said commission shall transmit all awards to the Secretario de Estado de Hacienda y Comercio, where they shall be registered and then transmitted to the Contaduría General de Hacienda for payment.

2. All awards made by said commission shall be paid in bonds of the Dominican Republic at par, with accrued interest, to be issued as hereinafter authorized: Provided, however, That all fractional amounts of such awards of less than $50 shall be paid in cash.

The cash payments herein provided for shall be made by checks drawn on the signated depositary for the Dominican Republic, chargeable to a special account to be opened for the purpose based on the appropriation authorized in paragraph 3 hereof.

3. For the purpose of making the cash payments authorized in the preceding paragraph, such amount as may be necessary is hereby appropriated out of the moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.

4. For the purpose of paying in bonds the awards made by the Dominican Commission of 1917, as authorized in paragraph 2 hereof, the Contaduría General de Hacienda is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to issue bonds of the Dominican Republic, in the form and conditioned as hereinafter provided, to the amount that shall be necessary to pay such awards, which necessary amount shall not be exceeded. Said bonds shall be issued in settlement of the award in each case in the following order: First, series M; second, series D; third, series C; and fourth, series L; in the proportional amounts required to make up the total of the award. Upon the request of a holder of said bonds the Contaduría General de Hacienda may issue one or more bonds of the larger denomination in exchange for bonds of the smaller denominations of equivalent value, but in no case shall bonds of smaller denominations be issued in exchange for a bond or bonds of larger denominations.

5. Said bonds shall be in coupon form and may be in any or all of the following series and denominations: Series L, $50; series C, $100; series D, $500; series M, $1,000; and shall be numbered consecutively beginning with the number 1 of each series. They shall bear the facsimile signature of the officer administering the affairs of the Secretaría de Estado de Hacienda y Comercio and the signature of the Encargado de la Contaduría General de Hacienda. They shall be dated January 1, 1918, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, which interest shall be payable semiannually, on the 1st day of January and of each July. The bonds shall be payable at par on or before January 1, 1938, in currency of value equivalent to gold coin of the United States of America of the present standard of weight and fineness, and said bonds shall become redeemable and shall be payable at par in such amounts each interest date as the amount of the amortization fund hereinafter provided for available on such interest dates will permit: Provided, That the bonds shall be so redeemed and paid by series as follows: First, series L; second, series C; third, series D; and fourth, series E. The numbers of the bonds of each series to be so redeemed shall be determined by lot at public drawing conducted by the Contaduría General de Hacienda at Santo Domingo within one week on either side of the 1st day of November or May, as the case may be, and notice of the series and numbers of such bonds to be so redeemed and paid shall be given by the Contaduría General de Hacienda to the designated depositary, hereinafter mentioned, 30 days in advance of each redemption date, and such notice shall be published at least once each week during 30 days immediately preceding and following each redemption date in the Official Gazette of the Dominican Government, and in one of the daily newspapers in the city of Santo Domingo, and in one of the daily newspapers in the city of New York. All interest upon the bonds so selected for redemption shall be paid from and after the designated date of redemption.

6. Both principal and interest shall be payable either in Santo Domingo City, at the principal office of the designated depositary for the Dominican Republic, or at any of its branch offices in the Dominican Republic, or at its office in the city of New York.

The said bonds are hereby declared to be exempt from the payment of taxes of any kind whatsoever of the Government of the Dominican Republic, or of any authority therein.

For the payment of the interest on said bonds, as it falls due, and of the principal, the good faith of the Dominican Republic is hereby irrevocably pledged, and said bonds and the obligations created thereby shall not be impaired by any law or decree which the Government of the Dominican Republic or any authority thereof may subsequently enact or issue, or by any interpretation thereof, or by any interpretation of any law or decree heretofore enacted or issued, but said bonds when duly issued shall constitute a legal and binding obligation of the Government of the Dominican Republic until properly redeemed and paid.

8. There is hereby pledged, with the consent of the Government of the Dominican Republic, from the customs revenues of the Dominican Republic such amount as may be required for the payment of the stated interest of said bonds to the amortization fund for the redemption and payment of said bonds at the redemption dates hereinbefore provided, the further sum per annum deposited, in equal monthly installments, beginning January 1, 1918, an amount equal to one-twentieth of the total amount of the bond issue. The amount pledged in this paragraph shall constitute an additional charge upon the customs revenues of the republic collected in accordance with the convention of February 8, 1907, between the United States of America and the Dominican Republic, after their application to the first four objects designated in Article 1 of that convention, and before any payment is made to the Dominican Government. Additional payment for account of the amortization fund provided may be made at any time by the Dominican Government in its discretion.

9. The general receiver of Dominican customs is hereby authorized to make monthly deductions, commencing January 1, 1918, from the customs revenues of the Dominican Republic, to cover the amounts referred to in the preceding paragraph, and in accordance with the official advice thereof furnished him. The Contaduría General de Hacienda, and immediately to deposit said amounts in the designated depository of the Dominican Government in a special account entitled "Dominican Republic 5 per cent bond issue, 1918"; and such deductions and deposits shall be regularly continued by the general receiver of Dominican customs until all of the bonds herein provided for shall have been redeemed and paid.

10. The foregoing provisions in regard to the payment of interest on said bonds and of the principal shall be deemed to be in the nature of a continuing appropriation, and no further appropriation for such purpose shall be necessary. The general receiver of the Dominican customs is authorized to make such deductions and deposits in the designated depository for the Dominican Republic, and is authorized and directed to make such payments; and the Contaduría General de Hacienda is authorized and directed to allow due credits in its accounts therefor.

11. The designated depository shall render accounts to the Contaduría General de Hacienda covering the periods ending June 30 and December 31 of each year, of all receipts, accruals of interest, and payments from the "Dominican Republic 5 per cent bond issue, 1918," and shall surrender such statements of account all coupons and bonds redeemed and paid, and verification of such accounts the Contaduría General de Hacienda shall make by entry thereof, allow credit in account therefor, and cancel and destroy such coupons and bonds so received.

12. Such funds as may be necessary to defray the expense of printing said bonds, advertising notices relating thereto, and other expenses incident to the issuance, redemption, and cancellation thereof, are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

H. S. KNAPP,

*Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Military Governor of Santo Domingo.*

Issued at Washington, D. C., by authority of the Government of the United States, August 2, 1918.

EXECUTIVE ORDER NO. 272—O. G. NO. 2995.

Whereas Executive Order No. 193 of the military government of Santo Domingo, issued at Washington, D. C., United States of America, by authority of the Government of the United States, under date of August 2, 1914, provided for the payment of the awards to be made by the Dominican Claims Commission of 1917 by means of bonds of the Dominican Republic, dated January 1, 1918, and payable at par on or before January 1, 1938, and in paragraph 4 of said order guarantees and provides for the redemption of said bonds as follows:

"There is hereby pledged, with the consent of the Government of the Dominican Republic, from the customs revenues of the Dominican Republic, such amount as may be required for the payment of the stated interest of said bonds; and ritization fund for the redemption and payment of said bonds on the redemption dates hereinbefore provided, the further sum per annum, to be deposited equal monthly installments, beginning January 1, 1918, of an amount equal one-twentieth of the total amount of the bond issue. The sums pledged in paragraph shall constitute an additional charge upon all customs revenues the Republic collected in accordance with the convention of February 8, 1907, between the United States of America and the Dominican Republic, after application to the first four objects designated in Article I of that convention, and before any payment is made to the Dominican Republic. Additional payments for the account of the amortization fund herein provided may be made any time by the Dominican Government in its discretion"; and whereas certain bankers and others who deal in such securities have expressed the opinion that there is a possibility of the termination of the American-Dominican Convention of 1907 before the retirement of all of the bonds of the issues issued under the provisions of Executive Order No. 193 above mentioned, the technical point thus raised has, in fact, adversely affected the market value of said bonds; and whereas the possibility of the termination of the said American-Dominican Convention of 1907 before the redemption of all of the bonds of the issues of 1908 is wholly dependent upon the amount of customs revenues collected and consequently the rate at which additional amounts are applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds first issued in 1908 under said convention in accordance with the specific provision in Article I of said convention, being as follows:

Provided, That in case the customs revenues collected by the general receiver shall in any year exceed the sum of $3,000,000, one-half of the surplus of such sum of $3,000,000 shall be applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds"; and whereas, in view of this contingency, it is advisable and necessary to provide additional payments for account of the amortization fund for the redemption of bonds of January 1, 1918, so that the market value of such bonds may be maintained at a parity with the bonds of 1908:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the powers vested in the military government of Santo Domingo, there is hereby pledged from the customs revenues of the Dominican Republic, in addition to the amount heretofore pledged in paragraph 8 of Executive Order No. 193 above mentioned, a sum equal to 60 per cent of the one-half of the surplus above $3,000,000 of customs revenues from imports and exports collected by the general receiver of the Dominican Republic in any calendar year, which would otherwise accrue to the Dominican Government; and said additional amounts shall be applied to the purchase and retirement of the bonds of the Dominican Republic dated January 1, 1918, in the following manner:

The total of the additional amounts pledged in the preceding paragraph shall be applied, so far as practicable, to the purchase of said bonds, without distinction as to series or denominations, at prices not in excess of par value. Beginning February 1, 1920, of the total amount available on February 1 of each year, one-third shall be applied to such purchases, and of the remainder available on March 1 of each year one-half shall be so applied to such purchases, and the total amount remaining available on April 1 of each year shall be applied to such purchases. The Secretaría de Estado Hacienda y Comercio of the Dominican Government, by means of notices published at least once each during the months of December, January, February, and March of each year beginning with December, 1919, shall offer to purchase said bonds within limits and on the dates herein specified; such notices shall be published in the Official Gazette of the Dominican Government, in one of the daily newspapers of the city of Santo Domingo, and in one of the daily newspapers of the City of New York. Proposals to sell said bonds shall be submitted in triplicate, in the forms prescribed by the Secretaría de Estado de Hacienda y Comercio, and shall be delivered in sealed envelopes to that office before 10 o'clock a. m. on the dates specified for such purchases; and no proposal submitted in any other form or manner shall be considered. Such proposals shall be opened in the Secretaría de Estado de Hacienda y Comercio at 10 o'clock a. m. on the dates specified for such purchases, unless said dates should fall on Sundays or legal holidays, in which event the opening shall take place on the day following, and the best proposals shall be accepted up to the amount available on that date.

for such purchase; if necessary to decide between two or more equal proposals the acceptance shall be decided by lot. Any person or firm who has submitted a proposal shall be entitled to be present, either in person or by representative, at the opening of the proposals. All bonds so purchased, together with interest coupons corresponding thereto, shall be duly registered as retroceded records of the Contaduría General de Hacienda and immediately cannot be destroyed. Any part of the additional amount herein pledged which is not utilized in the purchase of bonds as herein provided shall be applied to the amortization fund for the redemption and payment of said bonds in accordance with the provisions of Executive Order No. 193 hereinbefore referred to.

The general receiver of Dominican customs is hereby authorized to make monthly segregations, commencing as of date January 1, 1919, from the receipts of the Dominican Republic, of the proportional amounts representing the 60 per cent of the one-half of the surplus above $3,000,000 of customs revenues hereinbefore pledged and, on or before January 10 of each year, to deposit the total of the sums so segregated during the preceding year with the designated depository for the Dominican Government in the special account "Dominican Republic 5 per cent bond issue, 1918"; and such segregation of deposits shall be regularly continued by the general receiver of Dominican customs until all of the bonds issued under authority of executive order No. 193 shall have been redeemed and paid.

The good faith of the Dominican Republic is hereby irrevocably pledged to the faithful compliance with the foregoing provisions, and this order cannot be revoked or impaired by any law or decree which the Government of the Dominican Republic or any authority thereof may subsequently enact or by any interpretation thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Knowles.

STATEMENT OF MR. MOSES GARCIA MELLA.

MR. KNOWLES. Will you give for the record, your full name, Mr. M.

MR. MELLA. Moses Garcia Mella, lawyer.

MR. KNOWLES. Of what country are you a native?

MR. MELLA. One of the professors of the National University.

MR. KNOWLES. Of what country are you a native?

MR. MELLA. Santo Domingo.

MR. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

MR. MELLA. In Santo Domingo.

MR. KNOWLES. Have you lived continuously in that country?

MR. MELLA. Always.

MR. KNOWLES. Are you prepared to give testimony in regard to official transactions of the Government of Jimenez and prior thereto?

MR. MELLA. I wish to give to the committee some information in connection with the circumstances which brought about the occupation.

SENATOR JONES. What was his official connection with the Jimenez administration?

MR. KNOWLES. Had you any official connection with the Jimenez administration?

MR. MELLA. I am not a politician.

SENATOR POMERENE. That does not answer the question. Had you any official position?

MR. MELLA. No, sir. And I add that I am not a politician. Nor have I been a politician. Nor am I interested in Dominican politics.

SENATOR JONES. Tell us how he obtained this information.

MR. KNOWLES. Yes, we will. You have certain information that you question you will offer and submit to this commission. Will you explain the nature and character generally of that information, and how it came into your possession?

MR. MELLA. I will. Firstly, I wish to declare to the Senate committee that we have always protested and I do protest against American intervention in this country. I wish to declare, under oath, that I only know one Dominican who is an interventionist, and I know that that Dominican is an interventionist because he stated so in the press. He protested against certain acts of intervention. At this time there is in this hall more than 300 persons, and I would ask that if there is one in this room who is an interventionist, let him come and so state.

I wish to declare personally I have not received ill-treatment from the officers of the intervention. They have treated me as a gentleman. I do not test against American intervention even if it had been effective in making the archbishop as a President. I wish to declare that I admire the A.

tions; that I would wish to feel American influence in my country in a fair manner, but free. American influence has been developed in Santo Domingo in a manner that has not been beneficial. I do not wish to refer to the history, I wish to refer to contemporary acts.

1914 Gen. Boedas was elected President. A revolution took place at Santo Domingo. Minister Sullivan passed through Puerto Plata and by his input a stop to the revolution. The revolutionists declared they wanted reforms in Dominican law. But the influence of Minister Sullivan only seemed to stop the revolution. Later on another revolution broke out, and an influence was felt through Minister Sullivan and Gov. Fort. On this occasion, through American influence, the Government was overthrown, acting president was appointed, but no reform of laws took place. The way that was touched was the electoral law, only to form a regulation that was worse than the previous one. In such a way that Counsellor Smith said that the remedy was worse than the sickness—Charles C. Smith.

KNOWLES. As I understand, Senator, Mr. Fort was sent down here as a commissioner and I think Mr. Smith came.

WELLA. Mr. Smith was here with Mr. Sullivan, secretary of the legation. KNOWLES. Then he was secretary of the legation?

WELLA. Mr. Smith spoke to me because he knew that I had certain laws enacted. Through the elections carried out under this bad law, the Government of Jimenez came into being, and I affirm if this American influence had developed to bring about the reform of the three worst laws we had, we would have seen this intervention. I am told that the Americans should name reformers of laws in our country.

CHAIRMAN. In order that we may get this straight in the record, he has referred to three laws, if I understand. Let him state what those laws were when they were passed. I assume by the Congress here. Is that what he WELLA. The Dominican Congress, the electoral law, the law of provisional government organization, and the law of conscription. They were passed in 1882.

CHAIRMAN. 1882. He doesn't mean that.

WELLA. 1882. As I state, the American influence should not be exercised, but should be exercised only as long as necessary.

CHAIRMAN. As I get that, that is a sort of contradiction.

(Answer was read by the stenographer.)

WELLA. President Jimenez was elected constitutionally and took charge of the office. On the 19th of November, 1915, the American legation in Santo Domingo sent a note to the Government making certain demands which were made of a free people.

CHAIRMAN. Has he got a copy of those demands or notes?

KNOWLES. Yes; we will put that in the record, Senator.

CHAIRMAN. I suggest that it be put in right at this point. Have you got it now?

KNOWLES. I have not got it just here. I can get it in a few minutes.

CHAIRMAN. As one member of the committee, I am not familiar with that note and I would like to see it, in order that we may ascertain just what it contains.

KNOWLES. I have a copy in Spanish. I will have immediately a translation made of that note.

CHAIRMAN. It was a note signed by whom and addressed to whom?

KNOWLES. It was an official note of the Department of State transmitted to the Dominican Government through the American minister here. In substance it was a duplication of the transactions that had occurred a little prior to the present, and a duplication of that in the form of an official note addressed to this Government. What the witness is now referring to and the substance of that note I will present to be introduced in the record.

CHAIRMAN. Well, can you, in a word, give us the substance of it now, so that we may be able to follow the testimony?

KNOWLES. He can read it now if the committee wants, in Spanish.

CHAIRMAN. Well, all right. Let him show it to the interpreter, and then let the interpreter translate it for us.

JONES. How long is it?

KNOWLES. I think there are six pages of it.

CHAIRMAN. Oh, well, we don't want to wait for that.

Senator POMERENE. No; but I thought in a few words you could tell the burden of the complaint was.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, it is simply this: As in Haiti, it was proposed Dominican Government under a form of protectorate of the United States the control of the army and with the control of the finances of the country. That is the substance of it.

The INTERPRETER. He says in the course of his remarks he will not do so and let you know the substance of it.

Mr. HOWE. What is the date of that and who signed it?

The CHAIRMAN. November 19, 1915. The State Department.

Mr. KNOWLES. And it is signed by the American minister?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a note that comes from the Department through the American minister, addressed to the Dominican Government.

Mr. MELLA. The government of President Jimenez rejected that note. The agreement was caused between the minister of war and President Jimenez due to—

The CHAIRMAN. Let him give the name of the minister of war right.

Mr. MELLA. Desiderio Arias. Due to the appointment of two emperors of the army.

Senator JONES. Let me ask, has this document ever been published in?

Mr. KNOWLES. It is now being translated. Mr. Senator, in English. As soon as it is later it will be put in pamphlet or book form and will be introduced into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I notice that the whole pamphlet is addressed to the people of the United States of America.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator JONES. And it is dated in 1919.

Senator POMERENE. A pamphlet by whom?

Senator JONES. It is gotten up by?

Mr. MELLA. This book was printed before the intervention, in order to be against intervention.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the intervention?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; at the time of the intervention.

Mr. MELLA. In order to protest against intervention this book was written. I talk very poor English.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you do very well.

Senator JONES. It is supposed to be a document giving the facts of the intervention, with dates.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is it. A very important book, dealing exclusively with this matter, Senator. It is in course of translation now, and as a record, before we finish with our session here I will introduce the Spanish and later a translated copy in English.

Senator JONES. It gives the whole Dominican side of the controversy. Senator POMERENE. Proceed.

Mr. MELLA. This is not really a revolution, because had Minister Jimenez wanted to proclaim himself President he could have taken President Jimenez prisoner easily, because President Jimenez was out of the city, in fact, without forces of any kind.

Mr. KNOWLES. Explain why he was there at that time.

Mr. MELLA. He was there for his health, at his villa. President Jimenez was at his villa because he was a little sick.

This disagreement ended with a small or an insignificant encounter between the forces, which I witnessed personally, in which two were killed and many wounded. Nothing else.

I live outside of the city, about 12 kilometers from here, and every day I go from my house to my office, passing by the Government forces and the American forces, and nobody troubled me. American marines were landed to protect the American legation and the customs. This was what was told to the people.

The CHAIRMAN. Told to the country by whom?

Mr. MELLA. By Minister Russell himself. If it was printed in the press, necessary, I can present the newspapers in which it was published.

Mr. KNOWLES. That was the explanation at that time, Senator, for the landing of the troops, that it was for the purpose, as the American minister said, merely for the purpose of protecting the American legation and customs.

Mr. MELLA. It was printed in the Liston Diario No. 8066, of the 17th of November 1916. President Jimenez, when he saw that the number of troops was s needed for the protection of the legation, because there were more than and not wanting to prevent some settlement of the situation, resigned.

Arias was in the city. A few days later an ultimatum was sent to him, for that he should turn over the Fort Eliza to the American marines.

CHAIRMAN. Was sent to him by whom?

MELLA. Admiral Caperton.

HOWE. To whom?

MELLA. Crossley.

FOR JONES. Where did you get this information?

MELLA. In the newspaper. I can show the newspaper.

KNOWLES. Suppose we introduce that communication now, Senator.

FOR POMERENE. Is it claimed to be an official communication?

KNOWLES. Oh, certainly. Signed by the American naval officer, Capt.

Y.

CHAIRMAN. That is all right.

MELLA. Gen. Arias evacuated Fort Eliza, and the American marines occupied the city, and since that date are in it. The city was occupied, and Admiral on and Mr. William W. Russell on the 15th of May, 1916, sent this communication to the President and the president of the Senate:

SENATEMEN: This city has been occupied militarily by the American forces. Having sincere intention of guaranteeing free and equal acts of the chamber for the election of the new President of the Republic. Due to the abnormal situation which has brought about the present circumstances, we request that you do not convene any session for two or three days until the city has resumed its normal aspect."

FOR JONES. Who signed that?

MELLA. "Yours, respectfully, William W. Russell, American minister. Caperton, rear admiral, United States Navy." Published in the Liston of the 17th of May, 1916, No. 8091.

CHAIRMAN. What reply did the President or the president of the Senate or Congress make to this communication?

MELLA. They took no action.

KNOWLES. That is, they complied with the request?

FOR JONES. You have not got it in the record right. They made no action and took no action regarding the election, as requested by this letter.

KNOWLES. Exactly. Complied with the request of the officials.

FOR POMERENE. Next, in order that I may have this correctly in mind, who was the provisional President at this time, was he?

KNOWLES. No; he had not been elected yet. He was elected after that—

HOWE. Jimenez was elected after this?

KNOWLES. Yes.

HOWE. Henriquez was President?

CHAIRMAN. Let us get that straight. Yes, at that time it was the end of Jimenez government. That is right.

FOR JONES. Just prior to this letter, Jimenez had resigned, had he?

MELLA. Yes. Jimenez resigned. And then—

FOR POMERENE. Can you give the date when he resigned?

MELLA. The 7th of May he resigned. The Chamber—the Senate—was to have a session to nominate a President.

CHAIRMAN. Elect a President, you mean.

MELLA. No; he was to come. He tried to come. He wanted to come. He was to meet, you know. The Senate wanted to meet.

CHAIRMAN. No; but he said "to nominate a President." I suppose he was to elect a President.

KNOWLES. Yes.

MELLA. And then he was prevented from that.

FOR JONES. This letter requested them not to do it.

MELLA. Yes; to stop.

CHAIRMAN. And in compliance with this request, they did not elect a provisional President at that time?

KNOWLES. That's right; exactly.

MELLA. Then as the country could not be without any Government, Minister of State recognized the secretaries of state for the cabinet as the government. All the secretaries of state ceased to function on the resignation of Jimenez.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; they resigned.

Mr. MELLA. No; they ceased to function. By law they ceased to function. The same system as you have in the United States. With the resignation of President Jimenez they ceased to function.

Mr. KNOWLES. They automatically ended their term?

Mr. HOWE. Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, Minister Russell, recorders of state of the cabinet to be the Government, although they ceased to function with the resignation of President Jimenez.

Mr. MELLA. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that the way you understand that?

Mr. KNOWLES. In understand that, with this addition, Senator. Mr. recognized them as a continuation of the Government of Jimenez.

The CHAIRMAN. That was as I understood the statement of the witness.

Mr. MELLA. Yes; that is right.

Mr. KNOWLES. And that notwithstanding the law ending the term members of the cabinet with the ending of the term or resignation—

The CHAIRMAN. You mean the Dominican law?

Mr. KNOWLES. The Dominican law and constitution.

Mr. MELLA. The constitution.

Senator JONES. That is the witness's interpretation of the Dominican

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Now, suppose you incorporate in the record the constitutional provision and the statutory provision, if there is one which supports the witness in that statement, so we may have the original statement.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will explain that to you, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. But I want the text in, and he can accompany his explanation he cares to.

Mr. KNOWLES. We want the text.

The CHAIRMAN. He can get the letter, if he has not got it, so that it is incorporated.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; but you can make your comment on it now.

The CHAIRMAN. And the stenographer will receive it and incorporate it at this point.

(The document referred to will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

Mr. MELLA. Several days passed without a president. So much so that a commission came from Cibao requesting that they be allowed to elect a president.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, they simply were the representative of the people to take it.

Mr. MELLA. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. They came with no legal authority?

Mr. MELLA. No. They came because the people were—

Senator JONES. He says they came from Cibao. What is Cibao?

Mr. MELLA. The northern part of the island, the northern towns, the Provinces of Santiago, La Vega, Maria, Puerto Plata, San Francisco de Macoris and Savanna.

The CHAIRMAN. They are all referred to by the people as the Cibao. Are they? Is that the idea?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; that is the idea.

The CHAIRMAN. Just designating a certain geographical area?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; a group of provinces.

Mr. MELLA. This commission met Admiral Caperton and Minister Rivas at the archbishop's palace, also the secretary of state and the president of the legislative bodies, and discussed the matter. In that discussion Rear Admiral Caperton stated his intentions in the Dominican Republic were not warlike, and that he was an honest, hard-working man; that his functions were to maintain order with his forces.

Senator JONES. From what are you reading now?

Mr. MELLA. From a newspaper. I will give you the name of it later.

Senator POMERENE. Does he claim that this is simply an oral statement of Admiral Caperton, or was it a signed formal statement?

Mr. MELLA. No; oral. That his instructions were to maintain order with his forces until the abnormal situation changed.

The CHAIRMAN. That was an order of the rear admiral, and I think it better put that in the record.

Senator POMERENE. No; he said it was an oral statement.

MELLA. An oral statement. Some people who were in the meeting it.

KNOWLES. Let us see if we understand exactly what he intended to in this. What the admiral said. I didn't get it perfectly clear. I don't whether you did or not.

Senator JONES. No; I didn't.

Senator POMERENE. As I understood the witness, this was an oral state-made by Admiral Caperton to his delegation or to some other citizens may have been there, and the witness does not claim that it was a formal, order.

KNOWLES. Exactly.

CHAIRMAN. By Admiral Caperton?

KNOWLES. Exactly. But let us have it plainly in the record.

CHAIRMAN. And he is quoting here, as I understand, this statement some newspaper report of this conference.

KNOWLES. That is it. Well, now, is it in the record just what was —claims to be stated—by the admiral? Did you get it clearly, Senator?

Senator JONES. I think so.

KNOWLES. You, Senator, also?

Senator POMERENE. I think I have taken it as accurately as my memory it.

KNOWLES. But as to what was said, the admiral was quoted as saying, u get that clear?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; I got that.

MELLA. At that meeting Minister Russell orally stated that the North can Government gave the legislative bodies complete liberty to elect a ent.

CHAIRMAN. Now, that was on what date?

MELLA. I will give the date. After several days, Dr. Francisco Hen-Carbarjo was appointed President of the Republic.

CHAIRMAN. Now, he means by that as provisional President, does he?

KNOWLES. Yes.

MELLA. Yes. And Dr. Francisco Henriquez Carbarjo had been living from the country for 12 years, practicing his profession as a doctor. s far removed from Dominican politics. Dr. Francisco Henriquez Caris one of the figures, or is a man of which any country must be proud, otwithstanding he was not recognized by the American Government, I that between the American Government and the Dominican legislative there was a solemn compact to recognize the man who would be idea is this: The Dominican Congress and Mr. Russell and Admiral on, as the representative of the American Government, were tied by this by which the Dominican Congress is stopped from electing. Yet you that is because you wish my election to be fair. Then you are obliged gnize my election. That is my point.

Senator JONES. What you mean is this: That inasmuch as the Dominican ss had delayed the election of the President at the request of the Americial, and inasmuch as they afterwards elected President Henriquez co Carbarjo, that the American officials were thereby obligated to recog-legality of the election of the new President.

KNOWLES. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. Ask him if that is the thought. Let the interpreter just what I have said.

Interpreter spoke to the witness in Spanish.)

MELLA. Yes; that is my idea.

KNOWLES. Now, that confused part, Mr. Senator, would it not be well

Senator JONES. Oh, no; let it all go in there.

Senator POMERENE. Proceed.

MELLA. When President Henriquez was elected the internal revenues and r receipts of the country had been taken over by the Americans, and wards was appointed treasurer of the Republic.

KNOWLES. Treasurer of the Republic?

MELLA. An important notice was published by C. H. Baxter, receiver gen-

KNOWLES. That is a short order. We would like to have that in the

Mr. MELLA (reading). "In accordance with instructions from Washington"—

The CHAIRMAN. Give the date of the whole thing.

Mr. MELLA. 18th of August, 1916.

Senator JONES. What page are you reading from?

Mr. MELLA. 127.

"In accordance with instructions from Washington and supplementaries transmitted to the American minister in Santo Domingo, the customhouse department will not be given any funds on account of the Government, which is under the control of the Dominican treasurer established since the 1st of June, 1916. This suspension of payment will continue until a complete understanding is arrived at or come to regarding the interpretation of articles of the American-Dominican convention of 1907. Interpretation on the part of the Government of the United States has insisted and of which the Dominican Government has knowledge or have had knowledge since the month of November last, or until the actual Dominican Government be recognized by the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, in the translation you used the word "cessation"? Don't you mean "cessation"?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator JONES. That is signed C. H. Baxter, receiver general.

Mr. MELLA. This mode of action constituted a flagrant violation of the American-Dominican convention of 1907.

Senator JONES. Was not the treasurer of the Dominican Government out of time in want of funds?

Mr. MELLA. The Dominican treasurer had funds, but in case there was not it was not necessary to publish that notice, because, according to the terms of the convention, $100,000 was proposed to be set apart monthly later on what was left would be delivered to the Government. What is on in this note is the following: "After the customs take $100,000 I will deliver what is left. I will take my $100,000, and if there is any more I will not give it to you."

Senator JONES. You had no personal knowledge of the condition of the treasury at that time, had you?

Mr. MELLA. No; I had not, but I suppose there was money, because there was none there is no reason to say that. I suppose there were funds, but had there been none there would have been no necessity to publish that notice.

The CHAIRMAN. Were there sufficient funds to pay the current obligations of the Government?

Mr. MELLA. Oh, to be sure; any time.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, you say you are sure about it. My information is to the contrary.

Mr. MELLA. The Dominican Government has never lent the people $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. You have in mind one thing and I have another. I am asking about the general obligations of the Dominican Government.

Mr. MELLA. The budget?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MELLA. That is another thing.

The CHAIRMAN. That's another thing. But did not this relate to the budget?

Mr. MELLA. Yes; that relates to the budget. He says he will take $100,000, "but if there is any more money from internal revenue and customs revenue, I take them and I don't give them to you." That is what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. You really could not say that the military authorities assumed to take care of the budget for the Dominican Government?

Mr. MELLA. But he did not pay. With this addition, that he does not want to reduce the Government to starvation. Let me tell you again, if you please, honorable gentlemen. This is one official report made by the secretary of foreign relations when he was installed by Admiral Knapp going to explain some words officially that are there. When he discussed Mr. Russell upon that matter, Mr. Russell told him, "The suspension of payment is temporary. The money is safely deposited, and in due time the employees will receive what is theirs."

Senator JONES. From what are you reading now?

Mr. MELLA. From the official report of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. Made by whom?

Mr. MELLA. By the minister of foreign relations.

CHAIRMAN. To whom did he make the report?

MELLA. He made it to President Henriquez. I will hand it to you.

CHAIRMAN. That is what I am anxious to have.

MELLA. You will have it. I brought it in order to hand it to you.

CHAIRMAN. Were there not a number of disputed claims outstanding at time?

MELLA. There were no official international claims.

CHAIRMAN. I am not talking about international claims. I am talking claims against the Dominican Republic—internal claims.

MELLA. The Dominican Republic could owe their employees. It was right.

CHAIRMAN. I am asking you if they did not owe their employees, and if were not a number of disputed claims.

MELLA. I am not certain. There may have been. No receipts were taken by the officers appointed by the customs department. The Government of Henriquez protested, and he was told that he would not be recognized, and he employees would not be paid.

CHAIRMAN. Now, where does this witness get his information of those MELLA. From that report [indicating].

CHAIRMAN. Then I think the report is the best evidence of the fact.*

MELLA. It is very long, and I wish to explain my ideas upon that point.

SENATOR POMERENE. You can refer to the part of the report which contains statement.

MELLA. "Due to the fact that the receiver general of customs has taken the treasury and all receipts belonging to the Republic, and having decreed carried out the suspension of the payments of the nation until an understanding regarding the interpretation of certain articles of the American Convention be come to, or until the present government be recognized." (Pp. 1 and 2.)

CHAIRMAN. Suppose you identify that, Mr. Knowles, in the record.

KNOWLES. Pages 1 and 2 of a report of the foreign minister of the Henriquez government to the President of the Republic, relating to the conflict in the Dominican and American Governments.

CHAIRMAN. Is there something else that he wants to say in answer to question?

MELLA. One of the conditions upon which President Henriquez should be organized was that he should accept a protocol by which the Dominican Government would consent that all funds would be managed by American officers, appointed by the President of the United States, who would take part in drawing up the Budget, and that the Dominican Republic would consent to be the forces of the Republic under the command of an American officer appointed by the President of the United States, who would be assisted by American officers, also appointed by the President of the United States. Officers and enlisted men, the rules governing payment, or personnel, the appointment, discipline which the commander recommends, he authorized and promulgated by the Government of the Dominican Republic, and in case of any misunderstanding regarding any of the regulations set herein, this matter would be decided by the President of the United States.

CHAIRMAN. Now, from what pages of the report is he reading?

MELLA. Pages 12 and 13.

KNOWLES. And that, I might add, Senator, is the substance of the note referred to earlier.

CHAIRMAN. Now, let the record show the date of this report as well.

KNOWLES. Yes. December 6, 1916.

CHAIRMAN. That is the date of the report made by the minister of foreign affairs to President Henriquez. If you have finished that answer I will ask you two or three questions.

MELLA. If you will let me finish.

CHAIRMAN. Yes; yes.

MELLA. This means placing the Dominican Republic in the hands of an officer who would be sent to command or take charge of the guards, he would enlist men, would state what salary they should receive, he would punish or reward them as necessary, and would draw up all laws to be enacted. It is preferable, gentlemen of the commission, to have the American intervention as it exists at the present time—infiniely better—rather than consent to this.

Senator POMERENE. A moment ago you stated in answer to a question Senator Jones that at the time this internal revenue was taken over, there was money in the treasury. Are you sure about that?

Mr. MELLA. I have not seen the money, but I have seen the words of Mr. Russell himself, saying "The money is at your disposal as soon as you accept this."

The CHAIRMAN. I do not want any question about my questions or answers that may be given.

Mr. MELLA. Read this (addressing the interpreter):

The CHAIRMAN. Before that, so that there may be no misunderstanding, the interpreter give my question.

The INTERPRETER. This is in answer to your question.

The CHAIRMAN. I know, but I want to be sure—I think you do understand, but I want to be certain about it.

(The question was then read by the stenographer, as follows:)

"A moment ago you stated in answer to a question put by Senator Jones at the time this internal revenue was taken over there was money in the treasury. Are you sure about that?"

Mr. MELLA. I did not see the money, but the report which I presented is as follows—

The CHAIRMAN. Does he desire to read in that?

Mr. MELLA. If you please.

The CHAIRMAN. Very good. Take the page from which you are reading.

Mr. KNOWLES. And whose words they are.

Mr. MELLA. Page 2. "To the declarations and demands made the day after we replied"—

Mr. KNOWLES. What minister?

Mr. MELLA. It does not say here.

Mr. KNOWLES. Minister Russell?

Mr. MELLA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. American Minister Russell.

Mr. MELLA. "That the suspension of payment was temporary, that the money was safely deposited, and that in due time the public employees would be paid what was theirs."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, what is the date of that statement?

Mr. MELLA. This conversation was taken in the beginning of the Government of President Henriquez.

Senator POMERENE. Now, there was a revolt or revolution here in June, was there not?

Mr. MELLA. No, sir.

Senator POMERENE. Well, put it that there was some trouble then between President and the secretary of war.

Mr. MELLA. That happened in the month of May.

Senator POMERENE. And ended when?

Mr. MELLA. He resigned the 7th of May.

Senator POMERENE. Now, I read from the report of the department of finance and commerce of the Dominican Republic for the year ending 1920, inclusive, submitted by Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo, Jr., that the condition of the Dominican treasury at that time. He says—I read from the report—"The cash balance of the Government in June, 1916, was $14,234,600 and supply bills and salaries had been unpaid for many months."

Mr. MELLA. I am going to speak in regard to that.

Senator POMERENE. Very well. Go ahead.

Mr. MELLA. I wish to accept that statement as true, but I affirm that the condition of 1907 was in no way violated thereby.

Senator POMERENE. Then, just let me ask you a question or two which I can explain after I shall have finished my question. "In 1907"—and I read from this safe report—"the debts and claims against the Government amounted to over $30,000,000." Is that correct?

Mr. MELLA. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. That in the negotiation between the United States authorities and the Dominican Government—and I read from this report of the Dominican Republic effected a conditional adjustment, under which the total sum of the debts amounted to not more than $17,000,000." Is that correct?

Mr. MELLA. Yes.

nator POMERENE. And then under the convention of 1907—and again I read the report—“Part of the plan of settlement was the issue and sale of bonds to the amount of $20,000,000.” Is that correct? And later on—and again I read from the report—“Under this convention bonds to the face value of $20,000,000 were issued in 1908.” Is that correct?

MR. MELLA. Yes.

nator POMERENE. And it is under the terms of that loan that $100,000 was paid on the first day of each calendar month by the receiver to the fiscal agent of the loan. That is right, is it not?

MR. MELLA. That is right.

nator POMERENE. With this understanding, “That in case the customs duties collected by the general receiver shall in any year exceed the sum of $3,000,000, one-half of the surplus above such sum of $3,000,000 shall be applied to the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds.”

Let me call attention to paragraph 3 of the convention of 1907, which reads as follows: “Until the Dominican Republic has paid the whole amount of the principal of the debt its public debt shall not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Republic and the United States.” That is the correct provision of that treaty.

MR. MELLA. Exactly.

nator POMERENE. Now, between 1908 and 1918, according to this report of Alexander Mayo—and now I read—“Meanwhile the contracting of new indebtedness by the Dominican Government without the consent of the United States went on rapidly, until the debts and claims against the Government aggregated over $15,000,000.” Is that a correct statement of the internal financial affairs of the Government?

MR. MELLA. I can not assure you that the sum of $15,000,000 is exact, but there was some debt.

nator POMERENE. It is approximately correct, is it not?

MR. MELLA. I can not say, because I have no set of figures, but I have said there was a debt. Whether it was three or four or five million dollars, I can not say.

nator POMERENE. Very well. Let us proceed a step further then. “Later claims commission was organized, composed of two eminent Dominicans, two eminent Americans, and one eminent Porto Rican, and claims were presented to this commission amounting to over $16,000,000.” Is not that correct?

MR. MELLA. I can not state exactly regarding these amounts, but there was some debt.

nator POMERENE. Is not that approximately correct?

MR. MELLA. More or less. There was a debt.

nator POMERENE. Now is it not a fact that this commission heard these claims and allowed claims against the Dominican Government slightly in excess of $4,200,000?

MR. MELLA. I can not state exactly the figures, but there was some debt.

nator POMERENE. Was not this indebtedness by the Dominican Republic in violation of that provision of the convention of 1907 which provided that its public debt should not be increased except by previous agreement between the Dominican Government and the United States?

MR. MELLA. I reply categorically that that debt is not a public debt as provided by article 3 of the convention.

CHAIRMAN. That was the question of difference between the Dominican Government and the United States authorities?

MR. MELLA. Yes.

nator POMERENE. And that was the condition as it was claimed by the Dominican States Government at the time it took over the administration of the Dominican revenue of the Republic of Santo Domingo?

MR. MELLA. Yes.

nator POMERENE. Now, any explanation further that you desire to make the committee will be pleased to hear.

MR. MELLA. Yes, sir. That was the contention of the American Government, that in a hasty examination of the matter I state that the American Government had made a correct interpretation, because no government in the world, not even the very wealthy Government of the United States, can be sure that the revenues which they may have in a year will not be increased with the extraordinary expenses caused through general calamities. That is one part.

On the other hand, supposing that the receipts are not equal to the estimated, then a debt is formed, because there are no receipts, and I call attention to this fact: The receipts of the Dominican Republic are managed by American officers, and notwithstanding that, last year there was a deficit of more than $1,000,000, and at this time there is a deficit, because there are not sufficient receipts to cover expenses. No government in the world promises to state that it will have all that is estimated. The Dominican Republic produced the deficit in the budget. They did pay their employees, they did not contract any loans.

Senator POMERENE. You mean the Dominican Republic?

Mr. MELLA. The Dominican Republic. They did not increase the price.

Senator POMERENE. Just a moment there. But this debt in June, 1904, was said to be approximately $16,000,000. But this commission determined the actual debt thus incurred was only $4,200,000. How do you account for the difference between the asserted debt and the proven debt as shown by the commission?

Mr. MELLA. Easily. Because the claimants against the Dominican Republic claimed more than the Dominican Government owed them.

Senator POMERENE. Who were these claimants?

Mr. MELLA. There is a report published by this commission—

Senator POMERENE. Yes; you are right.

Mr. MELLA. In which all persons are given and many reasons are given.

Senator POMERENE. Yes; we will get that, and I will not pursue that part of the inquiry further. I take it, Mr. Howe, you will have that report.

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir; I have it now.

Senator POMERENE. I will not pursue that.

Senator JONES. Is there not a considerable difference between the assertion of claims against the Government in such an amount as stated in the report and a mere annual deficit in the budget such as you referred to a moment ago?

Mr. MELLA. First, the difference was not produced in one year only. In that amount of $4,200,000 there are claims for damages.

Senator JONES. Don't you believe that the building up or rather the assertion of such a large amount of claims against the Dominican Government affected its public credit?

Mr. MELLA. I affirm that had the Dominican Government been left free from the causes of revolution had been eliminated the Dominican Government would have been able to pay that debt in a very short time.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, Mr. Senator, I wish to take up just as little as possible with any matter that I wish personally to explore, but I have taken somewhat by surprise in the presentation of one point at this time that we expected to take up a little later. Since you have pursued and gone in the record, I ask that I may state and a little later produce the evidence in support of it—

Senator POMERENE. Let me suggest this: We do not want to get out of the subject. I suggest that you let this witness proceed. The members of the commission are not foreclosing their minds about a matter of this kind, and you can make your statement and bring your witness by whom you expect to prove the question later on just as well. We are going to get this record in rather a hasty state if we do not finish with this one witness.

Mr. KNOWLES. Then I will wait until the conclusion of the witness.

Senator POMERENE. Oh, yes; and then you can present your witness and shall be glad to hear any explanation you may wish to make in the future.

Mr. MELLA. Shall I proceed?

Senator POMERENE. Proceed.

Mr. MELLA. As stated, this kind of debt can not be provided for by contract, because no Government in the world can be sure that some person will not make claims which are not more or less just. That explains the $16,000,000 claimed from the Dominican Government, while they only owe $4,000,000. But supposing that the difference in interpretation was between both Governments there is no law in the world, neither international nor human law, which gives to one party the right to give justice according to one side. No one side has the right, and to carry that out is as taking the life of the debtor.

Senator JONES. He says there is no international or common law?

The INTERPRETER. Human law.

ator JONES. Common law, which will give to one party to a contract the right to determine the terms of that contract, to the extent of taking the life of the other party by reason of its violation.

KNOWLES. Yes. Its interpreted violation.

ator JONES. Yes.

MELLA. And the Government of the United States, through this intervention, has taken away the life and the liberty of the Dominican Republic.

ator POMERENE. Now, let me ask another question there. A large portion of this so-called debt of $16,000,000, as I understand it, was claimed as due to suppress revolutionary outbreaks, was it not?

MELLA. A part of this debt was produced by claims made against the Government, as you will be able to see when you examine the report of the Commission. The other part was the result of expenses incurred by the Government in putting down some revolutions.

ator POMERENE. How many were there between 1907 and 1916?

KNOWLES. Senator McCormick asked for the complete list, Senator.

ator POMERENE. I thought this was an exceptionally well-informed witness. I think he can, without much trouble, give us the exact facts.

MELLA. The revolution which overthrew the government of Victoriano Prud'homme lasted 11 months.

ator POMERENE. And that was in 1912?

MELLA. 1912.

ator POMERENE. How many other revolutions were there during that time from 1907 to 1916?

MELLA. Two more.

ator POMERENE. And give the dates and state the length of time that they continued.

MELLA. The revolution which overthrew the government of President Prud'homme lasted about 11 months. The first revolt against Boedas lasted about a year and a half, and another revolution which overthrew the government of General Boedas lasted about five months.

ator POMERENE. Give the date of that.

MELLA. About the end of 1914. As stated, the debts were produced by the claims made, a part of them; that is, outside of the provisions of the law, and the deficit which was produced by the budget through extraordinary expenses for war are also outside of any provisions.

ator POMERENE. My good friend, in view of what he has just said, will also state that it must take two parties to decide that, and not one party.

MELLA. Oh, to be sure. I agree with you, but you alone have decided it. It is for POMERENE. We are down here to help decide it.

KNOWLES. He meant, Senator, the Government decided itself that question without submitting it, for instance, to arbitration if it was disputed.

MELLA. But I want to explain—ator POMERENE. Well, that was a little aside. Proceed. We will not interrupt you.

MELLA. As President Henriquez did not wish to accept that protocol, he refused to sign it.

ator POMERENE. Now, he says deposed. By whom?

MELLA. By Admiral Knapp, through the proclamation by which he deposed the world that the Dominican Republic was under the military occupation of the Army of the United States on the 29th of November, 1916. But in order to prove that President Henriquez wanted to accept American influence and not to place the Republic under the American protectorate, and in the condition in which Haiti is. President Henriquez proposed to accept a financial adviser who would "O. K." all expenses and pass a law through which his financial adviser could oppose or reject any expenses that were not in the budget.

In page 11 of the report submitted I read: "Art. IV. The Dominican Republic obliges itself in the same manner to invest a financial adviser, appointed by the president, subject to the recommendation of the President of the United States, with the necessary authority for the discharge of his functions. His powers will be the following:

To help the competent, Dominican functionaries in adjusting and settling the debts pending to-day.

To start an adequate system of public accounting.

To investigate and recommend measures to increase public revenues and to reduce public expenses in such a way as to avoid deficit.

"(d) To find out the validity of those claims presented against the Dominican Government and to inform both Governments regarding same.

"(e) To countersign all checks, drafts, or orders made against the funds of the Dominican treasury in accordance with the budget and laws regarding same.

"(f) To see that this treaty is duly executed, and inform both Governments regarding same.

"(g) To recommend the best measures for raising revenue, and to make recommendations to the secretary of finance as he deems necessary for the welfare of the Dominican Republic, and in accordance with the power to the receiver general as described in article 1 of the convention of 1880 to obtain and to use all custom receipts which will be subject to these recommendations."

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me ask, in order to avoid duplication, report to which the witness has made reference several times included in the Spanish report?

Mr. MELLA. I don't know; but I do not think so.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; it is not included in that. It is only referred to in the report.

Senator POMERENE. The understanding is this entire report is to be in the record.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; all right.

Mr. MELLA. Dr. Ricas also agreed to ask the President of the United States to appoint an officer to instruct the guard, and to appoint some other officers—Cubans, Chileans, or Americans—

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Senator, as this declaration is so very important, wait for Senator Jones to return?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; we will take a recess for five minutes.

(The committee here took a recess for five minutes, after which the hearings were resumed, as follows:)

(Senator McCormick here took the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. We have time for half an hour before luncheon.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Stenographer, will you read the last?

(The following was then read by the stenographer:)

"Dr. Ricas also agreed to ask the President of the United States to send an officer to instruct the guard and to appoint some other officers—Cubans, or Americans."

Senator POMERENE. When he says that I assume he means by some communication.

Mr. KNOWLES. Oh, undoubtedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the record show that.

Mr. KNOWLES. We will ask him.

Mr. MELLA. Page 8 of the report.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think, Mr. Senator, that he is reading now extracts from an official proposition that was made by the Henriquez government to the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me ask: Since that was so, was the communication handed by the Government here to the American minister or by the Dominican minister to the State Department in Washington?

Mr. MELLA. I think Minister Cabral is coming from Santiago to be interviewed.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; he is arriving to-day.

Mr. MELLA (resuming). He states as follows (pp. 7, 8): "In successive interviews I continued taking up all the points of the former memorandum to the minister, and at last, at a meeting which we had and at which Sr. Francisco Peynado, secretary of finance, I presented to the minister a proposal for the modus vivendi, which is contained in the following memorandum." This shows that the proposal was made in writing. That proposition contains the willingness to accept the financial adviser and an instructor for the Dominican forces, but these proposals were not accepted, and as the Dominican Government can not accept that its budget be drawn up by an American, but by its own Congress, since such would be in violation of the constitution. It can not place its forces under the command of a foreign officer and be beforehand to pass all the laws which this officer may advise, and to pay the salaries which said officer may state should be paid. President Henriquez insisted, backed up by the whole Government, and all of the Dominican people.

I call the attention of the honorable American Senate to this fact, that the Dominican government which had not even one cent with which to buy paper, and that had not even one soldier or one policeman, was never disturbed.

show of banditry. There were no robbers, and that order reigned out the Republic, and notwithstanding this Government was thrown out of the palace and in its place a military government was instituted or declared and the Republic was submitted to military law. (See Admiral's proclamation of Nov. 29, 1916.)

There is one thing to which I wish to refer, because I had forgotten when speaking about the $4,200,000. In that amount, $4,000,000, the entire of the Dominican Republic for August, September, October, and November, is included, one-third of the budget. But as the budget amounted to only $4,000,000 there was included $1,200,000 that had not been paid, the intervention took place in accordance with the notice published by the Government.

It is in this order that you may see that the $4,200,000 included one-third of the budget not paid through the intervention. More than $2,000,000 for damages—that is to say, the debt incurred by the Government in the intervention was less than $1,000,000. A part of that debt was agreed to by the Dominican Government, because Mr. Michelam lent money with their consent. The HAIRMAN. What was the nominal sum of the claims against the Dominican Republic exclusive of the sum due on account of the budget to which the Government has just referred?

ELLA. About $14,000,000 for damages, and there is a report made by the commission of claims, which will show you—

HAIRMAN. I am familiar with the facts. I merely wanted to introduce the subject at this juncture to illuminate the testimony.

ELLA. The Government of Dr. Henriquez was thrown from the palace on the 9th of November, 1916. As the secretary of foreign relations or foreigners could not come to his office to make out his report, he found himself obliged to make use of my office. My stenographer copied that report, and Mr. Carval gave me a copy. From that copy I made another copy from which I delivered the same to the commission. [Handing a document to the HAIRMAN.]

Mr. POMERENE. This is the report from which he was testifying?

ELLA. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. It is already in the record.

ELLA. The commission will find copies of all memorandums of all communications and protests of the Dominican Government. I am going to close the commission to hear once again my protest as a Dominican, and my statement which I am going to repeat on oath.

There is only one Dominican whom I know who is in accordance with or against the American intervention. But it is also certain that all Dominican friends of the American people, and that in spite of the errors committed through the intervention, the Dominican people hope that that error is rectified and that the friendship of both people will be sealed by the friendship of this people, that although small has a right to live a free life, and that it will be a good friend of the great nation which has sent men that are an admiration of the world.

HAIRMAN. We thank the witness.

Mr. OWLES. In your declaration you stated that under the Jimenez government prior to the Jimenez government, there were some political troubles in the Plata Province, and that those troubles were completely settled and ended by the casual presence of the new American minister at that time, on his way from Washington to Santo Domingo City. I want to ask you the same efforts, in your opinion, had been made at the time of the resignation of Mr. Jimenez, if those moral influences could not have in the same way ended the difficulties that then existed between the President and the members of the cabinet.

ELLA. On that occasion there was no mediator, and I believe that if there had been spoken to Gen. Arias as at Puerta Plata, I am certain that matter would have ended in half an hour.

It is a matter that can be ascertained from the books of the treasury and Michelam's books. Gen. Arias's troops were receiving during several days that was owed only to the forces under the order of the Government. This was publicly stated in Santo Domingo, and it is a matter that can be found out.

Mr. POMERENE. I don't understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. Let me ask the witness. Did he consider the troops Gen. Desiderio Arias as Government troops?

Mr. MELLA. No.

The CHAIRMAN. His opinion is categorically opposite then to Mr. Lagrono who testified yesterday.

Mr. MELLA. No, my dear friend; I will explain. Gen. Arias, in war, refused to comply with certain orders of the Government, but at a moment a few days afterwards, when President Jimenez ordered him and in spite of that, he continued drawing his pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, now, will you let me—

Mr. MELLA. At a certain time his forces were legally forces of the Government, but at another time they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you let me say that my understanding may be or my memory. I do not challenge the statement of facts by one witness by the other, but I submit that a study of the testimony of Mr. Lagrono show that he repeatedly asserted that in law and formally Gen. Desiderio Arias continued in the service of the Government; that his troops were in service of the Government, although for the time being he was in a state of opposition to the President, and that if the witness will address particularly to one of the later questions which I asked Mr. Lagrono the association of opinion and interest between the chambers and the immediately under the command of Gen. Desiderio Arias, he will find there, a summary of Mr. Lagrono's opinion, and it is different from that.

Mr. MELLA. On that point Mr. Lagrono is a better witness than I.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Mella, you stated that Dr. Henriquez succeeded in electing Mr. Jimenez. I want to ask you if his election was in every respect according to the constitution of the Dominican Republic.

Mr. MELLA. Yes; President Henriquez was elected as constitutionally possible and with a unanimity of the vote of both legislative bodies.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he, so far as you know or heard expressions of the Dominican people, also the choice of the people of his country?

Mr. MELLA. I can assure you that all the Dominicans when they knew Henriquez's election felt the greatest satisfaction, for he is a person which, as stated before, any nation of the globe can be proud.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will ask you, Mr. Mella, if from the time of the inauguration of Dr. Henriquez as President, if among the Dominicans there was any disorder of any kind.

Mr. MELLA. There was disorder of no kind.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did that condition of peace and tranquillity exist at the time that he took his office until he was deposed by the American Government?

Mr. MELLA. I stated before and repeat again that that government, the government of Dr. Henriquez, without one dollar and without one property nor individuals were troubled. I do not ask the commission to what I say, but I ask the commission to call Americans who lived in the country for more than 20 years to testify concerning this matter.

The following is a matter to which I wish to invite the attention of the commission: That even during revolutions in Santo Domingo no property nor individuals were troubled. I do not ask the commission to what I say, but I ask the commission to call Americans who lived in the country for more than 20 years to testify concerning this matter.

Mr. KNOWLES. State who he is.

Mr. MELLA. He is now the manager of the sugar plantation named La He has been the manager of sugar plantations during all that time. As administrator there have been revolutions in the locality of his plantation.

I can mention Mr. H. R. Greiser, who has lived for many years in the country, and who on one occasion went from the capital to Santiago passing revolutionary forces, and carrying with him a large sum of money and only had to spend 40 cents on the road, which he made a present to a man. Mr. Greiser is at present in Santiago.

I might mention others. I am 51 years old, and I only know one American who was killed in one of our affairs, for which we paid a large sum of money—I don't remember how much.

Mr. KNOWLES. To whom was that sum of money paid?

Mr. MELLA. For what?

Mr. KNOWLES. For the death of that American.

MELLA. I suppose there was a claim made through the American Government, and that his family were paid.
 POMERENE. I assume he is referring to the same case as the witness lay referred to.

KNOWLES. Yes; the same case as yesterday.

MELLA. I can point out how his death occurred.

KNOWLES. I want to ask you, Mr. Mella, if during the administration of Mr. Henriquez there was any effort of any kind made by the United States to reach an understanding as to any differences that existed between the United States and the Dominicans, or if the demand of November 19, 1915, which was before Dr. Henriquez became President, was insisted should be met by him without a single change, modification, or acceptance of any wishes or desires in any manner whatsoever.

MELLA. A reading of the résumé will prove what I am about to say. On the 29th of November, 1915, when the Republic was completely at peace, we term Mr. Arias's conduct revolutionary, the Dominican Government certain exigencies or demands were made on the Dominican Government through or by notes alluded to, which demands tended to bring about the signing of a protocol similar to the one signed in Haiti. After President Arias resigned and President Henriquez was elected, he was told that it was a condition sine qua non to recognize that Government; that he should accept the conditions contained in the note.

CHAIRMAN. I am not quite sure that he understood the witness. Does he describe Gen. Arias's conduct as revolutionary in character?

MELLA. No, sir. Desiderio Arias never wanted to be President.

CHAIRMAN. He does not consider his conduct as revolutionary?

MELLA. No.

CHAIRMAN. Then he passes no criticism on the payment of his troops to the receiver?

MELLA. No. I mentioned that only as a fact.

CHAIRMAN. I would suggest, as various persons who are interested have suggested, that we take our usual recess at 12.30 instead of 2 o'clock. Upon the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m. pursuant to recess.

Present: Messrs. McCormick, Pomerene, and Jones, Senator McCormick.

CHAIRMAN. With your permission, Mr. Knowles and Mr. Witness, we will begin.

KNOWLES. Mr. Mella, I want to ask you to explain with a little more detail the arrangement that existed between the United States and the Dominican Republic under the only treaty that related to financial dealings between the two countries as to the collection of revenues of the country.

MELLA. We had in the country—the receipts of the country were divided into three parts, receipts from the customs and what was termed internal revenue, stamp paper, postage stamps, stamp tax, alcohol tax, etc. The receipts from the customs of the Republic went into the hands of the receiver general, in accordance with the convention of 1907. The receipts, called internal revenue, were collected directly by the Dominican Government. The receipts from customs were managed by the receiver general each month, after having taken out the hundred thousand dollars for the balance, if any was left, was turned over to the Government.

CHAIRMAN. There was a qualification, was there not, that if the—

KNOWLES. Yes, yes. That we put in the record this morning, Senator.

CHAIRMAN. Dominican Government in any way whatever, by treaty or agreement, to the United States any control whatever over the collection or distribution of the internal revenues?

MELLA. No, sir. These receipts were taken by the receiver general from the Dominican Republic, which Mr. Edwards took charge of the treasury.

CHAIRMAN. That was in June, 1916, was it?

MELLA. Yes; in June, 1916.

KNOWLES. That was not in accordance with any agreement that this was made with the United States?

MELLA. No. Not only was this not in accordance with any treaty, but it was a violation of article 2 of the convention of 1907.

Mr. KNOWLES. What does that article provide for?

The CHAIRMAN. I think I have it here: "The Dominican Government provide by law for the payment of all customs duties to the general receiver and his assistants, and will give to them all needful aid and assistance, protection to the extent of its powers. The Government of the United States will give to the general receiver and his assistants such protection as may be requisite for the performance of their duties."

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Mr. MELLA. Article 1 says: "That the President of the United States appoint a general receiver of Dominican customs, who, with such receivers, and other employees of the receivership as shall be appointed by the President of the United States in his discretion, shall collect all the duties accruing at the several customs houses of the Dominican Republic, the payment or retirement of any and all bonds issued by the Dominican Government in accordance with the plan and under the limitations as to amounts hereinbefore recited; and said general receiver shall apply the amounts collected as follows: "

Under this American-Dominican convention and under article 1 the general has the right to handle the customs receipts and nothing else but customs receipts. It does not state expressly whether the Dominican Government shall manage other receipts that were not customs receipts.

Mr. KNOWLES. That clause to which the witness refers is No. 1 and No. 2 as stated there. Was it from those internal revenues over which the United States had no control or right whatever and which were not payable to the United States, or any obligation in which the United States was interested, that the Government derived its revenue for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Government or to be expended in such other ways as the Dominican Government might desire to do?

Mr. MELLA. These receipts were included in the budget, and in accordance with the budget law the Dominican Government used the same.

Mr. KNOWLES. What was the effect of the seizure by the military of the United States of those revenues that belonged exclusively to the Dominican Republic upon the Dominican Republic?

Mr. MELLA. As the Dominican Government had been deprived of the revenue which was theirs, since it was not delivered to them, and was unable to collect directly the revenue which they were entitled to collect, the Dominican Government found itself without a cent, not even any money which to buy pen, ink, and paper during the administration of Dr. Henriquez for the full extension of the period.

Mr. KNOWLES. Under the operation of the treaty existing between the United States and the Dominican Republic, had the Dominican Government deriving regularly the part of the customs revenue that the treaty belonged to the Dominican Government?

Mr. MELLA. Yes. Until the Government of Dr. Henriquez.

Mr. KNOWLES. Had the United States up until that time admitted that the meaning of article 1 was that every dollar of the customs collected in excess of the first $100,000 and 5 per cent of the total expenses of the collection, belonged legally and rightfully and entirely to the Dominican Government?

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by "Had the United States admitted?"

Mr. KNOWLES. By its having taken out only up until that time that is specified in the treaty. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, who is competent to pass judgment on an admission by the United States? You were once, I believe, a minister of the United States. Admissions by the United States are by its constituted authorities.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will take merely the fact to speak for itself only and draw the word admission.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you to phrase the question so that it was not an assertion of admission by the United States or an admission by the United States except by the duly constituted authorities of the United States. No counsel for any body of Dominion citizens is not one.

Mr. KNOWLES. Very well. I will ask the privilege to withdraw that and put it in another way.

From the time that the treaty of 1907 went into effect down to the administration of Dr. Henriquez, had there been a single instance in the administration of that treaty by the United States, when the United States drew revenue from the customs revenue—

CHAIRMAN. Just a minute. The United States did not take anything from me. The receiver general, if you please.

KNOWLES. The receiver general took 1 cent more of the customs revenue than the $100,000 specified in the treaty and the 5 per cent allowed for expenses.

MELLA. Up to the administration of Dr. Henriquez there had been no difference between the receiver general and the Dominican Government concerning the matter. The receiver general collected the customs receipts, took the 10 months for the payment of the debt, took the part corresponding to the sinking fund, and turned over what was left to the Dominican Government. Until June, when the revenue was taken over, there was never any difference of opinion regarding same up to June, the time when the rents were turned over. I have official proof in connection with that. In a communication of the 19th of November, 1915, if the information I have is correct, the Dominican Government was requested to make all collections for the receiver general.

CHAIRMAN. All the collections?

MELLA. Of the internal revenue. All the collections of the country, and customs.

CHAIRMAN. A communication from whom, addressed to whom?

MELLA. The note of the American legation.

for POMERENE. I do not think either you or the witness wants the answer read in that way.

KNOWLES. No; you are very considerate about that, Senator.

for POMERENE. Your question is concerning the amount which the United States or the receiver general was to get out of these funds, and you speak of $100,000 per month, and in addition to that they would receive a certain amount of all over and above $3,000,000. Fifty per cent, as I recall it.

KNOWLES. Yes; that is right.

for POMERENE. Now, I take it what the witness wants us to understand is that we received that portion of the customs to which it is conceded the collector was entitled.

CHAIRMAN. Not "we" received. The collector received.

for POMERENE. Yes; the collector received. Under the treaty.

KNOWLES. Yes.

for POMERENE. Very well. With that understanding let it go.

MELLA. The receiver received all the costs and duties—no more. The 10 per cent revenue we are receiving by the Dominican Government. Of that 10 per cent duty, the receivership takes $100,000 for the service of the loan each year and 5 per cent sinking fund.

CHAIRMAN. Five per cent to defray expenses.

MELLA. To defray expenses. And over $3,000,000 receipts every year—he is half.

CHAIRMAN. Now just a moment. So they will get the English clear. Over the sum of $3,000,000 customs receipts in any one year, the receiver allocated half to the service of the debt, and turned the other half into the treasury of the Dominican Government. Was it half or 60 per cent?

MELLA. One-half. In such a manner that the Dominican Government has $800,000 every year, and the half of the amount over $3,000,000, and in the internal revenue.

KNOWLES. I am through with the witness on that point.

CHAIRMAN. Mr. Witness, do you care to suggest to the committee a day—a definite date—whether the 1st of January or another day—when the occupation, so-called should terminate and the last marine sail from Santo Domingo, and any conditions—conditions and arrangements necessary and proper to such departure? I ask this question because the testimony until now has been largely historical, and because, for one, I am interested in fixing the occupation and the conditions of that termination.

MELLA. The question is such a transcendently important one that I think that I be given 24 hours to make my answer.

CHAIRMAN. In view of the amount of time given to the hearings on the general aspect of the problem, in the light of the time which we have spent already, in view of the termination of these hearings probably to-morrow, in order that we may make some personal investigation before we leave Santo Domingo and charming capital. I ask the witness—and my colleagues join in asking him—to give us a written answer to the question.

MELLA. I will try to, and I shall be very glad if God gives me the way to people free.

The CHAIRMAN. I thank you for your courtesy, on behalf of the committee and the care which you have taken in answering our questions.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to continue the testimony of Mr. Lagrón.

STATEMENT OF MR. ARTURO LAGRÓN—Resumed

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Lagrón, we will ask you to take up your relative matters concerning the Jimenez government at the point where you left your testimony last Saturday.

Mr. LAGRÓN. After an encounter between the forces of President Jimenez and the forces that occupied the city—an encounter in which there were two killed and about six or eight wounded on both sides, Minister Russell, Capt. Crossley, of the Prairie, went to President Jimenez's camp in San Onofre and stated that during the combat—

Senator POMERENE. Now, did you hear this yourself?

Mr. LAGRÓN. Certainly. During the combat shots fired from the city struck pretty near the American legation; that they could not permit there be more shedding of blood, and that therefore they were going to act on their own account by subduing the city.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the stenographer read that.

(The answer was read by the stenographer.)

The CHAIRMAN. "By subduing the city." What is the word in Spanish? The INTERPRETER. (?)

Mr. LAGRÓN. That, therefore, they suggested to President Jimenez that he order his forces to withdraw to Jina, 16 kilometers from the city, leaving President Jimenez's soldiers were Dominicans, they might become witnesses of the Americans fighting against other Dominican soldiers. President Jimenez protested indignantly against such a declaration, and they insisted, both Minister Russell and Capt. Crossley, and placed the President under the alternative of accepting their military help or remaining with his army without deciding the situation, as was his duty.

President Jimenez did not hesitate for one moment, and on the night of the same day presented his resignation of the Presidency of the Republic. His resignation was placed in circulation the following morning, with the date of the 7th.

The CHAIRMAN. What do you mean by "the last day"?

Mr. LAGRÓN. The resignation—he resigned on the night of the 6th at 11 o'clock, but the resignation was circulated in the city on the morning of the 7th.

Senator POMERENE. To whom did he send his resignation?

Mr. LAGRÓN. As it was not possible to send any emissary to the United States, the resignation was received by Minister Russell himself in his own house. He it was who advised by telephone from the legation to the city that President Jimenez had resigned. He immediately—the President of the Republic gave up the power invested in him rather than accept the American ultimatum, which he had never asked for, went to his private residence, 23 kilometers from the city, accompanied by two or three of his friends.

The following day the national Congress, in accordance with the constitution, decreed that the Presidency of the Republic was without a President, and agreed upon the appointment of a new President, in accordance with the constitution. That election of a new President had to be immediate, but it could not be effected, because Minister Russell and Admiral Crossley, who were right in the city, on the gunboat Dolphin on the morning of the 8th, wrote a letter to Congress in which they requested them not to elect a new President until they had been restored in the city. As a proof that the marines which the United States had sent to Santo Domingo did not land with the consent of the Dominican Government, but on their own initiative, the proclamation of Capt. Crossley of the 3d Marine Regiment can be presented, in which it is said that the work of the marines was to guard and exclusively to guard the legation of the United States. And there is the testimony of these witnesses, whose testimony is irrefutable. Hon. Mr. Fisher, Count D'Arlot de St. Sand, the French minister, Hon. Felix M. L. L. Haitian minister, who signed a public declaration on the 8th of March in the Liston Diario, in which they stated that they had been advised by the American legation that troops would be landed for the sole object of guarding the legation of the United States.

When President Jimenez resigned, the declarant who is before the committee has no direct contact with events, because he accompanied the President Jimenez when he signed. But in general connection with the events that were happening ly information necessary, because I have knowledge of the same, although exact as expressed in my former statement.

CHAIRMAN. It is for you to determine, Mr. Counsel, how far the witness

KNOWLES. Mr. Lagrono, were you conversant with all of the acts several prior to the resignation of President Jiminez?

LAGRANO. Absolutely all.

KNOWLES. I want to ask you as to a certain statement officially made United States through the Navy Department bearing the date of August 5 year, addressed to this Senate Committee as to certain statements made, for the evident purpose of giving the sole and immediate reason for the ; of troops of the United States upon Dominican soil. I will read that ent to you or have it read to you.

for POMERENE. Will you state the document you are reading from and re?

KNOWLES. I am reading from the first part of the proceedings of this tee beginning at page 90.

LAGRANO. Who signed that document?

KNOWLES. The particular paragraph being the fourth one on page 92, reads as follows:

unately, the election of Jiminez, who took office on December 5, 1914, lowed by a brief period of comparative calm in the Dominican Republic. ements of disorganization were present, however, awaiting favorable nity for expression. In April, 1916, Gen. Desiderio Arias, secretary , executed a coup d'état, deposed Jiminez, and seized the executive . At this point the United States Government intervened and with the of the rightful though deposed President Jiminez, landed naval forces 5, 1916, and pacified Santo Domingo city, the capitol. Jiminez then l, and the council of ministers assumed control of affairs."

at to ask you, you being under oath, to declare solemnly to this comf there is a single word of truth in one of those allegations.

LAGRANO. I am ignorant of the writer of that document, who the writer document is, but whoever it may be who wrote it, I swear solemnly this honorable commission that in what I have just heard there are lse statements. First, Secretary of War Arias did not execute a stat. Second, Gen. Arias never took over the executive power. Third, ines did not land with the consent of President Jiminez. And the last hich is untrue, they did not pacify the city, because it was in perfect honorable Senators, Gen. Arias did not depose President Jiminez. I now who wrote that document. I judge from words heard from Mr. s that it must be an official document. But the Dominicans can not be l by that document—the Dominicans who know the truth of the matter. may be permitted to deposit it, to the end that it may serve to prove n. Arias did not depose President Jiminez, nor did he take charge of the re power at any time, I can present a public statement made by me at e.

KNOWLES. Then I will add as a matter of fact, so far as the Dominican ment and its acts are concerned—asking the witness to give answer fferent statements made in this paragraph, without comment.

LAGRANO. All right.

KNOWLES. "Fortunately, the election of Jiminez, who took office on er 5, 1914, was followed by a brief period of comparative calm in the 'an Republic." I will ask you if there had been at that time such nces in the Dominican Republic as would justify the statement I have d to you as describing the conditions under the Jiminez Government : "a brief calm"?

LAGRANO. When I started my statement I said—and I ratify it now—ring President Jiminez's Government there was complete peace in the .

KNOWLES. "The elements of disorganization were present, however, ; a favorable opportunity for expression." If you understand what that means, will you state your opinion as to whether that expressed truly lition that existed in the country?

LAGRANO. I understand that it is not so, but as I am asked for an abpinion, it is not possible to deny concretely.

Mr. KNOWLES. "In April, 1916, Gen. Desiderio Arias, secretary of - cuted a coup d'état." Did Gen. Arias ever, by decree or act or in execute a coup d'état?

Mr. LAGRANO. Throughout my statement I have stated no.

Mr. KNOWLES. The next allegation is that Gen. Arias deposed President Jimenez ever deposed by anybody?

Mr. LAGRANO. President Jimenez was not deposed from the pre- the Republic. He resigned spontaneously on the 7th of May, due : stances explained by me before.

Mr. KNOWLES. The next allegation is that "The secretary of war - executive power." Did Gen. Arias, by declaration or by executive a - kind, seize the executive power and announce himself as president?

Mr. LAGRANO. Not only did Gen. Arias not seize the executive ; he did not commit any acts in connection with same.

The CHAIRMAN. I think a more just translation would be, "Nor d mit any acts of this character."

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Now, in order to see if I understand the w - rectly, you did say, as I recall it, on Saturday—perhaps to-day— Arias did seize the Government forces under his control, with w - pose the forces which were representing the President of the Dom. public.

Mr. LAGRANO. Gen. Arias was minister of war. He had, accordi : military forces under his direct control, and due to the accusation m - President Jimenez in Congress—an accusation which on the other witness declares he considers unjust—stated in a public declaration the one which I deposit with the commission, that he did not cons - self obliged to obey the orders of the President of the Republic, t - considered him to be in a state of intradiction, and that he placed . . . and the military forces to defend any resolution of the Congress.

Senator POMERENE. What I understand from what the witness t - that the secretary of war, under the Dominican law, would have th - he saw proper, to use the forces under his control to oppose the acts of the President.

Mr. LAGRANO. In no case. On that account I have always stat - minister of war was rebellious against the authority of the Preside -

Senator POMERENE. In other words, you regard his action in th - Dominican forces against the President as illegal?

Mr. LAGRANO. I do not believe that Gen. Arias used the forces unk - mand against the President. The President in his capacity tried to the city, which he found to be under the control of forces which - obedient to him, but which incidentally had denied his authority.

Senator POMERENE. I want to ask just another question or two abo - I have undertaken, so I may be able to get the complete situat - Gen. Arias was using these forces in opposition to the President - the President say or do about it?

Mr. LAGRANO. The President tried to take the city by force, a - ultimatum to Gen. Arias through one of his generals requesting - President, be obeyed, and that Gen. Arias capitulate. Gen. Arias - he did not recognize President Jimenez in his capacity, due to th - he had been impeached or accused. Owing to that circumstance, - at first, there was a crisis between the President and the secretary - undoubtedly would have been breached satisfactorily and without th - of blood by the intervention of the minister of the United States.

Senator POMERENE. Was the President's ultimatum in writing?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And Gen. Arias's reply in writing?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Can you furnish the committee with copies of th - and Gen. Arias's reply, for the record?

Mr. LAGRANO. Not right away, but I can deposit them in the mor -

The CHAIRMAN. We will be obliged to you if you will do so.

Did you hear the President say, either to yourself or anyone else, further about the conduct of Gen. Arias in thus disobeying him?

Mr. LAGRANO. President Jimenez simply regretted Gen. Arias's because that attitude he believed to be the offspring of some misman - of affairs. At the same time he regretted his having to comply with mediate duty of imposing his legal authority.

CHAIRMAN. Now, just another matter. How many troops did Gen. Arias bring this contest, and how many troops did the President have under command?

AGRONO. Gen. Arias had about 300 men. President Jimenez had between 1,500 men.

DR POMERENE. I think that is all.

DR JONES. Where were the troops of the President; very near the city?

AGRONO. Somewhere about half a kilometer from the city; the city was held by the forces of the President.

DR JONES. And in that condition the President sent the ultimatum to Gen.

AGRONO. Yes.

DR JONES. What happened after Gen. Arias made his reply that he could not accede to the demands of the President?

AGRONO. The advance guards of the troops of the President entered the city through the suburbs, and Gen. Arias's troops that were posted there entering, each group alleging its right. Some shots were fired and in consequence of same two were killed and six or eight wounded. It was the only bloody encounter at that time.

DR JONES. On what day was that?

AGRONO. On the 6th of May, 1916.

DR JONES. What was the next thing that occurred?

AGRONO. The intervention of Minister Russell and Capt. Crossley, placing them in the alternative of accepting the situation or accepting the intervention of the American forces. That same night the President resigned, and gave up his power rather than to accept the military support of the United States against his citizens.

DR JONES. Why did this shooting between the forces of the President and Gen. Arias stop; what caused that shooting to stop?

AGRONO. The intervention of Minister Russell and Capt. Crossley.

DR JONES. What did Mr. Russell and Capt. Crossley do?

AGRONO. They demanded President Jimenez to withdraw his forces from the city to Jina, about 16 kilometers from the city; a demand which on the following day they gratified—the council of ministers, which took charge of the resignation of President Jimenez.

DR JONES. And then at the time Capt. Crossley landed his marines, the General Arias and the forces of the President were fighting?

AGRONO. They were not fighting, because Capt. Crossley's forces had taken the 4th, two days before, and taken up positions around the legation and the customs department.

DR JONES. Then when the forces of Gen. Arias and the President were the American officers sent word to them to stop fighting. Is that it?

AGRONO. More than that. They obliged them to stop their warlike action and not only that the action should be stopped, but that they would accede to the action.

CHAIRMAN. If they did not stop?

AGRONO. In one way or another. Minister Russell and Capt. Crossley advised President Jimenez and the council of ministers at 6 in the afternoon that they would not allow more blood to be shed, and that they were going to take power and help in the government, and entering by force into the city. The President refused to accept that, and resigned.

MR. KNOWLES. Now, Mr. Agrono, I want to ask you to state if there was any intention or purpose that you know of to end the presidency of Jimenez by force of arms?

AGRONO. I wish Mr. Knowles to explain clearly what he means.

MR. KNOWLES. Do you know whether there was any intention or steps taken to depose the administration or presidency of Jimenez by force of arms, or was it to be taken constitutionally.

AGRONO. I do not believe that anyone had interest in putting an end to the presidency of President Jimenez with the Government. The Government was composed of political friends, and besides that by members of another party which a coalition had been formed before election with the Jiminista party. This condition was faithfully carried out. The only party that might have been interested in deposing President Jimenez from power was the Liberal Party, and that party during the entire government of Jimenez only sought the cause of peace.

Senator JONES. Had President Jimenez been impeached under the constitution?

Mr. LAGRANO. I personally felt that the accusation was not just; that President Jimenez did not merit the accusation, but the procedure of the opposition was legal.

The CHAIRMAN. That is to say, it had been voted by the chamber and to be considered by the Senate?

Mr. LAGRANO. The Chamber of Deputies had considered the accusations of accusation, according to our laws, accusations are started in the Chamber of Deputies, but they do not judge; but the case is forwarded to the Senate, and the Senate acts as a high court of justice in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. I just want to be clear. It is forwarded to the Senate by the vote of the Chamber of Deputies?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

Senator JONES. And that vote had been taken, had it?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes; but the Chamber of Deputies did not know the facts from its foundation.

Senator POMERENE. Can the witness furnish a copy of those articles of accusation or impeachment?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes; to-morrow morning.

Senator JONES. Why did the Senate not try the case?

Mr. LAGRANO. The Senate had fixed for a hearing of the case at a date other than the one on which President Jimenez had resigned, due to the facts already mentioned by me.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the Senator understand that answer? That the Senate had fixed a day for the hearing?

Senator JONES. Which would have occurred after the date of the resignation?

Mr. KNOWLES. And before it arrived the President resigned. What was the date of the action of the chamber in passing that resolution?

Mr. LAGRANO. The 1st of May.

Mr. KNOWLES. The 1st of May. It was five days after that proposition was started that Gen. Arias declined to obey an order of the President, as a reason that the President was under charges of impeachment, therefore was not in a position to give official orders of that kind.

Mr. LAGRANO. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Will it be convenient for the record, either for the witness or for counsel, to let us have copies of the accusation?

Mr. LAGRANO. As I promised, I will send over to-morrow copies of the correspondence between Gen. Arias and President Jimenez.

Mr. KNOWLES. I want to ask you if, during that particular time, from the 1st of May until the 7th day of May, there had been any moral influence by the United States to adjust the differences that existed at that time between the President and the secretary of war, and thus to avert a conflict of arms? If he thinks it would have been effective?

Mr. LAGRANO. At that time, I was, as was my duty, at the President's side and can not state that I noticed or observed any action in the sense of the question to me just now. I only remember the suggestion of the imposition of arms to place upon President Jimenez, on the afternoon of the 6th of May, inducing him to accept the armed support of the marines.

Senator POMERENE. I want to make my request a little broader than that. You have kindly promised to present to the committee the ultimatum to the President and the reply of Gen. Arias. I wish if there is any other correspondence between the two that you would furnish us all of the correspondence on the subject. It will be illuminating for everyone.

Mr. LAGRANO. I don't dispute you. I will bring in all the documents.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to ask you, Mr. LAGRANO, if, notwithstanding the fact that the methods that were being taken by the Dominican Congress to remove the President of the Dominican Republic in a constitutional way, if the representation of the United States proposed, in the face of these proceedings, to use the force of the United States to go against the constitutional action of the Dominican Republic and put the President in his office as President.

Senator POMERENE. Well, now, my good friend, let me suggest to you that you can hardly expect this witness to answer that. You asked him if he was a representative of the United States proposed to do this, etc.?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Well, let him say what was said and done, and let the committee decide whether they proposed to or not.

OWLES. All right, I will not put it so leading then, Mr. Senator. the Congress of the Dominican Republic had instituted impeachment proceedings against the President of the Dominican Republic, and those proceedings were going along according to the constitution, what did the United States representatives here propose to do?

LAGRONO. I can not answer that question completely, but from general knowledge that I have that after constitutional proceedings had been started in the Congress for the election of a new President of the Republic, being suspended those elections as perhaps an act of complaisance with the action made in regard to same by Minister Russell and Admiral Caperton member that while the Congress was at a standstill before said petition, the wireless outfit of the American cruiser was being used for sending messages with regard to the national Congress—telegrams addressed to Minister Russell, and whose translation was authorized by the American consul. In a book written by Mr. Henriquez Urena, which the Senator has in him, which Hon. Senator Jones has before him, page 94 or 95, there is a telegram sent by Minister Russell to the American consul at Monte Cristi, in code and in current language, in which it is stated:

"American consul. Monte Cristi: Request will transmit following." a telegram in code, addressed to the governor of that Province—another telegram, in which the Senators can read something immediately of the existence of the national Congress, signed by some politicians; and a telegram was authorized by Minister Russell.

OWLES. In my previous question, which I believe I did not make clear, I wanted to ask if you knew whether or not there was any offer by the representatives of the United States, after impeachment proceedings had been started against President Jimenez, to escort the President through the palace to him this support while he would be there?

LAGRONO. The resignation of President Jimenez was signed under those circumstances outlined, and no one has ever stated that they are false.

OWLES. Have you a copy of that letter of resignation?

LAGRONO. Yes. All these documents are officially compiled in that book. If the honorable commission permit, I can deliver them to the commission and the commission can keep them for their use.

CHAIRMAN. I very cordially thank the witness.

OWLES. Now, I wish to ask Mr. Lagrono to make a little more clear what that he made formerly. When Gen. Arias said that he would use himself and the forces under his command to execute the orders of Congress—that was not after the institution of impeachment proceedings against President Jimenez?

LAGRONO. On the 5th of May, five days later, after the procedure of the proceedings had started, Gen. Arias made that declaration.

OWLES. As the witness has said he is tired, I think I will suspend for tomorrow, and put on another witness.

CHAIRMAN. And let me extend to him the invitation which I extended to the witness, to submit later and at his convenience, if he cares to—to-preferably—any suggestions he cares to make as to the precise date, at that judgment, when the military government might terminate, the forces of the United States retire, and what measures should be taken for this purpose of public order, and to assure the financial stability and fiscal management of the country, and the terms and conditions, if any, upon which the occupation should be concluded.

LAGRONO. I have the honor to reply to the suggestion made by the honorariness of the United States that it is not necessary for me to wait for tomorrow to formulate my reply. The Dominican people unanimously have the United States of North America, that great country which for many years has been our great and loyal friends—to have them as a part of justice order the evacuation without any fixed date of condition.

CHAIRMAN. How can you order an evacuation without date?

LAGRONO. Without condition, time. Because I am certain that the people of the Dominican Republic and the understanding of their national people will give them immediately a government which would rule the Dominican Republic and public order will not be disturbed in the slightest manner. Therefore it is opportune for a noble act of justice, because representative of Santo Domingo have just formulated in the City of Puerto Plata an act of evacuation, which, without any date, will meet the aspirations of the Dominican people.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that to be presented to the committee?

Mr. LAGRANO. According to information, to-morrow. The President of the Republic will arrive, and I really believe it will be so, that the work of this commission is ended, that they will be furnished with the agreement come to in Puerto Plata about a week ago by the representatives of the country.

If you will allow me to add a few words, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LAGRANO. In closing my testimony, I must make the following with all respect.

I, a Dominican citizen, in this governor's palace, occupied by naval forces of the United States, and before you, honorable Senate, hesitate in formulating, knowing my attitude, the following charges against the Government of the United States.

First. Having landed troops, thereby committing an act of war in previous declaration against a friendly country. In the Dominican Republic and have despoiled it of its own Government, exercising over it the right, thereby violating—

(a) The Constitution of the United States.

(b) The constitution of the Dominican Republic.

(c) The existing treaty between the United States and the Dominican Republic.

(d) Especially the Dominican-American convention of 1907, in relation to marines of their nation and under their control, and not to the Dominican Republic, the remnant of our customs receipts after having taken the sum for amortization and the 5 per cent which belonged to the general of the Republic.

(e) The resolution not to intervene in certain matters, proposed by the United States of America and adopted at the third conference international at The Hague.

(f) International law.

(g) The object and purpose of the Monroe doctrine, according to the intention of the Government of the United States.

(h) The last point of the 14 points submitted by the Honorable President Wilson at the conference at Versailles.

Second. Having permitted or allowed marines under their control to permit cruelties and abusive acts of every kind in this country, or permitted marines under their control to legislate in every matter in this country, without having capacity for same.

Senator JONES. There are just a few additional matters that I want to inquire about, which occurred early in May, 1916. On what date were the marines landed in this country?

Mr. LAGRANO. Capt. Crossley's proclamation of the 3d of May after the landing, and the landing took place on the 4th.

Senator JONES. And they landed for the purpose of protecting the American legation?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

Senator JONES. Had there been any shooting prior to that time?

Mr. LAGRANO. I have stated in my testimony formerly that there was a small battle or encounter, in which there were two deaths and eight wounded, was on the sixth, two days after the marines landed.

Senator JONES. Had there been any explosion of ammunition or of shells up to the sixth of May?

Mr. LAGRANO. Probably, but not for military ends. As there were no arms, I do not doubt that there were certain explosions, but in the order of the military authorities.

Senator JONES. I understand that, but I wanted to know if there was any desultory firing or shooting of arms.

Mr. LAGRANO. I don't know. I don't think so.

Senator JONES. After Minister Russell and Capt. Crossley received the forces of the President and of Gen. Arias to stop fighting, what did the President do? What became of them?

Mr. LAGRANO. They withdrew to Hina and remained there waiting.

Senator JONES. How far away is that?

Mr. LAGRANO. After this correspondence there were no more encounters between the forces within the city and the forces outside of the city. The marines were in the middle between them. Minister Russell and arrived on the 10th on the Dolphin, and after Admiral Caperton's Capt. Crossley disappeared from the scene. They recognized the Government constituted by the council of ministers as legitimate, and on the 14th Minister Russell and Admiral Caperton addressed or sent an ultimatum to the forces in the city, to Gen. Arias, demanding him to surrender the morning of the following day or that they would enter the city, that they would enter the city fighting. At daybreak Gen. Arias evacuated with his forces, marching toward the Cibao, and the marines entered the morning and remained up to the present.

Mr JONES. Did President Jimenez withdraw his forces from the city on the 6th of May?

MR GRONO. The 6th of May. He withdrew his troops on the evening of Mr JONES. Where did he take them to?

MR GRONO. To the Jina.

Mr JONES. How far is that from this city?

MR GRONO. About 15 or 16 kilometers. The procedure was as follows: The marines had stopped the fighting on both sides in the following—First, ordered the withdrawal of the forces of President Jimenez to the city, by sending an ultimatum to the forces of General Arias within

General Arias abandoned the city with his forces and withdrew to the Cibao, where later on, in a peaceful manner, he did not oppose the entry of the marines into the Cibao. He withdrew from the city without fighting. The marines entered peacefully. But the fact that they had entered peacefully prevented certain acts which were the outcome of martial law. They entered peacefully into the city, but with bayonets fixed and placing machine guns at every corner. After the Marine Corps entered the city they disbanded, at this time not under the orders of President Jimenez but under the orders of the council of administration, in the following manner: By close of the day in which the money for their salaries was kept and reducing the number of men until they were completely disbanded. Meanwhile they would wait for the election of the President.—

Mr JONES. I think I can get what information I want in a little quicker than what day did Gen. Jimenez take his troops to Jina?

MR GRONO. The petition for the withdrawal to Jina was made on the 6th, I do not remember if the withdrawal was started on the night of the 6th, but I can state that while I was accompanying President Jimenez on the morning of the 6th, when he was on his way to his family residence, for governmental affairs, we met some troops on their way to Jina, and they were distressed when he passed with sorrow because he was abandoning them.

Mr JONES. Did his troops go into camp at Jina?

MR GRONO. No; that was not a military site. They camped on the banks of the river Hine, on the high road to the west.

Mr JONES. How long did they remain there in camp?

MR GRONO. I can not state. A few days. While they were being disarmed, a lump of sugar through the economic process that was brought to them.

Mr JONES. It was the lack of supplies then that caused them to disband?

MR GRONO. Yes.

Mr JONES. Did some of them remain there as long as two weeks?

MR GRONO. Until the 10th of June, when, due to a notice from C. H. he receiver general of the customs, a deputy receiver under his orders to receive of all of the receipts of the nation, without any exception.

Mr JONES. Was that the time when the last of those soldiers was dis-

MR GRONO. Yes.

Mr JONES. What did the forces under Gen. Arias do after the marines entered the city?

MR GRONO. They went to Santiago de los Caballeros, which is one of the cities of the Cibao.

Mr JONES. How far was that from the city?

MR GRONO. Santiago is 190 kilometers from the city.

Mr JONES. Did they go into camp up there?

MR GRONO. They went to the fort in Santiago.

Mr JONES. How long did they remain in camp?

Mr. LAGRANO. Those forces under Gen. Arias were dissolved. When the marines under Col. Pendleton entered Santiago de los Caballeros they did so without resistance. Gen. Arias went to his private home, and a lute peace reigned throughout the country.

Senator JONES. Those troops went into camp at Santiago, did they?

Mr. LAGRANO. I don't know the details.

Senator JONES. I understood from your statement that they went to Cibao country.

Mr. LAGRANO. Gen. Arias's forces?

Senator JONES. Yes. And to what part of that country did they go?

Mr. LAGRANO. To Santiago de los Caballeros.

Senator JONES. Did they go into camp there at Santiago?

Mr. LAGRANO. They went to the fort at Santiago.

Senator JONES. And how long did they stay there at that fort?

Mr. LAGRANO. I don't know exactly, but due to the lack of money with which to pay the forces, and due to the lack of an object for keeping them under orders, Gen. Arias disbanded them.

Senator JONES. Did Gen. Arias disband them?

Mr. LAGRANO. I have been informed to that effect.

Senator JONES. At what time, more or less?

Mr. LAGRANO. I can not state exactly just when, but I can assure you 60 days after the marines landed they were in full control of the country.

Senator JONES. Within 60 days?

Mr. LAGRANO. More or less.

Senator JONES. So then your judgment is that for about 60 days there were at the fort in Santiago under the control of Gen. Arias?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes.

Senator JONES. And at about that period of time Gen. Arias gave the order for disbanding them?

Mr. LAGRANO. Certainly. They were not disbanded all at once, but a little, slowly.

Senator JONES. And were any of them finally kept in the National Guard in the forces under the American direction?

Mr. LAGRANO. Yes. The marines did not take charge of the country in any ostensible manner until the 29th of November, when Capt. Knapp's nomination was issued. After President Henriquez's government had been in function for four months, who had the privilege of not only civil employment, but even the soldiers to help him promote the cause of order, without the aid of any kind.

Senator JONES. I don't know that there is anything more I care to ask the witness, but there may be, and you can be here in the morning.

Mr. LAGRANO. I would prefer, and I state respectfully that I do not wish to take up more time, as other Dominicans have to talk here and I would like you to ask me the questions now.

Senator JONES. Oh, I understood that the witness himself preferred to draw at this time.

Mr. LAGRANO. No; I prefer to finish.

Senator JONES. When was it that Minister Russell and Capt. Knapp decided to recognize the cabinet as in authority here?

Mr. LAGRANO. I do not know whether it was done in writing, but Mr. Jimenez resigned on the 7th, and on the 8th Mr. Russell continued his negotiations with the council of ministers, and the proof that he considered them in authority for the Government is that the receiver generalship continued furnished to the council of ministers with the funds of the nation.

Senator JONES. And how long did that continue?

Mr. LAGRANO. Up to the 8th or 10th of June. Up to the time when Baxter's notice published in the press communicating that the receiver generalship would take over the revenues of the Dominican Republic, and after that—

Senator JONES. I don't know that there is anything further that I care to add, but the commission has an engagement in just a few minutes, and I will conclude with the witness now.

(Whereupon, at 4.55 p. m., the committee adjourned until 9 a. m., December 13, 1921.)

BY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO,
Santo Domingo City, Republic of Santo Domingo.

Committee met at 9 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment.
Senators McCormick (chairman), Jones, and Pomerene, Senator presiding.
Present, Mr. Howe and Mr. Knowles.
CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF DR. ENRIQUEZ HENRIQUEZ, SANTO DOMINGO CITY.

KNOWLES. What is your name?

ENRIQUEZ. Enriquez Henriquez.

KNOWLES. Your profession?

ENRIQUEZ. Lawyer.

KNOWLES. How long have you followed that profession?

ENRIQUEZ. About 30 years.

KNOWLES. Are you a graduate in the law?

ENRIQUEZ. Yes.

KNOWLES. Of what university?

ENRIQUEZ. University of Santo Domingo.

KNOWLES. Of what country are you a native?

ENRIQUEZ. Of the Dominican Republic.

KNOWLES. Born where?

ENRIQUEZ. In the city of Santo Domingo.

KNOWLES. Have you lived continuously in this city?

ENRIQUEZ. No. I spent five consecutive years in New York City.

KNOWLES. How long ago was that?

ENRIQUEZ. From 1908 to 1914.

KNOWLES. In what month of the year of 1914 did you return to your ENRIQUEZ. In December.

CHAIRMAN. Was he engaged in business or in his profession?

KNOWLES. I will ask him, Senator.

What business or profession did he follow in New York for professional purposes or business purposes?

ENRIQUEZ. I resided there with my family for the benefit of my children.

KNOWLES. Since December, 1914, have you been continuously in this city?

ENRIQUEZ. Yes.

KNOWLES. Are you familiar with all of the events relating to the occupation up to the occupation?

ENRIQUEZ. I believe that I know them perfectly well.

KNOWLES. Will you state for the information of the committee, beginning, first, at some part during the term of President Jimenez, and relate as far as you consider bear upon the subject being investigated by the ENRIQUEZ. I am disposed to answer every matter presented before me.

I refer that these matters refer to what I consider to be the essential parts of them, which is of equal interest to the honor of the United States, which is a true teacher of liberty and humanity, as well as the liberty of the Dominican people.

Mr. KNOWLES. Dr. Henriquez, relative to the causes and reasons for the occupation by the United States of the Dominican Republic, there has been a declaration by the Department of the Navy that those reasons for occupation were primarily and plainly stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this the same matter that you called his attention to yesterday?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, Senator. Take it in the official record of the proceedings of this committee in the first part of the record, at page 92, which states—

"Fortunately the election of Jimenez, who took office on December 1, 1916, was followed by a brief period of comparative calm in the Dominican Republic. The elements of disorganization were present, however, awaiting opportunity for expression. In April, 1916, Gen. Desiderio Arias, Secretary of War, executed a coup d'état, deposed Jimenez, and seized the executive power. At this point the United States Government intervened and with the aid of the rightful, though deposed President Jimenez, landed naval forces on May 5, 1916, and pacified Santo Domingo City, the capital. Jimenez resigned, and the council of ministers assumed control of affairs."

As to those alleged causes and events that resulted in the occupation of the Dominican Republic, will you please state any facts that you know in connection with that event.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. In the first place, those affirmations, from the Senate and abstractively, contain an accusation against the proper dignity of the Dominican people, and I, a free citizen of the Dominican Republic, protesting against the slanderous imputation contained in the first affirmation, and I am going to explain my idea regarding same. The Dominican people—

Mr. KNOWLES. Doctor, pardon me just a moment. There is one point in the beginning of the witness's testimony that I neglected to ask him, and I am going to ask you, Doctor—I wish to ask you, Doctor—I forgot to do so at the beginning—if you represent any particular society or organization of the Dominican people?

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I am vice president of the Dominican National Union, which has a list of the members in Santo Domingo.

The CHAIRMAN. I suggest that you hand this to the stenographer.

(The list referred to is on file with the committee.)

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. It is a national fraternity which has been constituted two years ago to work for the restoration of the Dominican people in the exercise of their complete sovereignty and for the evacuation of their territory. The Dominican people have been slanderously spoken of as a rebellious people. The Dominican people have the honor to have been a rebellious people in the same way as William Tell was. The Dominican people have been like William Tell, obliged to fire over the heads of each of their generations, due to the tyrannies, thus our civil wars are of the highest significance of the dignity of the Dominican people. The people who do not know how to resist tyranny through the legitimate recourse to arms, when there are no other means to overcome tyranny, will be an abject people.

These considerations do not permit me to understand that civil war in the Dominican Republic which has been because of that just cause should be imputative for the armies of a people as free as the American people coming to the aid in the misfortunes of the Dominican people.

Now, referring to the concrete case as to the situation of the Dominican Republic at the time referred to, I state these facts. When the Americans landed, and were the first contingent of the forces of occupation—

The CHAIRMAN. Now, let me understand, so that I can follow the witness, I understand from his former statement that he was here in Santo Domingo at the time they first landed?

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. Yes. The occupation of Dominican territory, this was the scene of this political event, the accusation of President Jimenez.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you call that, technically, in the Dominican case an accusation, or do you call it, as we call it, impeachment proceedings?

Mr. KNOWLES. They have a word for impeachment, which is "acusación."

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it means the same thing.

Mr. KNOWLES. The same thing, Senator.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. A local newspaper, the Liston Diario, announced on May 5, the breaking out of hostilities between the forces of the govern-omingo and the forces which were accompanying President Jiménez, but four days previous—

CHAIRMAN. Does he mean previous to the breaking out of hostilities?

OWLES. I think he means after that announcement was made.

CHAIRMAN. Just so he makes clear what he means.

NRIQUEZ. The breaking out of hostilities.

to explain these facts. That at the time of the landing of the forces on the territory of Santo Domingo the political state of the country could not be identified in this way, a state of peaceful impeachment of President Jiménez. To state it better, due peaceful impeachment of President Jiménez was a constitutional recourse, which was also carried out constitutionally. Under those conditions the forces occupying the Dominican Republic were landed, and I wish to say that civil war started three or four days on, three or four days after these forces were landed on Dominican soil. If anything is lacking, I can add.

OWLES. Proceed. You are getting along very well.

NRIQUEZ. In reality, there was, therefore, no danger to the lives or property of persons when the American forces were landed, but I insist on it that I understand that the American people have never had the right or the power to intervene in the internal affairs of the Dominican Republic, nor in this case an acceptable motive for the intervention, even though there is a motive in law which justified any intervention.

It is a part of that declaration expresses my opinion, as a professor of international law, that the intervention in no case has an outcome, but an offense against moral ends governing the relations between independent nations. The fact that the first contingent was landed under the pretext of being for peaceful ends and to guard the American Legation, as Commander of the American marines—

CHAIRMAN. The witness refers to him as Commander Crosley, and he is referred to here as Capt. Crosley. Do they mean the same?

OWLES. One and the same, Senator.

NRIQUEZ. Pointed out to the legislative bodies of the Dominican Republic. "Gentlemen, have the goodness to inform every Dominican citizen something: Should it become necessary to land forces for the present, I point out that any hostile act against the American forces would be a serious action on the part of said forces. Should the forces be for their object, which would be a peaceful one, will be for the American Republic. The discharge of a rifle will bring about, as its consequence, war."

CHAIRMAN. Give the date of this.

NRIQUEZ. May 3, 1916.

CHAIRMAN. Where do you get the copy of this letter?

NRIQUEZ. From the newspaper, Liston Diario.

CHAIRMAN. Printed at that time?

NRIQUEZ. Yes.

CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, that was addressed to the Congress of the Dominican Republic.

OWLES. To the President and members of the Congress.

NRIQUEZ. Before depositing this testimony, I call the attention of the honorable members of the commission of the honorable Senate of the Dominican Republic that this notification of Capt. Crosley contained this other thing: "Every future act of the American forces will be determined by events after the landing." It appears here that Capt. Crosley, knowing that the Dominican people have always known how to live and die for their freedom, and of the possibility that the Dominican people would go to war against American armies at some moment at which the Dominican people, more than Capt. Crosley, would know that they should go to war against arms, the same not being a legitimate war on the part of the great American people. For that reason, from that moment the Dominican Republic, through love of liberty, a constant and ardent vocation for arms, maintained this peaceful attitude in which the honorable Senate commissioned them after five years in which they have been suffering every kind of error, the outcome of the American occupation.

OWLES. Was the Congress in session when that notice was given?

NRIQUEZ. Yes.

OWLES. What reply was made, if any?

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I don't know if they made any reply. I think I saw that if they answered it was insinuating that there was no necessity.

Senator JONES. Well, the Congress could only act by some ready formal statement. Was any such given?

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I believe a note was sent in reply.

Mr. KNOWLES. We will try to get a copy of that, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Well, whatever action was taken by the Congress of the Republic, we will ask Mr. Knowles to see that it is incorporated in the report, giving the dates of the action, etc., and any such facts as may shed light on the controversy between the two countries, and I assume that the document will aid you in getting that information together, and in any event, if there is any such action, let the facts be stated for the record.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. After depositing this testimony—

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. In this letter I supposed that the letter was presented or read that the whole of it was read, but if it was not correctly there was another paragraph to which the witness has just referred himself. We want the entire letter put in the record.

Mr. KNOWLES. He has read it all, Senator, and I think intends to do so in the record, whatever it is.

The CHAIRMAN. That one there is in the record. Now, this is a letter he is submitting.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. This is testimony No. 1.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

Evidencia No. 1.—Prueba que el primer contingente de las fuerzas desembarcado so pretexto de ser destinada a la Legación Americana es pacífico.

MATO.

At Presidente del Senado i a la Cámara de Representantes: Ciudad.

SEÑORES: Tengan la amabilidad de comunicar lo siguiente a los señores:

"Si se hace necesario desembarcar tropas, por la presente solicitamos que cualquier acto hostil contra las tropas americanas sea una seria acción de dichas tropas. Si las tropas desembarcan, su conducta será pacífica, será a la Legación Americana.

"Un disparo de fusil determinará severa acción como consecuencia de acto posterior de las tropas americanas será determinado por lo que después de su desembarco."

W. S. CROSSLEY

Comandante de la Marina Americana

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. This is testimony No. 2.

(The document referred to is as follows:)

Evidencia No. 2.—Prueba que la ciudad de Santo Domingo fue ocupada militarmente so pretexto de garantizar unas elecciones libres.

SANTO DOMINGO, R. D., 15 de Mayo.

A SUS EXCELENCIAS M. F. CABRAL, Presidente del Senado.

LUIS BERNARD, Presidente de la Cámara de Diputados,

Santo Domingo.

SEÑORES: Esta ciudad ha sido ocupada militarmente por fuerzas americanas. Al tomar esta decisión tenemos el sincero propósito de una libre e imparcial actuación de las Cámaras para la elección del Presidente de la República. Debido a la situación anormal que crean las presentes circunstancias, suplicamos a Uds. no convocar a los señores o tres días hasta que la ciudad recobre su aspecto normal.

Somos de Ustedes.

Seguros servidores,

WILLIAM W. BROWN

Ministro de Guerra

W. B. CARRINGTON

Contralmirante de la Armada Americana

The CHAIRMAN. Give the date of it. If it is a letter, give the date, please, so we can follow you.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. May 15, 1916. This testimony No. 2 proves that on the 4th of May were landed under Capt. Crossley's pretext of guarding the American Legation, and for peaceful ends of May, had already taken charge of the city of Santo Domingo.

or JONES. I think that the witness ought to confine himself to a state of facts, and not give his opinion as to the pretenses and pretexts under which acts were done, but state what acts were done, and leave it to us to draw a conclusion as to what the motive was. In other words, I think the witness has gone a little too far in saying that this shows that the first statement is a mere pretext.

NOWLES. I will tell the witness that.

(Nowles here spoke to the witness in Spanish.)

HENRIQUEZ. This is testimony No. 2.

Mr. JONES. Has he read the whole letter?

HENRIQUEZ (reading):

SANTO DOMINGO, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, May 15, 1916.

Excellency MARIO FERMIN CABRAL,

AND, President of the Chamber of Deputies.

SIR: This city has been militarily occupied by the North American Government. In taking this decision we have the sincere intention of guaranteeing the impartial action of the chamber of the legislative bodies for the election of the new President of the Republic. Due to the abnormal situation of the present circumstances, we request you to refrain from convoking any meeting for two or three days, until the city assumes its normal aspect.

CHAIRMAN. That letter was introduced the other day, was it not, by the witnesses?

NOWLES. Yes, Senator.

HENRIQUEZ. Testimony No. 3. "Santo Domingo, May 18, 1916. Hon. Mario Cabral, President of the Senate, and Luis Bernard, President of the Chamber of Deputies of the Dominican Republic, City."

NOWLES. That the Senate may follow it a little better, I may state that the letter is signed by Minister Russell and Admiral Caperton.

HENRIQUEZ (reading):

SIR: Referring to our communication to you dated the 15th inst., in view of the fact that the proceeding carried out in Congress for the election of a provisional president up to the time of the occupation of the city by the American Military Forces, was developed in the presence and under the influence of a military revolutionary force, which dominated the city, and the chiefs or leaders of those forces were personally interested in the result of the election; and in view of the actual state of revolt in other regions of the Republic; and in view of the continued rebellious attitude of the government mentioned against the constituted government; and in view of the fact that the election of the president of the Republic during the continuance of the present revolutionary state in the Republic would seriously affect the lives and property of the Dominicans and of foreigners, a situation, as has been publicly announced, the American Government would not advise you that the selection by the Congress of a president of the Republic be deferred for the moment, until the revolutionary state exists be sufficiently improved to permit that a selection be made in the possibility of precipitating a condition which would need an action on the part of the forces that are in Santo Domingo, an action which very particularly we wish to avoid.

Respectfully, yours,

WILLIAM W. RUSSELL, American Minister.

W. B. CAPERTON, Rear Admiral,

United States Navy.

NOWLES. Now, Mr. Henriquez, just as a matter of fact, to accompany this document, I will ask you if you know if at the time and prior to the writing and sending of this communication, there were disorders or revolutionary disturbances in the country.

POMERENE. Let us make that question a little more specific. You said "immediately before." What do you mean by "immediately before?"

NOWLES. Within one month before.

POMERENE. Make that explanation to the witness so he will understand.

NOWLES. He understands a little English and I thought he would understand.

POMERENE. Well, all right.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I am glad that I was asked that question. From the date of the impeachment of President Jiminez—

Senator POMERENE. Now, let us fix the date of that.

Mr. KNOWLES. May 1.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. And for a long time after the occupation of Santo Domingo City by American forces the City of Santo Domingo was without light at night and without police of any kind, and not one act against public order was committed.

Senator POMERENE. Up to what time does he mean? Up to the time of this letter, I take it.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. From the 1st of May up to the 15th of June. No other city on earth would have been more secure than Santo Domingo during that time; for without light and without police for a month and a half there was not the slightest scandal or disorder in which the police had to intervene, nor dispute nor quarrel on the street.

In connection with testimony No. 3 I wish to state the following: Russell and Rear Admiral Caperton's note gave rise to the suspicion that Gen. Arias, or some other public man who had forces under his command, was exercising certain influences in the election which the legislators were freely carrying out. In regard to that, and to prove the truth of the fact that the elections were being fairly carried out, I have to declare that Dr. Ramon Baez, who was a candidate who might have had the right to public esteem on account of high virtues as a man, was, however, overcome by another candidate, who was really the head of the opposition, so that he, Gen. Arias, had certain control over the bodies. The result of the actions of congress showed that Gen. Arias, exercising any, as his candidate was defeated.

Senator POMERENE. Gen. Arias was at this time secretary of war.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Give the date of his tenure of office, from the beginning to the end.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. He was a member of the cabinet of Jiminez from the beginning to the end.

Senator POMERENE. Did you furnish yesterday a list of the Presidents beginning the beginning and the termination of their respective terms?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; we have them, Senator, and Mr. Lagrone is now furnishing them to the commission this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. If we had them it would help us in the work of ascertaining these various events, and I hope you will get that for us.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. This is testimony No. 4 which I present.

Senator POMERENE. Proceed. Give me the date again, if you will.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. June 5, 1916. I present this as proof that the Dominican convention was violated and is still violated, since the general established through the American convention of 1907 had assumed the collection of all fiscal receipts.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the document that he hands to the clerk?

Mr. KNOWLES. These are different communications that are sent to the American minister and the receiver general in respect to taking the national treasury. These are documents in here and letters.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean official letters?

Mr. KNOWLES. Oh, yes; official letters, which are offered in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well. Let them be received. Are they in the hands of the clerk?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. I think we may arrange on the steamer to have them translated.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection at all to the receiving of them. We would prefer to have a translation, so that we could follow them up. There is in any of these letters, however, anything that you wish to call to our attention, we would be obliged to the witness if he would so do.

Mr. KNOWLES. He says these speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. He gave me the date of June 5, 1916. I assume that these are other letters of other dates.

Mr. KNOWLES. Oh, a number of other dates, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. But that is what he calls his fourth evidence.

Mr. KNOWLES. Group of evidence No. 4.

The CHAIRMAN. As we would say, exhibits, I take it.

NOWLES. Yes.

SANTO DOMINGO, Junio 17

SEÑOR RECEPTOR DE LAS RENTAS ADUANERAS, CIUDAD.

SEÑOR RECEPTOR GENERAL: La extraña comunicación de U'd. de este mes de Junio, sólo se justificaría cuando las funciones de la General de las Aduanas Dominicanas tuvieran su fundamento en prerrogativa del Departamento de Estado de los Estados Unidos, que éste capacidad soberana para disponer todo lo relativo a las rentas República Dominicana i a la inversión de las mismas.

Pero ni el Departamento de Estado tiene esa capacidad soberana. U'd. mas atribuciones que las que se señalan muy claramente el Trat libremente concluyeron el 8 de Febrero de 1907 los Gobiernos de la E Dominicana i de los Estados Unidos, entre las cuales no figuran la el control de la Hacienda del Gobierno Dominicano, ni la recaudación rentas internas, ni el desembolso de fondos dominicanos.

Si fuese posible que las estipulaciones contenidas en un Tratado cional pudiesen ser modificadas a coluntad de una sola de las naciones, nada conducirían los pactos entra Estados soberanos; i las re cionales, en vez de estar reguladas por el derecho, dependerían exclusivamente del querer del mas fuerte. Por fortuna para la República Dominicana los Estados Unidos el país que siente mas sincera devoción por el i de seguro no insistirá su Gobierno en sostener las exigencias contenidas en la nota de Ud., para no quebrantar la situación jurídica creada por el Tratado del 8 de Febrero de 1907.

En parte, de nada serviría que el Secretario de Estado de Hacienda i Comercio de la República Dominicana tomara providencias cuyo objeto fuera el de un Tratado Internacional; pues tanto los Tratados que celebre la República Dominicana, como las modificaciones que en los mismos se introduzcan, no alcanzan validez sino a consecuencia de la aprobación que les da el Congreso Nacional. (Art. 35, inciso 17 de la Constitución.) El Gobierno de los Estados Unidos, con objeto de establecer, en beneficio de la República Dominicana, una organización mas eficaz de sus rentas, desea introducir modificaciones en el Tratado de 1907, lastimadas a ese respecto por las encaminadas por la Secretaría de Relaciones Exteriores i no por la de Hacienda i Comercio.

A consecuencia de las comunicaciones precedentes, estat Secretaría de Hacienda de su deber comunicar a Ud., señor Receptor: Mientras el Tratado de 1907 no sea alterado por una nueva Convención Internacional, la recaudación de las rentas internas i el desembolso de fondos para otros son funciones que corresponden exclusivamente al Gobierno Dominicano, i que la Receptoría no puede asumir el control de Hacienda i Comercio.

A Ud. muy atentamente,

J. M. JIMENES,
Secretario de Estado de Hacienda i Comercio.

SANTO DOMINGO, 18 de Junio de 1916.

SECRETARIO DE ESTADO DE HACIENDA I COMERCIO, CIUDAD.

SECRETARIO: En contestación a su carta número 1657, que me comunica la negativa oficial a reconocer el control de la Receptoría sobre la Hacienda Dominicana, expresando extensamente sus razones para tal negativa, respetuosamente expongo lo siguiente:

La Receptoría ha recibido órdenes para tomar en consideración o preceder a las razones avanzadas por el Gobierno Dominicano para su negativa a reconocer el control establecido por el Departamento de Estado de los Estados Unidos.

La Receptoría ha recibido órdenes de establecer dicho control i no de negarse a cumplir esas órdenes, con la cooperación i ayuda del departamento de usted, si fuere posible; sin ellas, si es que la referencia suya indica la actitud definitiva de usted sobre el particular.

En esta esperanza, no obstante, de que esa estimada Secretaría ayudará i cooperará en este control de la Receptoría, como para los mejores intereses del Gobierno Dominicano, es que el Receptor General pide oficialmente lo siguiente:

Que todos los libros i registros relativos a la recaudación de las rentas internas i todos los documentos que se refieran en cualquier modo a la Hacienda Dominicana, sean entregados a la Receptoría.

Que todo el papel sellado, las estampillas de la renta interna i los sellos de cancelación, que actualmente están en poder del Gobierno Dominicano, sean entregados a la Receptoría.

Que todos los fondos, pagarés, reclamaciones, letras de cambio, valores, recibos, vales u otros comprobantes de valores actualmente en posesión del Gobierno Dominicano, o cualquiera de sus funcionarios, agentes o representantes, sean entregados a la Receptoría.

Que el trabajo del Departamento de Hacienda continúe eficientemente, sin que el traspaso del control, respetuosamente insinúa el Receptor General, que el Contador General i sus empleados de oficina reciban órdenes del Gobierno Dominicano de continuar en sus actuales atribuciones.

Que todo lo anterior sea entregado respetuosamente,

C. H. BAXTER, Receptor General.

SANTO DOMINGO, Junio 19 de

SEÑOR RECEPTOR GENERAL DE LAS RENTAS ADUANERAS, CIUDAD.

SEÑOR RECEPTOR: En contestación a su carta de ayer, exigiéndome: los libros i registros relativos a las rentas internas sean entregados a la Recepción que todo el papel sellado, estampillas i sellos de correo que actualmente están en poder del Gobierno Dominicano, así como los fondos i valores que por el Gobierno sean entregados a la misma oficina, debo decir a Ud. que no puedo acceder a tales exijencias por las razones que le expuse en mi comunicación número 1657.

I en vista de que Ud me dice en su carta de referencia que ha de cumplir los órdenes del Departamento de Estado de los Estados Unidos, con o sin la sanción de la Secretaría de Hacienda de la República Dominicana, he visto, señor Receptor, separarme de la dirección de este ramo de la Administración Pública, ya que, desconocido el derecho, única arma con que pudiera sostener la capacidad de la República Dominicana para el manejo de sus rentas, el Gobierno no tiene otro medio de obligar a los Estados Unidos a respetar el Tratado que libremente fue concertado el 8 de Febrero de 1907.

De Ud. muy atentamente,

J. M. JIMENEZ

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. Testimony No. 5. It proves that the intervening force to impose on the Dominican Government a treaty denying the fiscal control which belonged to them.

The CHAIRMAN. On the part of the United States Government?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Denying the delivery to the Dominican Government?

Mr. KNOWLES. Refusing to deliver

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. And which receipts were necessary to cover their expenses? There is a public declaration of statement made by the receiver general Baxter, which reads as follows:

"In accordance with instructions from Washington, and supplementary thereto, transmitted through the American minister in Santo Domingo, the receiver general will not deliver any more funds on the Government's account under the control of the public treasury of Santo Domingo, established on the 16th of June, 1916. This suspension of payment will continue until some complete understanding regarding the interpretation of certain articles of the American-Dominican Convention of 1907 be arrived at, interpretation of which the Government of the United States has insisted and of which the Dominican Government has insisted since the month of November last, or until the present Dominican Government has been recognized by the Government of the United States."

Senator POMERENE. That letter was introduced yesterday also, was it not?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes, sir.

(Testimony No. 5 is as follows:)

Evidencia No. 5.—Prueba que las fuerzas interventoras trataron de imponer al Gobierno Dominicano un tratado, negándole las entradas fiscales que necesitaba para subvenir las erogaciones legales.

AVISO IMPORTANTE.

SANTO DOMINGO, 18 de agosto de

De acuerdo con instrucciones de Washington i avisos suplementarios emitidos por conducto del Ministro Americano en Santo Domingo, la Recepción no hará más desembolsos de fondos por cuenta del Gobierno, bajo control de la Hacienda Pública Dominicana establecido el 16 de Junio de 1916.

Esta cesación de pago continuará hasta que se llegue a un completo entendimiento respecto a la interpretación de ciertos artículos de la Convención Americana de 1907, interpretación sobre la cual ha insistido el Gobierno de los Estados Unidos i de la cual tiene conocimiento el Gobierno Dominicano el mes de noviembre último; o hasta que el actual Gobierno Dominicano sea reconocido por los Estados Unidos.

SANTO DOMINGO, 20 de octubre de 1916.

BAXTER,

tor General de Aduanas, Ciudad.

RECEPTOR: Por su atenta comun'cación de fecha 17 de los corrientes, a la fecha en que, a juicio del Sr. Ministro Americano podrá ponerse la Ley de Presupuesto votada por el Congreso Nacional en 1° de 0 de agosto i promulgada por el Poder Ejecutivo el 30 de septiembre ño, me he enterado :

que a los empleados del Departamento de Hacienda (con excepción : esta Secretaría) se les paga en la actualidad, no obstante el "Aviso te " que en la edición No. 8173 i en otras del Listin Diario publicó re " que no se haría más desembolso de fondos por cuenta del Gobierno mo " sin excepción alguna ; i que sin duda por el deseo del Poder Interventor de continuar pagando empleados del Departamento de Hacienda, sin que ese deseo contrarie sito que indudablemente tiene dicho Poder de no reconocer una Ley del actual Gobierno Constitucional de esta República, a fin de que terprete eso como un reconocimiento de este Gobierno por el de los Unidos de América, el Sr. Ministro Americano dispuso que "los sueldos los empleados del Departamento de Hacienda deben pagarse en la d según las provisiones del viejo presupuesto," por lo cual i atenién- do a la decisión de dicho Sr. Ministro, la Receptoría decidió que "no n cuenta ni aprobará para su pago eventual ningún sueldo nuevo o lo u otras partidas de gastos que fija el nuevo presupuesto, sino desde ' del mes subsiguiente a la fecha en que lleguen a un entendido los rnos."

I motivo debo declarar a Ud. que: aun cuando me es grato saber que contratado el medio de que siquiera un número de dominicanos i los ericanos que con Ud. prestan servicios en el Departamento de Hacienda puntualmente sus emolumentos i estén, por lo tanto, exceptuados de isión de pagos contenida en el "Aviso Importante" de Ud. ya men- de que no han podido todavía librarse los demás empleados ni los huérfanos i las viudas pensionados del Estado, no es posible a esta hora impartirle su aprobación a la medida que expresa su referida comunicación del 17 de los corrientes, por cuanto la Constitución, en su Art. 42, la reconoce que "las leyes, después de publicadas, son obligatorias para los habitantes de la República si ha transcurrido el tiempo legal para reputen conocidas."

En esa virtud, esta Secretaría toma nota de la comunicación de la dicha, pero solamente como contentiva de un hecho que se nos impune, en que al reanudarse las relaciones oficiales entre los dos países aún desde antes, el de los Estados Unidos no verá óbice en que se someta a la Constitución, reconociéndose que la Ley de Presupuesto por el 30 de septiembre último está ahora en ejecución por haberse publicado en la Gaceta Oficial del 1º de los corrientes mes i año.

Atentamente le saluda,

FRANCISCO J. PEYNA

Secretario de Estado de Hacienda i Comercio

MR. KNOWLES. Referring, Doctor, to your statement that troops were at the time when the Dominican country was in complete peace and what was your understanding and that of the Dominican people as to the meaning of the landing of such troops?

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I understand that the landing of American forces constitute a state of war between the American people and the Dominican people, because I understand that in order that there be a war between peoples, which would be repugnant to the American arms and the grandeur of the American people, due to the complete lack of motive, it is necessary in order that a state of war be produced between both countries, first, that war be declared by the legal and institutional order which exists in the United States for the declaration of war between that people and another friendly State. So that there was not a regular state of war between the United States and the Dominican Republic, is there a regular state of war, because a convention exists in which the United States is one of the signatories, and it is one of the conventions of the conference of the Hague in which strict rules are established as to the declaration of war, subjecting those who observe those treaties to a previous notification before any hostilities, or to a conditional notification, which is an ultimatum. On that account, in my opinion, there is no state of war between the United States and the Dominican Republic, because the Dominican people have never caused or given any offense to the honor or any legitimate interests of the noble people of the United States.

If the committee have no questions to ask me I will conclude.

Senator POMERENE. I have no questions that I care to ask the witness now. We are very much obliged to you.

The INTERPRETER. He says he has not finished yet.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. I heard yesterday that the honorable commission hereby created interrogated several witnesses in connection with the best manner about the evacuation of Dominican territory on the part of the United States.

Senator POMERENE. Let me say that the committee will be very happy to receive an expression from the witness both as to the date of termination, if thought advisable, and as to the terms and conditions on which there be an evacuation, if he thinks there should be one. We shall be very glad to receive any suggestions he may have to make.

Dr. HENRIQUEZ. In connection with that point I declare that there is an American who sincerely loves the glorious history of the United States, the traditional classical probity of the United States, in thinking in that manner to put a stop to this occupation, who would not decide for this in the most frank, sincere, effective manner and unmistakable manner of rectification, and I also declare that any Dominican who stated that the Dominican people wish any solution that is not significant of an unequal and unjust retraction which would restore to the Dominican people the exercise of its full and free sovereignty—if there was such a Dominican that he says such a thing, he would not be interpreting the Dominican people as being deceiving his hearers.

After this declaration, in my capacity as a free citizen of the Dominican Republic and vice president of the Dominican National Congress, I protest against the occupation of Dominican territory by American forces, and against any act attempting or despoiling which has been requently by the American forces. And I particularly protest against the act, for the exercise of the legislative functions of the Dominican Republic, which have constituted a powerful despoiling of national legislation. I also protest against violations committed of Article III of the Dominican Convention in connection with the contraction of new loans in connection with the reform of the import duty.

POMERENE. There is one further question. If the witness is not prepared to do it now, I wish you would do it for him. He has referred to the fact that he is the vice president of the Dominican National Union, and the witness would be pleased if he would furnish a copy of their constitution and have it incorporated as part of his testimony, and the names of the witnesses. He has already submitted a list of the names.

OWLES. Just before the witness leaves there, I was a little in doubt as to whether or not the exact meaning that it seemed to me he was intending to state was stated there. I think the United States was used instead of the Dominican Republic.

CHAIRMAN. I think you are right. It was a verbal inadvertence. There is no other place where—

OWLES. My attention is called to another one that seems not to exactly be the idea as translated, and that is, "attempt at despoiling."

POMERENE. I want to make a suggestion in the economy of time. Two witnesses have appeared before us and both of them have taken the position that the United States Government violated the sovereignty of the Dominican Republic by taking over the internal revenue. Now, we know there is that con-

OWLES. We will have no more testimony on that.

POMERENE. Well, I was going to say, if you have anything further to shed any light upon the right construction of the convention of 1907, we shall be glad to hear it, but it does not avail anything to multiply the testimony as to what the facts are, because they seem to be common to both sides.

OWLES. All right, Senator. The present witness is not going to touch the matter at all.

TESTIMONY OF MR. JOSE MANUEL JIMINEZ, OF SANTO DOMINGO CITY.

OWLES. What is your name?

JIMINEZ. Jose Manuel Jiminez.

OWLES. What is your age?

JIMINEZ. Forty years.

OWLES. What is your profession?

JIMINEZ. Merchant.

OWLES. Where were you born?

JIMINEZ. Monte Cristi, Dominican Republic.

OWLES. How long have you lived in this country? Have you lived in this country since then?

JIMINEZ. No; I was about 20 or 35 years in France and Germany. I came to this country about 22 years ago.

OWLES. What relation are you to President Jiminez?

JIMINEZ. I am his son, and I was his secretary of state.

OWLES. His son and secretary of state?

JIMINEZ. First, secretary of the interior and police and afterwards secretary of the treasury.

POMERENE. Secretary of interior and police under whose adminis-

OWLES. The same administration. How long were you a member of it?

JIMINEZ. About six months.

OWLES. Was that immediately prior to your father's resignation?

JIMINEZ. Yes. The last six months.

OWLES. Will you state any facts that you think will be interesting to the court in regard to the event?

JIMINEZ. That is just what I want. From the unfortunate date of the death of my father, I was awaiting the arrival of this day, because I wished on behalf of my father and for the good of my father's memory to clear up everything that was connected during that period.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think that is not the interpretation. He does not want to clear up. He wishes to shed light.

The INTERPRETER. To make clear.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it means the same thing.

Mr. JIMINEZ. I wish to state first that President Jiminez never requested approval nor consented to, nor was agreement made for, the American intervention, and second, I wish to protest energetically against the aspersions and affirmations contained in the pamphlet read by Mr. Knowles in which it is stated: "At this point, the United States Government intervened with the consent of the rightful, though deposed, President Jiminez, landed naval forces on May 3, 1916, and pacified Santo Domingo City, the Capital." I protest against this affirmation and wish that the honorable Senators have it withdrawn. I believe I have the right to ask it until the contrary be proved. I have said of what I have said. It is lacking in common sense that any one three or four days after he had resigned, because he didn't wish to accept the intervention or help the American forces, that three or four days before would allow the American forces to land which could be for no reason than to help to carry out the intention to occupy the territory.

Senator POMERENE. Now, let me interpose here. The witness has asked the committee to withdraw that statement. Of course, we cannot do that.

Mr. KNOWLES. Certainly not, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. That is an official document. It may or may not be true. We are not passing upon that now, any more than we are passing upon the truth of the statement which the witness is making. That is only a matter of the record, and we come to our conclusions after the evidence is all in.

Mr. JIMINEZ. But, honorable Senators, it appears to me that a government cannot publish anything which it can not prove.

Senator POMERENE. That remains to be seen. We are not passing upon the question now. We may go into that further later on, but we cannot remove an official document simply because the proof of it is questioned. We must leave that out.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Senator, I think the intention of the witness was to really ask that this committee do that, but as a method of expressing his opinion.

Senator POMERENE. Oh, well, that is all right. We accept that.

Mr. JIMINEZ. The president knew that the American forces were to be sent because Capt. Crossley, after having insisted since his arrival on the necessity of his aid, or rather the aid of the American forces to occupy the city, communicated to the president one morning, stating categorically, not asking him or asking whether he agreed to it, that he needed to land and to guard American interests.

Senator POMERENE. Now, can the secretary give the date of that letter? Can he furnish us with a copy of that letter?

Mr. JIMINEZ. It was oral.

The CHAIRMAN. Were you present?

Mr. JIMINEZ. Yes; I was present.

Senator POMERENE. And heard it?

Mr. JIMINEZ. Yes; and heard it.

Senator POMERENE. Before we go further, can you give the date of the convention?

Mr. JIMINEZ. It was one day before they disembarked.

Senator POMERENE. And where was the conversation?

Mr. JIMINEZ. In the afternoon, in the house where the President was staying, outside the town.

Senator POMERENE. The day before?

Mr. JIMINEZ. The day before the troops disembarked. That would be the 3d of May.

Mr. KNOWLES. The troops landed on the 4th of May. The witness says this conversation was the day before, which is the 3d of May.

Senator POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. JIMINEZ. At the same time he let him know that he intended to send the boats into the river.

Senator POMERENE. That is, who intended?

Mr. JIMINEZ. The commander.

Mr. KNOWLES. Capt. Crossley intended to bring the forces into the river and land them there at the fort.

Mr. JIMINEZ. But, as on effecting the landing of the forces some shots were fired, he pointed out that martial law would immediately be put in force.

he military law is very severe, if the place from which the shot was not be ascertained, the marines would have to fire at every living women, children, or aged persons. Those are the exact words of Capt.

OWLES. Just right there, Mr. Jiminez. Did Capt. Crossley state in that at which you were present that if a single shot was fired that he indiscriminately into the people, regardless of whether they were children?

JIMINEZ. That is just what he said; those exact words—children, men, and on everything that they saw living.

CHAIRMAN. Was anyone else present at the time except yourself?

JIMINEZ. The President, myself, and I think there were more.

CHAIRMAN. Was Minister Russell there?

JIMINEZ. Yes; Minister Russell was there. Minister Russell was just those words.

CHAIRMAN. I didn't understand.

JIMINEZ. Mr. Russell was translating that they would fire on women, and old people.

CHAIRMAN. Did Capt. Crossley speak in English?

JIMINEZ. He spoke in English. I was translating and sometimes Minister also.

CHAIRMAN. You and Minister Russell were doing the translating. All as anyone else there?

JIMINEZ. I don't recall, but I think yes; I think other secretaries were OWLES. Will you try to remember and recall what secretaries, if any, present, and let us know a little later?

CHAIRMAN. Certainly you don't mean when you say all the secretaries e, you don't mean that the Secretary of War was there?

JIMINEZ. No; the secretaries who were with my father.

CHAIRMAN. Then one was not there. What other secretaries were there?

JIMINEZ. Secretary Velasquez, Secretary Pichardo, Secretary Jaime Moto, if.

the fact that President Jiminez had no control over the city, and could not prevent anyone from firing on the American forces, and as the commandante it was to safeguard American interests, and as international law permits, there being precedents in the Republic, and as besides the legation and consulates were situated outside of the city, President Jiminez did not at that time could refuse, and advised that it would be preferable to land at Cienfuegos, outside of the town, because at least an immediate conflict avoided, which the taking of the city would have caused.

able Senators, the American intervention does not date from the landing of American forces. That was an act, but it can be stated that the intervention in the note which the American Government handed to President

OWLES. What date?

JIMINEZ. The 19th of November, 1915. Secretary Bryan pursued a friendly and benevolent policy with the country, and I believe with the other American Republics. But after Secretary Lansing was in power he appeared in favor of the big stick policy. The Dominican situation was complicated. I would take the liberty of accusing Secretary Lansing of precipitating the intervention in the violation of this territory, because it can not be understood that any reason that note should have been handed; it was a real surprise to the Dominican Government. Just the same if you lived peacefully with a neighbor and suddenly in the morning he entered your house to dispute and to make trouble, you would not know what is the matter. That was what happened to the Government. It dated from that day.

CHAIRMAN. Are you going to introduce the copy of this letter?

OWLES. The note has been introduced, Senator.

JIMINEZ. It was, as I stated, a surprise, because there was no reason for the intervention. The country was completely tranquil. President Jiminez found out immediately that note signified American intervention. As he was not disposed to accept it, as he did not wish to be a puppet, he knew beforehand that his position had fallen, because his presence would not be agreeable to the American Government. He saw the matter from such a grave point of view he telegraphed the chief of the occupation—

CHAIRMAN. Telegraphed to whom?

Mr. KNOWLES. One of the party leaders in the country.

Mr. JIMINEZ. You know there have always been two parties here in the country, the Horacista party and the Jiminista party—asking him to do immediately, in order to inform him of very grave matters. Both agreed that note implied American intervention. Both agreed that nothing that asked could be accepted, and both agreed—the chief of the Government and chief of the occupation—to unite in defense of the country.

Mr. KNOWLES. "Fortunately, the election of Jiminez, who took office December 4, 1916, was followed by a brief period of comparative calm in the Dominican Republic. Elements of disorganization were present, but awaiting a favorable opportunity for expression."

Mr. JIMINEZ. I would like to say something in connection with what I have also heard it said that the intervention had been caused through the chaotic condition of the country. The disorderly elements and the condition may have been due to two things. The financial and political fusion. The financial condition was good and there was no disorder. President Jiminez died poor. The secretaries before me, Armando Perez and Ramon Herrera, are men of irreproachable conduct. They were incorruptible. And I complied with my duties. And whenever the head of the Government is good it can easily be stated just how the Government is composed. Besides that, it would be convenient for the commission to investigate those who succeeded us acted worse or better than we did. That declaration is contrary to what Minister Russell told me a few days before the intervention with Gen. Arias. During the last interview with Mr. Russell about the state of slight importance he congratulated me on the good state of the financial condition.

Senator POMERENE. What was that date?

Mr. JIMINEZ. Oh, it might be about eight days, six days, seven days before the last conference I had.

Senator POMERENE. You mean eight days before the President's resignation.

Mr. JIMINEZ. No; eight days before the trouble we had with Gen. Arias. Before the conflict. It was about the beginning of April.

Mr. KNOWLES. Of 1915.

Mr. JIMINEZ. 1916.

Referring to the political part, there was peace in the country. During the government of President Jiminez there was peace. There were disturbances of no importance. Besides that, what is called a revolution happened in Mexico, killing, burning, destroying the property of foreigners and natives and not allowing peaceful persons to pursue their businesses, such things are unknown in this country. Unfortunately, those are things known now.

The CHAIRMAN. What does he mean?

Mr. KNOWLES. Those acts of torture and of burning.

Mr. JIMINEZ. Against pacific people.

Mr. KNOWLES. Are committed in Mexico. Never known before in this country are known here now?

Mr. JIMINEZ. I don't wish to state this of all of the American troops are excellent persons among the officers, correct men, esteemed by the Dominicans but there are others whom it would have been better had they remained at home.

Senator POMERENE. Let me say here, the American people and the American officers and the American Government—and by that I mean the American Navy as well as civilians—do not believe in torturing and cruelty of that kind, and they do not permit it when they have the proof of it. And there have been sporadic instances of this kind, no one regrets it more than the American people, and if you or any other witness has any proof in any particular case, the Americans here in the island as well as at home welcome that proof, so that there may be an investigation, so that the justice may be done. Let there be no mistake about that.

Mr. JIMINEZ. It was for that reason that I stated that I did not wish to state to the American forces, because there are many excellent officers. I mentioned many names. But there were some who forgot that they belonged to the great Nation and that the uniform is worn with dignity.

Senator POMERENE. Well, whether this committee is here or not, if there is any evidence of that kind, the American Government as well as the people of the island here and his associates will welcome the information, and they will investigate it very carefully.

r McCORMICK. Let it be noticed, Mr. Chairman, that the committee can obtain depositions even though it be not in physical session. I think preter should translate what Senator Pomerene has said, so that all understand it.

interpreter then translated the statement of Senator Pomerene.)

INEZ. As far as the acts of the secretary of state were concerned after ation of President Jiminez, which is being discussed here, I wish to t the secretaries of state and I, above all, whose mission had ended, o resign also, but Minister Russell told us that we ought not to do so, he country would be without a government, and it would be necessary t an American military governor. For that reason we continued in AIRMAN. Let me ask a question here. You say "For that reason we in office." Do you mean by that statement the entire cabinet?

INEZ. Not the entire. Those who were with the President.

OWLES. And you were all with the President except Gen. Arias?

INEZ. Yes; because Mr. Peynada had resigned before.

AIRMAN. Dr. Peynada who was before us?

INEZ. No; his brother.

OWLES. He had resigned before the resignation of the President?

AIRMAN. Was there anyone exercising the authority which should have ised by your secretary of war, Gen. Arias?

INEZ. Myself; I had charge.

OWLES. He took that portfolio.

AIRMAN. Were you acting both as secretary of state and secretary of INEZ. Yes.

AIRMAN. For how long a period?

INEZ. For about 15 days. Our acting was really for the administra- current affairs of every secretary.

AIRMAN. Then you call your secretary of state your secretary of state i affairs, do you?

OWLES. They do not.

AIRMAN. Are they designated—

McCORMICK. Are they all secretaries of state?

OWLES. The secretary for foreign affairs is another title than that have in our country. This title is Secretary of State. Here it is er des relations d'exterieur. That is, minister of foreign affairs. is well as you do the affairs of your father, Mr. Jiminez. I want if he was ever notified, or any act was committed that your father as being a deposition of your father—

POMERENE. Now, let me suggest, you are asking him if he knows ich his father "considered." How can he tell that? He can give dgment about it, but not his father's judgment.

WLES. Was your father ever deposed, Mr. Jiminez?

INEZ. No; he was not deposed. If he had been, there would have ed for his resignation.

POMERENE. To whom was this resignation of the President ad-

NEZ. His resignation?

POMERENE. Yes.

NEZ. To the country.

POMERENE. Did that conform with your constitution and laws?

INEZ. There being a revolution in town, he preferred to give his ion to the country.

McCORMICK. There was a revolution in town?

WLES. Explain just what you mean by that.

NEZ. What I mean is that the forces of Gen. Arias were not at that the control of the President, because they had trouble together.

McCORMICK. You mean that since there was a force which would ; offering his resignation conformably with the constitution, he was lo so.

NEZ. No; he preferred to.

McCORMICK. Mr. Witness, I merely want to illuminate your state- here was a revolution in the city. Now, if there was a revolution in you stated, which prevented his getting in his resignation in con- form, it prevented his so doing by force; am I right?

Mr. JIMINEZ. Well, having that difference with Gen. Arias, he had relations with Arias and preferred to tender his resignation to the President, Senator McCORMICK. Although that was not conformable with the provisions of the constitution under which he had taken office?

Mr. JIMINEZ. No.

Senator McCORMICK. No. That it was not conformable with the constitution?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. I think it would be well at this point—

(After a conference with Mr. Knowles, the witness rose to depart.)

Senator POMERENE. I wanted to ask you a question. You have referred to a conversation which occurred in your presence between your father, President of the Republic, and Capt. Crossley and Minister Russell. At that time, before the time of that conversation, had there been any conflict between the forces of the President and the forces of the secretary of war?

Mr. JIMINEZ. No; we had no trouble, no wounding.

Senator POMERENE. When did the first shooting occur?

Mr. JIMINEZ. About three or four days after.

Senator POMERENE. When were the American troops landed, with reference to the time of the first shooting? Before or after?

Mr. JIMINEZ. The American troops were landed before the encounter, which there were two dead.

Senator POMERENE. Well, there seems to be a difference of opinion between the witnesses who appear here on that subject. Possibly the former question may have called for the answer.

Mr. JIMINEZ. When the American troops were landed no encounter took place between the Dominicans.

Senator POMERENE. Had there not been shooting before that?

Mr. JIMINEZ. No; the only encounter was three or four days after.

Senator POMERENE. When did Gen. Arias take charge of the troops? Were they under his control here in the city?

Mr. JIMINEZ. I wish that in connection with our internal affairs no questions be asked, because there are many other witnesses. The question is not very agreeable to me.

Senator POMERENE. If it is your desire that I ask you no questions, I will respect your wishes.

Mr. JIMINEZ. I may say that they are not very agreeable to me and I do not wish to be impartial in my answers.

Senator POMERENE. Very well; I will not ask the questions.

Mr. KNOWLES. The witness stated to me that he did not like to go into immediate affairs that resulted in his father's death.

Senator POMERENE. Very well, I will respect his wishes.

STATEMENT OF MR. RAFAEL ISAAC PAU, SANTO DOMINGO

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to state, in presenting this witness, that within a few minutes before the hour for adjournment, and while we have been sitting on the money on the first part of the evidence, as I stated it would be possible, we would like to get before the committee this particular statement relative to some of the financial affairs that have been brought out in cross-examination of some of the witnesses here relative to the deficit and budget.

What is your name?

Mr. PAU. Rafael Isaac Pau.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your occupation?

Mr. PAU. Bookkeeper.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?

Mr. PAU. Santo Domingo City.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

Mr. PAU. City of Santo Domingo.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you always resided here in this city?

Mr. PAU. Not always. I resided for some time in La Romana, where I was a bookkeeper in a factory.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you ever been employed in the bookkeeping department of the military government?

Mr. PAU. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. In this city?

Mr. PAU. Yes; the national treasury.

OWLES. In that capacity of bookkeeper and in that position that you the treasury here—

CHAIRMAN. Give us the date of his employment, so we can understand it.

OWLES. When did you first enter the employ of the treasury here e military government?

A. The 14th of May, 1919.

OWLES. How long did you remain in that position?

A. Two years and two months.

Mr McCORMICK. Why did you leave that employ? Did you resign or dismissed?

A. No; I was dismissed.

Mr POMERENE. By whom?

A. Secretary Mayo.

Mr POMERENE. For what reason?

A. For having signed a protest gotten up by the Electoral Board of on.

OWLES. Let us explain just what this is. To make that brief, and less time, I will state that there was a general protest against holding ions that were drawn up by an organization in the city and was gen- ned by the people of the city, and it was because he joined with the signing that protest—

Mr POMERENE. That is, does that refer to the election for which a procla- ad been issued by the governor of the island?

OWLES. Yes, Senator.

Mr POMERENE. And that election was for the purpose of electing a Presi- a Congress?

OWLES. Yes. Whatever the proclamation said it was for, that was st.

Mr POMERENE. And I understand, then, that while the military governor d for an election there was a general protest against the holding of an OWLES. Exactly, Senator.

Mr POMERENE. I wish, for the information of the committee, you would copy of that protest which was thus signed.

OWLES. Yes.

as this Mr. Mayo that you refer to?

A. He was the minister of finance under the military government.

Mr JONES. Did Commander Mayo dismiss him by giving him any writ-

OWLES. We will ask him, Senator.

ou notified in writing when you were dismissed?

A. Yes.

Mr JONES. I have been informed that all of the employees of the mili- nment who signed protests against an election which was authorized lamation of the governor general were likewise asked for their resig- is that correct?

OWLES. I think that is true. A number of them were, I know. This he only case.

Mr JONES. Have you a copy of that notification?

A. Yes.

OWLES. Where is it?

A. At home.

OWLES. Will you deliver it to me a little later?

A. Yes.

OWLES. Now, Mr. Pau, in your capacity as bookkeeper, handling the of the treasury department, did you have opportunity to make cer- vations?

A. Yes; many.

OWLES. Did you make notes of certain ones?

A. Yes.

OWLES. Of which you have kept a record?

A. Yes.

OWLES. And which you have brought with you?

A. Yes.

OWLES. For the purpose of giving information to this commission?

A. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you that information before you?

Mr. PAU. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you be kind enough to state it just before explaining to the committee?

I would like to state, in order that there may not be any contention that was a surprise at all to any of the officials, that whoever may be connected in any way at all in that accounting department, and the secretary of the jury himself, be asked to be present and hear these allegations.

Senator POMERENE. Very well. I had sent to inquire as to whether Mander Mayo was here. If so, we will have him present, if there are any officers here in that department.

Just one moment. A matter has been called to my attention here—information with respect to the calling for the resignation of those who protested against his election was not entirely accurate or complete. I have been told since that no resignations were called for from those who protested in a respectful way; that it was only those who protested in an abusive way, and resignations were called for from those who had signed that particular form of protest. Lest there may be some uncertainty about this, of course, we shall ask that the particular protest which was signed by Messrs. Jones and Pomerene be incorporated in the record.

You may proceed.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you go ahead and read that?

Senator McCORMICK. Can you furnish us with a copy?

Mr. KNOWLES. We will do so, Senator.

Senator McCORMICK. Can you do that now and then we can recess if we desire and these officials whom you have invited here can have the opportunity to go over these figures.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I will give my copy.

Senator McCORMICK. If you will furnish that copy so we can turn it to the finance department or treasury department for examination it will be returned to you, if you so desire. Meanwhile, I think that it is now about 12 minutes of the usual time for the noon recess, and we will now stand adjourned until 2 o'clock.

(Whereupon the committee took a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.).

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met at 2 o'clock p. m. pursuant to recess.

Present: Senators McCormick, Jones, and Pomerene; Senator Pomerene presiding.

STATEMENT OF RAFAEL ISAAC PAU—Resumed.

Mr. KNOWLES. Before we proceed I would like to know if there is any certain documents and official statements that I asked for last Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. I think they are ready. You may proceed with the statement.

Mr. KNOWLES. You may proceed with your statement. Read the paper.

Mr. PAU. The budget of 1920 of the military government is as follows: approximate balance not appropriated, $1,400,000.

Mr. KNOWLES. Let me understand what he means by that. What is the $1,400,000; what does that represent?

Mr. PAU. That represents a balance which at the beginning of 1920 was a credit of the Government. Import and export duty, $3,900,000.

Senator JONES. During what time?

Mr. PAU. The year 1920. That was what the Government estimated to be received for that period.

Senator JONES. There is a published financial report for the year 1920; his figures vary from that published report?

Mr. KNOWLES. I think they will in some respects. As he comes to them he will point them out, Senator.

Mr. PAU. Other receipts, $3,629,800.

Senator JONES. What is the purpose of this examination? What do you want to appear?

Mr. KNOWLES. The object of this witness and this examination, Mr. PAU, is to answer or combat certain matters that were brought out on the examination by, I think, Senator Pomerene, of one of the witnesses; the deficits that occurred under and about the time of the occupation by the Dominicans.

asks to explain what was brought out in that testimony. Moreover, I have evidence from the record, or taken from the records, to inform the committee by what he will point out to the committee that never had deficits occurred under the management of the Dominican Government by the same as occurred under the management of the Dominican affairs by the Government of the United States.

ONES. Now, I am disposed to shorten this investigation. The books do not show exactly what occurred, and if this witness thinks that the accounts are not correct they are open and subject to audit by the Dominican Government. I want to, and I don't want to take up my time going into a lot of details which mean nothing and accomplish no particular end. I have a great deal of patience, but sometimes it reaches an end.

CHILRENE. Let me suggest—see if we can straighten this out. You are now charging that there is a larger deficit here during the American occupation than there was during the Dominican rule. If that was the whole truth it might mean something; but this report—I read it over hastily—I called it except what was in the report itself. The commander has admitted that the finances were not in good order, due to many things, principally to the loss of business. So far as the customs duties were concerned, the people—the merchants and other importers—had overbought. Of course, this resulted in increased customs. Necessarily, having overbought, their purchases therefore are very much less. Necessarily, that has fallen off. And the same may be said, to some extent, as far as the other duties are concerned.

CHILRENE. I have seen a statement made here by the press—wanting an audit of the accounts. We have not any objection to that. If these books are wrong, let them be known. Let that be shown; and if the commander's statement of the accounts is wrong, let that be shown. We are not going to get anywhere by talk. We have got deficits in the United States. You are not alone in having troubles. We have got our troubles. Our employment has fallen off as compared with two years ago, and our merchants, our farmers, and everybody else are distressed. I would be surprised if there was not the same condition here. If it is due to the American occupation, let it be shown. But we can not draw conclusions ourselves. If you have shown that these figures contained in the report submitted by the commander are not correct, I take it we want to hear that fact.

ONES. Certainly.

CHILRENE. And I suggest you go direct to that. If you have an analysis of the figures, go directly to these questions. We do not have to take the time to discuss some of these matters which may be considered.

ONES. Well, in reply, Senator, this matter was opened up not by me, but by questions of one of the Senators—I think yourself.

CHILRENE. I called it out.

ONES. It was pressed upon the witness, if I mistake not, with the idea that the reason for the occupation of the intervention was by reason of the deficits; the imputation being that they were unable to take care of the public affairs.

CHILRENE. Oh, no; that was not the reason for it at all. The one thing that was called attention to especially was this fact that there is a large increase in this convention of 1907 by the terms of which the public debt was increased without the consent of the United States. Now, the Dominican Government has put one construction upon that, and apparently the American people have placed another construction upon that. That was not the reason for it, and no other purpose was in mind; and those facts, as I have said, were practically conceded. But there seems to be a difference in opinion. That was the only purpose of that inquiry.

ONES. Well, based upon that construction, was the subsequent action taken, was it not?

CHILRENE. That was one of the reasons, as I understand, for the ONES. So that, by way of meeting that reason alleged and now for the occupation, I wish to have the opportunity to present much evidence, already just repeated, but taken from the record in such a way as to show, in the short time that it will take to do it, the specific—

CHILRENE (interposing). Well, bear in mind—what I am not able to do is this: You are talking about deficits. It is not the deficit alone, but the attraction of this debt without the consent of one of the parties to the convention. That was the reason, as I understand it. Now if figures are wrong, point out. We are only too happy to receive that, if that is what you intend to show or can show; and if you have a written statement, if it is complete by itself, we will receive that statement.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, I would like very much to have that statement, and that was to be given to me—

Senator POMERENE. Right there it is.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Senator, I think, at least for the present, we content by asking that these statements be entered in the record.

Senator POMERENE. Now, will you for our information—you have the paper now, and the committee has not had the opportunity to will you state to us, in a general way, what it sets forth so that we can determine later on—

Mr. KNOWLES. There are two particular points in here, and that is the budget for 1920 provided for an expenditure of $4,420,930 for the year. The estimated receipts or revenues for the year 1920 were $8,329,800. The expenses for that year amounted to $4,379,099.64. This latter was the budget instead of the actual expenses. That was the estimate.

Senator POMERENE. The actual budget expenses were, as I understand, $4,379,099, instead of the estimated expense of $4,420,000?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. Now, there were two items, one was the actual expenses incurred in regard to the loan of $3,908,870. Now, the receipts amounted to $8,329,800.

Senator POMERENE. Now, are you right about that? You gave that ago as estimated.

Mr. KNOWLES. No; I was wrong about that. I did not understand.

Senator POMERENE. $8,329,800 were the total receipts. Are not you about that? We are advised here that the estimated were $8,329,800, actual receipts were between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000. Well, say your own way.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; you are right about that. I had not had a chance I lent this paper. Now, the total amount that the Government estimated for for the year 1920 was $8,329,800. Now, the fixed charges against that to take care of the loan and the expenses of collection of customs amounted to a total of $3,908,870, leaving a balance of $4,420,930. The expenses or expenditures estimated was $4,379,099.64, leaving a balance of $41,830.36. Now, the actual receipts from customs revenues, sundries, etc., amounted to $11,604,749.73. So that the total revenues of the Republic in the year 1920 showed the amount of $3,274,949.73; that is more than was estimated when the budget was made up; and, instead of being a balance to the credit of the Government or a surplus of it, there actually existed in the current accounts that the Government of the International Banking Corporation a debit balance of $70,451.27.

Senator JONES. Where did the witness get his information that that debit balance?

Mr. PAU. From the books of the Treasury.

Senator JONES. Let me ask a question: Have you, in trying to balance, taken into consideration the expenditures for public work?

Mr. PAU. Yes; everything.

Senator McCORMICK. Let me ask this question: Did he get that while he was employed in the Treasury or while he was employed in the International Banking Corporation?

Mr. PAU. While employed in the Treasury.

Senator McCORMICK. He was employed lately by the International Banking Corporation?

Mr. PAU. No.

Senator POMERENE. Let me make an explanation to save time. There are certain matters that the witness has not taken into consideration; also that he has, in attempting to strike a balance, used some figures related to estimates instead of actual cash and actual expenditures. Commander Mayo has his books, which are open to inspection. I am very glad to have this witness, or anyone else who is familiar with the accounts, come before him and see if they can not reconcile these allegations between them. Certainly, no man can object to that.

Mr. KNOWLES. Certainly not.

OMERENE. If they can not reconcile their differences, then we will, off of the record, have a statement by Commander Mayo as representative here, and you can furnish a statement by the witness.

VLES. That is entirely right, Senator.

OMERENE. Very well. Now, then, let us incorporate this statement.

VLES. Now, there is only one point there. There is one other statement—memorandum that I would like to—and I think would be interesting to the committee to know. It is in regard to the last loan negotiated by the government in the name of the Dominican Republic, for two and a half million dollars.

OMERENE. What is the date of that loan? June 1, 1914, I am administering Commander Mayo.

VLES. Yes. The reason given or made known to the Dominican Republic, however, did not cease their protests against making such a loan, the State Department, I am informed, and to others whose consent of the United States would have to be obtained for making that loan, was that two and a half million dollars was needed for the express purpose of carrying certain works that had been started, and including road work. It was, I believe, so stated, by the proclamation of June 14, 1914, that was to be the manner in which that two and a half million dollars was expended. The manner in which that money was actually expended—not for work to be done after the money would come into the hands of the Dominican government, but to pay for debts that were not explained—

The contrary was stated, that it was to be expended in works to be done. The actual amount that was available for the purpose stated in the proclamation—the witness informs me that notwithstanding that statement the amount available for public works was only half a million dollars.

McCORMICK. At what date, Mr. Knowles, was the amount available for public works half a million dollars?

VLES. He says there was an executive order stating that that would be the amount.

McCORMICK. Let me elaborate a little. You have stated in a communication to the State Department that the military government said that it needed to carry on certain public works, and that when the moneys were received, there were available only half a million dollars. It is important to know the date at which the statement was made, first to the Dominican government at Washington, and the date when the moneys were finally received. Some months elapsed, if I remember, between the first proposal of the Dominican government to issue the loan and the making of the contract for the final receipt from the loan. It is conceivable—I don't know, but I am going to bear in mind, that in the meantime, either by the use of certificates or current revenues in part, or other means, they had incurred considerable floating debt, to which it was necessary to apply a part of the loan.

VLES. I see that can exist if the time was long enough. That will make a big difference. I think the Senator has a copy of the proclamation of June 14.

McCORMICK. It is conceivable, too, that the item of $500,000 might have been a appropriation of whatever balance was due, whatever balance was on hand, so that the businesslike way in which to handle this statement would be to put it in toto to the committee, and that the committee shall through consultation with Mr. Knowles proceed at once to an examination of the statement of the Government and ascertainment of the facts. We are engaging in VLES. Yes.

OMERENE. Before Senator McCormick came in the question occurred of the alleged deficit during the military occupation, which it was said was incurred during the Dominican régime, and it seems, from information that was furnished us here, that Commander Mayo claimed that certain receipts—and perhaps debits—were not included, and that the basis of the witness was based upon estimates rather than upon actual figures. I suggested, with the consent of Commander Mayo, that the witness be taken to his office and they try to reconcile these statements and, if they cannot reconcile them, that Commander Mayo on behalf of the military government could furnish his statement and let the witness furnish his. Now, I am going to state to me that the same rule could apply to this very matter now.

Senator McCORMICK. I hesitate to make formal objection to the introduction of testimony, but it seems to me this is an exceedingly informal way to do so.

Mr. KNOWLES. It is not done with the idea of impugning the correctness of these accounts—not at all, but merely for the purpose, as was stated by the Dominican people by the admiral, to the effect that this loan that was negotiated as of June 1 was to be used for the purpose of public works—construction of roads, and from the understanding that the Dominicans at that time that the loan would be negotiated and that two and a half million dollars would be available. Now, I take from the records how the two and a half million dollars was spent in four items; $724,992.76 was to pay a long-claim of Grace & Co.

Senator McCORMICK. For what?

Mr. KNOWLES. That I can not tell you. Another item of $816,333.33 was to the International Banking Corporation. Another item of $75,000 was to W. R. Grace & Co.; leaving a balance of $500,000 that was applied to the construction of the road to El Seibo.

Senator POMERENE. Now let me suggest. I have been furnished with a copy of this proclamation of June 14, 1921, and on page 5, paragraph No. 4, in the following language: "Validation of the final loan of two million dollars, which is the minimum loan required in order to complete the public works which are now in actual course of construction and which are completed during the period required for the withdrawal of the military occupation, are deemed essential to the success of the new Government of the Republic and to the well-being of the Dominican people."

Now, the completion of work, I take it, may mean the completion of the physical work; it may also include, and probably does include, the payment of all obligations which have already been incurred in that behalf. I am entirely clear about that. But whatever the facts are, the committee is anxious to have them, and I think that we can make the same suggestion regarding to this that was made with regard to the others; and if you will produce this statement which has been prepared by the witness, then each of us with an explanation that they have to make, and if each will submit a memorandum in writing to the committee, that memorandum will be incorporated in the record of the hearing.

Mr. KNOWLES. I am very glad, indeed, the Senator has read that. I had read it—that is, I have read it, but I didn't recall just what it said. But now that you have read it I can see how an inference at least was suggested to the Dominican people in believing that a reasonable construction of the language meant that there was needed the sum of two and a half million dollars, not to pay debts already incurred—

Senator POMERENE. Oh, that is an inference that may be drawn, as of those things that might have two different constructions placed upon them. All of us are interested in knowing more particularly as to whether there has been any misuse of this fund in any way. Whatever the facts are, we want to know them.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to state clearly I did not intend to impugn the propriety of the loan, but I had been any misuse of funds in regard to this particular statement.

Senator POMERENE. Very well. You are introducing that?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes. I think, Senator, then, as far as this witness is concerned, we will just file this.

Senator POMERENE. Yes.

(The statement referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

FACTS.

The national budget of the Dominican Republic, under management of the United States military government of Santo Domingo for the year 1921, was for the following:

Customs revenues.....	$3,800,000.00
Other revenues.....	3,629,800.00
Unapplied balance.....	1,400,000.00	$8,829,800.00
Less interest and sinking fund for $20,000,000 loan and 1918 bond issue of $5,000,000.....		2,000,000.00

isative administration-----	$3, 420. 00
utive administration-----	34, 240. 00
icial administration-----	627, 409. 28
artment of interior and police-----	852, 746. 00
artment of sanidad and beneficencia-----	182, 991. 15
artment of foreign affairs-----	662, 653. 21
artment of finance and commerce-----	603, 000. 00
artment of agriculture and immigration---	183, 620. 00
artment of fomento and comunicaciones---	658, 756. 00
artment of justice and public instruction--	1, 170, 264. 00
		$4, 379, 099. 64
		41, 830. 36

bove figures from the national budget for the year 1920 anticipated a t of only $41,830.36, but, in fact, the returns for said year reached far ll expectations, as will be seen from the following:

revenues (imports and exports) (see supplement No. 1) -	$6, 080, 438. 97
ndry revenues (see supplement No. 2)-----	4, 124, 310. 76
d balance-----	1, 400, 000. 00
	11, 604, 749. 73

tal revenues of the Dominican Republic, therefore, yielded a superavit ,949.73 for the year 1920. Notwithstanding the large surplus brought se favorable returns, the finances of the Dominican Republic were offl- clared, early in 1921, to have entered into a state of disastrous bank-beginning of 1921 the military government's account (on behalf of the n Republic) with the designated depositary, the International Banking on, was overdrawn in the amount of $70,451.27 (see supplement No. 3). hereafter it was found necessary to negotiate with aforesaid bank a of certificates of indebtedness aggregating the amount of $1,200,000.

other hand, the military government had a debt balance, about the e, of approximately $700,000, with Messrs. W. R. Grace & Co., of k, for supplies ordered and received by the military government.

rmore, the military government thought fit to come in aid of the n Central Railway Co. by withdrawing $85,000 from the fidelity fund, hich, by its very nature, can not be diverted to other use than that d by the law. In addition, it is well to note that the Dominican Railway, one of the sources of internal revenues, functioned outside nment control for the first time in 1920, and also that it failed to ollections effected with the national treasury since the spring of is also understood that the administration of the Dominican Central has omitted to furnish any reports regarding its operations during nt and the last part of last year.

s the above information, as an illustration of the gross mishandlings ular application of Dominican finances by the military government, ving figures are given, showing the unavowed use made of the greater e $2,500,000 external loan of 1921, issued on behalf of the Dominican against the unanimous will of the Dominican people:

cent sinking fund gold bonds, loan of.-----	$2, 500, 000. 00
	72, 500. 00
		$2, 427, 500. 00

to W. R. Grace & Co., as per instruc- f Lieut. Commander Arthur H. Mayo, administering the affairs of the depart-

f finance and commerce-----	724, 992. 76
ternational Banking Corporation-----	816, 333. 33
R. Grace & Co-----	75, 000. 00
etion of road to Cibao, as per execu- ler No. -----	500, 000. 00

2, 116, 326. 09

311, 173. 91

From the above, it will be seen that the application given to the large of this loan did not agree with the terms of the military governor's provision of June 14, 1921, wherein a justification of the loan is pointed out the necessity of obtaining funds for the continuation of public works at expense on account of shortage of money. In violation of the avowed purpose of the loan, as per the so-called Harding plan, proceeds of the loan have been dedicated largely to cover deficits previously incurred by the military government's administration instead.

POLICIA NACIONAL DOMINICANA.

The necessity for this body of national police remains yet to be justified as much as the service asked from it has at all times been very limited chiefly to the lack of confidence on the part of its American directors' arms in the hands of the Dominicans enlisted in the corps.

But if the service given by the national police guards has been scant, in turn, the cost of its maintenance has, since their establishment, been a nominal charge on the treasury. The following figures show what the company of practically decorative police has drawn on the public sources during the last four years:

Year 1917 (executive order No. 54)-----	$500,000.00
Year 1918-----	622,688.00
Year 1919-----	747,780.80
Year 1920-----	702,080.00
Until May, 1921-----	200,000.00
	<hr/> $2,772.80

The aggregate amount of nearly $3,000,000 to entertain the livelihood of almost purely ornamental police service would seem altogether disproportionate if one did not stop to consider that the existence of the national Dominican police has at least been useful as a handy pretext for large disbursements have been little, if at all, controlled. As an illustration, the following is stated:

In 19—, the fidelity fund was seized upon to cover peculations incurred by Gustav Schaidt and Frederick A. Edwards, American captains of the police guards. Checks No. 125653 for $1,089.17 and No. 125654 for $1,085.99, respectively, served to fill up the holes opened by this couple.

Again, in 19—, in a skirmish arisen at 8 p. m. in the very center of Pedro de Macoris between American marines and a certain number of members of the Dominican national police, a Syrian named Abraham Khoury was severely wounded in the left shoulder. As a result, a claim was put forward by this foreigner through the French diplomatic agent residing at Santo Domingo and subsequently a check was tendered to this gentleman, Monsieur Ponsignon Barré, No. 143962, for $1,500 as an indemnification for the same.

STATEMENT OF MR. FRANCISCO AUGUSTA CORDERO, OF ST. PEDRO DE MACORIS.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your name?

Mr. CORDERO. Francisco Augusta Cordero.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?

Mr. CORDERO. In St. Pedro de Macoris.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long have you resided there?

Mr. CORDERO. Fourteen years.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your occupation?

Mr. CORDERO. Commercial agent.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were you born?

Mr. CORDERO. In Santiago de los Caballeros.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you been in the last 14 years in Macoris all the time?

Mr. CORDERO. Yes; with the exception of a couple of occasions when I have been absent for a short time.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you state to the committee any experience you have had committed against your person since and during the military occupation?

Mr. CORDERO. In the first place I appear before this honorable committee of the Senate, appointed to investigate matters in connection with the American occupation of the Dominican Republic, in my capacity as an American my protest on account of the attempts made by the Government of States against the defenseless state of the Dominican Republic, of gentlemen who have spoken before have already testified, and to y wishes that the honorable Senators who form such commission ul note of the injustice which has been committed against the peoples in depriving them of their liberty and the exercise of their y, and desire that speedy and just reparation be made to the s. And at the same time as a subsidiary matter or incidental, to ain acts unworthy of the good name of American armies, committed vince of San Pedro de Macoris and El Seibo, of which I have knowl- ie, and I have been an eyewitness to others. ear 1917 I had occasion to go and visit a friend who was arrested on at San Pedro de Macoris and I saw in the yard of the prison two s dressed in prison uniform. As my attention was called to this I was informed by—

POMERENE. Who?

ERO. I can not give the name. An individual that was in the prison.

POMERENE. Do you know anything about these facts personally,

ERO. I am relating things that I saw.

POMERENE. No; but you are trying to relate to us something that a you.

ERO. As I was not an employee and only a visitor, I asked why duals were there in that state. I did not know at the time whether alive or dead.

McCORMICK. I am going to permit the witness to make a statement, am going to ask the chairman, who is a lawyer, to ask Mr. Knowles s sort of evidence ordinarily would be admissible. Have him make statement. What did the individual answer?

ERO. And was informed that those individuals had been riddled with he marines who had been sentries over there. I was also told that ners in the custody—four prisoners in the custody of one marine d.

McCORMICK. I want Mr. Knowles to tell the witness if that is address my remarks both to the witness and to the counsel for and to the interpreter. I have no disposition to insist on close or lmission of evidence. Mr. Knowles, who is a lawyer at the bar d States, must advise witnesses that what I have just assented to red for the record regarding the statement of some person unknown e death of prisoners at the hands of marines is not admissible in f record in the United States, and would not be admissible in any ord by any commission of inquiry having regard to the rules of the United States. If the witness's written statement contains related to him by persons unknown, with all courtesy I suggest that edit the entire statement before reading it to the committee.

POMERENE. I might say in that connection for the record—and I dress myself to the counsel—you, as a lawyer, do not claim that sations would be competent against anybody?

LES. Absolutely not, and I told the witness only to state such things of his own knowledge or had seen with his own eyes.

POMERENE. What he saw there, of course, is entirely competent.

VLES. Now, will you please tell the witness to address himself— is anything that the Senator recalls that was not in the line of imony—POMERENE. Everything that was said was perfectly competent except ese conversations relate.

LES. All right. That part we will strike out.

McCORMICK. Not because I am interested in striking out that which nitted to go in, but I am concerned that nothing more shall be introduced, or that persons unfamiliar with the rules of evidence evidence uninstructed by counsel from now on. We went through e earlier days of our investigation.

POMERENE. Let us put the shoe on the other foot. Suppose an arine were here and he had found somebody dead, and he had asked ow that man was killed, and he was to tell this committee that a had killed the man in a brutal way. We should be discredited uidence if we admitted any evidence of that kind.

Senator McCORMICK. I should hope so.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, will you tell the witness again, Mr. Interpreter, proceed with such declarations as he has witnessed or experienced himself?

Mr. CORDERO. May I be allowed to say something?

Senator McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. CORDERO. On taking my seat when I have taken oath I understand the honorable Senators who know the law know that when a man takes to speak the truth they ought to have faith to hear him.

Senator POMERENE. We will be the judges of that. Now, we are going to argue that question. When the committee say, and your own admissions, that matters of this kind are not admissible, that ought to satisfy you.

Senator JONES. We are not questioning the good faith of any statement made by the witness. We want the witness to continue his statement of which he knows of his own knowledge, and not to state what he hears from others.

Mr. CORDERO. I speak of that first, that I have seen these men in the prison yard.

Senator JONES. That is admitted. That is all right.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, Mr. Interpreter, did he see the act, or does what caused their death?

Senator JONES. Of his own knowledge.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; of your own knowledge.

Mr. CORDERO. No; I was not in a position to know it.

Senator POMERENE. Very well. Proceed to something else.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, ask him if he has any case that he wishes to state to the Senators that he personally knows of and witnessed?

Mr. CORDERO. I am going to present a case of innumerable fines imposed upon Dominican citizens.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Knowles requested the total of fines collected during the military occupation, in the military court, and the recordable. There is here and available the total fines collected in the last the expenditures of those sums. That is now having added to it a giving the totals by years instead of by months. That will be ready in minutes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Give it to me for last year or the year before.

Mr. HOWE. That will be in here in about two minutes. Now, make the statement? As to the preceding years, no figures have been sent to these headquarters, but this information asked for on Monday was immediately telegraphed for to all Provinces where these figures are, and when they are telegraphed in here for the preceding years 1919, 1918, and 1917 of 1916, they will be available, but they are not available at these headquarters and it will take some time to gather them.

Senator POMERENE. As soon as they come in will you see Mr. Knowles furnished with a statement?

Mr. HOWE. I will, sir. The other material called for was the proceedings or official account of the death of Gen. Haymon Bautista here in this file, No. 376.

Senator POMERENE. Is it your desire to incorporate it in the record?

Mr. KNOWLES. It is, Senator.

Mr. HOWE. I think that had better be kept in these headquarters. This is an original file.

Senator POMERENE. Very well—

Mr. KNOWLES. I will be personally responsible for it.

(The record is as follows:)

Mr. HOWE. Vicentico Evangelista. The official file on this can not be found in these headquarters, and there is here a statement by Col. Henry L. who was present, and was an eyewitness of the happening.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know where the file is?

Mr. HOWE. I don't know where it is. It has been taken out a number of times from the files in these headquarters, pending various investigations. At the moment it can not be found. The search, however, for it is continuing. In the meanwhile, is a statement concerning the death of this individual by—

Senator POMERENE. What was his name?

Mr. HOWE. Vicentico Evangelista.

Mr. KNOWLES. As far as the statement will go I will accept that statement referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

DEATH OF VICENTICO EVANGELISTA.

a series of operations which covered the period from February 2, 1917, Vicentico Evangelista, a Negro bandit and murderer, was located in a camp on a hill near Seibo known as the "Loma de la Vaca." He lived in his camp at 2 o'clock in the morning by Gunnery Sergt. William United States Marine Corps, and Antonio Draiby, a Syrian, who had a guide and interpreter for the detachment under Sergt. West. West through 11 outposts to get to Vicentico Evangelista's camp, and his was in constant danger at all times. The same may be said of Draiby. impersonated the undersigned by removing the chevrons from his shirt using the name of the undersigned.

When I talked with Vicentico it was stated that West would make certain concessions in return for which Vicentico would give up his arms and disband his group, which consisted of about 300 ragamuffins and fugitives from justice. An order was sent to the capital of what West had done Col. (then Lieut. George C. Thorpe, United States Marine Corps, came from Santo Domingo to assume active command of the field operations.

The next information received by the undersigned was that the man we were looking for, Vicentico Evangelista, was to be sent under guard to San Pedro de Macoris, and the undersigned was there to disarm him and have him continuing further transportation to Santo Domingo.

Vicentico arrived about 5 o'clock in the afternoon of a day in the early part of March. He was conducted to the office of the undersigned and there informed of the instructions which the undersigned had received relative to his being disarmed and confined. He reluctantly gave up his arms, which were six Smith & Wesson revolvers, caliber .44, one caliber .44 Winchester repeating rifle, a machete, and a smaller pocket pistol.

Vicentico was placed in irons and sent for confinement to the camp, then on what is known as "Punta," in the general vicinity of the present marine camp at San Pedro de Macoris.

The undersigned was instructed to report the arrival of this man to the command and this was done. At the same time a request was made for transportation to be sent to Macoris to take him to Santo Domingo. By the time he had been confined at the camp it was rumored that many of his friends were making an attempt to rescue him during the night. It was also reported that an concerted attempt would be made to start disorder so that only a few men would be in the camp.

The undersigned was in command of the eastern district at the time and lived in a building about 200 yards from the part of the guardhouse in which the prisoner was confined. This was the old clothing room. His father-in-law and his second son had been confined with him and they were all to be sent to the capital of Santo Domingo at 2 o'clock in the morning, when it was expected one of the small gasoline boats used by the brigade for coastal transportation would arrive.

The undersigned, without withdrawing any of the troops from camp, made a series of inspections of the city from dark to 1 in the morning and had no communication with the camp and gone to bed after making sure that the prisoners were all there and that the officer of the day understood his orders about sending them under a picked guard to Santo Domingo as soon as the Guardia small gasoline boat arrived. He also (the undersigned) left word with the corporal of the guard and with the lookout at the customs lookout to call him as soon as the boat from Santo Domingo city was sighted.

At 2 in the morning the corporal of the guard sent the musician of the band to notify me that the boat had been seen and was coming unusually close to the north shore of the little bay on which the camp was located.

When dressing to go to the dock to meet this boat, the undersigned heard the corporal of the guard and the officer of the day both call at practically the same time, "Halt!" "Halt!" Then an appreciable interval when "Halt!" was called by one voice, but farther away than at first, as though the person calling was quite a distance before calling "Halt!" the third time.

The command to halt was followed almost immediately by three shots in succession; one of these three had a very different sound and I knew at the time what it was. I went over to the guardhouse and met the officer of the day, Capt. Hoyt; the corporal of the guard, Corpl. Worsham; the sergeant of the guard, Sergt. Young, coming back from the direction of the water-closet, and as I approached I asked what had been the cause of the shooting. They informed me that Vicentico had made an attempt to escape from the water-closet when he was taken there prior to going on the boat which was to take him to the capital.

The water-closet was close to the bank of the bay, and when the prisoner was awakened to get ready for the trip to Santo Domingo he asked to be taken to the water-closet. This closet was a building about 50 feet long and divided into two rows of seats back to back in it with doors at each end. Two doors opened towards the sea and two opened toward the land side. The sergeant, the guard and the corporal of the guard had taken the prisoner to the water-closet of this building, which was not lighted, and he went in the door on the west corner. He stayed a reasonable time and did not return. It was moonlight, and when the corporal entered to see where he was he had a glimpse of the prisoner running out the door on the southeast corner.

He called "Halt!" and almost immediately the officer of the day called the same; then the sergeant ran after the prisoner, who was headed towards the bay, with the evident intention of jumping into it. The third order to halt was given by Corpl. Worsham, who was in the water-closet at the time, fired from that place at the fleeing prisoner. It was this half-inch bullet which had sounded so differently. When I arrived the guard had turned around and was bringing in the body. I sent at once for the surgeon, Dr. H. United States Navy, and he examined the body and pronounced life extinct.

There was one bullet wound of entry just at the junction of the neck and head, one through the right shoulder, and one in the small of the back. The wound in the neck had broken the neck and the others had penetrated organs any one of which the surgeon said would have produced death.

I immediately sent a radio to the capital reporting the circumstances. I also immediately ordered a board of investigation, of which Dr. Ransom was a member, to meet the next day and make a full and complete investigation of the circumstances.

This board met and submitted its report to the commanding general.

The date was between the 3d and the 7th of June, 1917. I can not be more exact, as I do not remember.

The small boat which had been sighted was not the boat from the bay, though it came from that direction, and it was so very close to shore that it is my personal opinion, but one which I can not in any way prove, that the boat had been sent to permit Vicentico to escape by jumping into the bay. This boat picked him up and conveying him to the eastern end of the bay.

Vicentico had, in the month of February, I think, but I am not sure, been to the month, personally captured and killed two American civil engineers, a man named Hawkins and a man named Miller, who were employed on the La Romana sugar estate. These men had never been connected in any way with the military government, were in pursuit of their occupation as engineers, and their murder was particularly brutal. Both were tied to palm trees and one made to watch the other being cut to pieces with machettes. The bodies were both eaten by wild hogs as high as the hogs could reach when Vicentico had Howkins's watch in his pocket when I disarmed him and took Miller's spectacles.

I was informed by my interpreter in Macoris that the civil authorities had indictments against Vicentico for 48 murders which he had committed with his own hand, and there were several which had never been reported in addition to the above murders. I know of four others of natives murdered by him because of their friendliness to the military government.

HENRY C. F.

Mr. HOWE. And Capt. Knox. Here is the file of investigation concerning the death of Capt. Knox.

Senator POMERENE. Who was Capt. Knox?

Mr. HOWE. Capt. Knox was a sergeant in the marines and a captain in the guardia, who was ambushed and killed in the eastern part of the country.

Senator POMERENE. Do you desire to introduce that into the record?

Mr. KNOWLES. I have not seen the record yet, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Will you take care of that and return it to the committee?

Mr. KNOWLES. I will.

Senator POMERENE. Have you gone over it?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

POMERENE. It may be that the committee will desire to introduce records. Whatever light it sheds upon the situation that is what we NOWLES. Either way, yes.

OWE. I might be permitted to continue as to the other material asked POMERENE. Yes, you might just as well do it now.

OWE. The third item was the permission to—

NOWLES. That is unimportant, because I have seen the man. They let me to see him.

OWE. You have seen Armando Cabral?

NOWLES. Yes.

POMERENE. Then you care nothing about that?

NOWLES. Yes.

OWE. And the fourth item, the report of the committee on claims and that of the uncompleted program of public works.

NOWLES. Senator Jones found those in the book I wanted.

OWE. So that has been complied with.

POMERENE. So you will cut everything out except that one statement?

NOWLES. Yes; I guess that is here now.

POMERENE. Now, let me ask for the information of the committee: statement as furnished, does it give the statement of fines assessed or collected?

OWE. Under LAKE. Fines collected.

OWE. There is, however, in this statement an item showing the remission of certain fines which have actually been collected.

POMERENE. What do you mean by that?

OWE. Having been collected, they were paid back.

NOWLES. That, of course, makes it complete, if it includes that.

POMERENE. We want it complete.

OWE. This, however, does not purport to be a report on fines for any period of June 30, 1920.

POMERENE. But as to the other fines, you are getting that?

OWE. They have been radioed for.

NOWLES. And up until when?

OWE. Up until December 13 of this year.

NOWLES. This is for the entire Republic or just this—

OWE. For the entire Republic.

POMERENE. That is for the period indicated?

NOWLES. What do you mean, Mr. Howe, then, when you said that there is no data that were not available?

POMERENE. For previous years.

OWE. For previous years. As I stated, for the years 1917, 1918, and NOWLES. So this is complete for the Republic for that year?

OWE. Yes.

NOWLES. Now, the witness can proceed.

DERO. I believed that the honoral senatorial commission had come to the Dominican Republic with the intention of hearing the testimony of men who always lived an honest life and who were astonished at the acts that had taken place in this Dominican territory by the forces of the Marine Corps, the official investigation of every act that has been perpetrated on the island, but I never thought that they come to Santo Domingo to pass facts that are as clear as light of the sun.

POMERENE. What does he mean by that?

JONES. He means to lecture the committee.

MCCORMICK. Ask him what he means by that.

DERO. The facts that I was about to relate—

POMERENE. Let me say your own attorney has admitted that what you are giving us was not competent, and we are going to accept the judgment of our attorney. Now, if you are not going to be courteous to this committee, will excuse you.

DERO. I am going to confine myself to facts.

POMERENE. Very well. We shall be glad to hear them.

NOWLES. Now, Mr. Senator, he has what I wish he had presented first—his personal experience that he will present to the committee.

Mr. CORDERO. I was arrested on the 20th day of August, 1918, and after a charge was brought against me on which I was arrested—of being a traitor to the Dominican Republic, although the Dominican Republic was at war with any nation, that being the only case in which I could be considered a traitor against my country. And I was accused of conspiracy on the testimony of some perverse person who was willing to state that I was against the Dominican Government. Four months after I was sentenced to 25 years hard labor I was deprived of my liberty, sweeping the streets of San Pedro de Macoris and working as a scullion in the military camp of San Pedro de Macoris for eight months. At the end of that time I was set at liberty, with the statement that I had not committed the acts of which I had been accused.

Senator JONES. Is that statement in writing?

Mr. KNOWLES. It is signed by the admiral.

Senator POMERENE. Have the statement incorporated in the record.

Senator MCCORMICK. It is a case of alleged conspiracy with an alien.

Senator POMERENE. Do you offer this in evidence?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. I notice there are some comments made in script. Is that? Such parts as relate to what he has been telling us may be admitted. (The document referred to will be filed with the clerk to the committee)

Subject: Charges and specifications, case of Francisco A. Cordero.

1. The above-named men will be tried before the military commission, of which you are judge advocate, on the following charges and specifications. The President of the commission accordingly, inform the accused of the charges set for his trial, and summon all witnesses, both for the prosecution and for the defense:

Charge I: Treason.

Ningun credito merecen repetidas veces se manifiesta de palabras amigo de un pueblo y se convierte en su opresor y elemento de exterminio. Lo que hasta ahora se ha realizado, por esos hombres que se llamen amigos y protectores de Santo Domingo ha sido asesinar a varios contonares de dominicanos, atropellar cobardes, sin derecho el que recibe el insulto a devolverlo, elegir para gobernadores publicos a hombres de reconocido immoralidad, a los mismos que han llevado al pais en el caos en que hasta ayer se mantuvo—sembrar en el alma de los dominicanos la division fermentando en lugar de contribuir a calmar las pasiones politicas. Esa es hasta hoy la obra de los norteamericanos en este desgraciado pais, al que han venido a titulo de amigos."

Which words, phrases, and figures, translated to English, materially as follows:

The Dominican Republic has succumbed under the points of the bayonets of the United States Army precisely at the same time when that country claims that, to defend the liberty of the world and the rights of the weak and independence that other peoples have even the weakest, she was engaged in the European war. History records many cases in which brute force has imposed over justice without more satisfaction than that right is respected by the strongest, but there has never been consigned to it a case like the present, where, while they proclaim an ideal, while they profess of liberty, while they pretend to render culture to morals and to civilization, they suppress a people, they murder her inhabitants, they bribe her opinion, and they plant in the land, which until yesterday was standard of shameful slavery. Germany, for example, found here the necessity of violating Belgium, but they had the valor to declare publicly that "necessity knows no law," and they did not lie and render paper hypocrisy. The United States has used her forces to abuse the face of the world and while she thus proceeded she speaks of liberty and she presents to the face of the world a most hypocritical version regarding her relations with the weak peoples of Spanish America. For Germany she has before the Dominican national conscience the extenuation that she has the force to subdue a weak country, but she did not say that she thus proceeded to guarantee the liberty of the world but to guarantee her own security. The United States there does not exist on the part of the Dominicans except hatred, eternal damnation of a country which groans under of slavery imposed by another country which practices the old maxim says, "While praying to God, keep mixing the dough." There has been published in one of the dailies of the city of New York an item relating to an interview that took place between one of the reporters of the above newspaper and the governor of Puerto Rico, in which this functionary of the Washington Government declares that the United States will never leave Santo Domingo. This version is nothing new for those who, like us, have the conviction that all that has been done or said by the North American Government in Santo Domingo does not disclose anything but a fund of malice and of harm which speaks very clearly for her intentions regarding this country. Notwithstanding that now they have published in the Liberator of Santo Domingo, a memorandum in which the Military Governor declares false the declarations of the New York paper and the governor of Puerto Rico did not make any declaration that regarding this country, no Dominican can have faith in what Americans say. By the means of trickery, they inaugurated their entrance. No credit is due to those who repeatedly manifest by friendly words to a people and by converted themselves into oppressors and elements of extermination which up to the present has been realized by these men who are called friends and protectors of this country has been to assassinate several Dominicans and cowardly abuse others, without the right to return to those who receive them, and to elect for public office men of no morality, the same that have brought the country into chaos, in what until yesterday, maintained—plant in the spirits of the Dominicans is fomented in place of contributing to calm the political passions. To-day is the work of the North Americans in this unfortunate country which they have come under the title of friend.

statements are wholly false and intended to deceive, and the said statements, by means of such words, phrases, and figures, attempt to pervert the Dominican people. and he did, during the months of February, April, May, June, July, and August, 1918, by means of such propaganda enemies of the military Government of the United States in Santo Domingo to recruit their forces.

tion 3.—In that Francisco A. Cordero, an inhabitant of the Dominican Republic, did, on or about December 1. 1916, while the Dominican Republic was under the administration and protection of the military Government of the United States in the Dominican Republic, write and publish a letter at San Pedro de Macoris, Dominican Republic, in words, phrases, and figures as

O VASQUES,

Santo Domingo.

. HORACIO: Your interesting letter of 14 November was duly reconsidering the present commentaries of the people in their opinion itings they passed without notice. Deeds have demonstrated with rapidity that my forecasts were not far from true. In view of the ice that has fallen upon us, and in respect to what may be hidden in us in the future, I wish to ask you: Do you think that we Dominicans beat the conduct of that celebrated Moorish king "Boadil"? What e that you in these circumstances would counsel your friends and take? I wish to hear your words in these moments in which the on behalf of the pride and impotence in order to know if we must lamentations and cries of the women, or the dignified gestures of a knowing his weakness, prefers to succumb defending his honor to bonds of slavery. I consider that this is not the moment to vacillate, that they may say that we are dignified and proud of our liberties; e only deserve the depreciation and eternal malediction. Awniting ain always your loving friend,

FRANCISCO A. CORDERO.

RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS OF A MILITARY COMMISSION CONVENED AT THE BARRACKS, SAN PEDRO DE MACORIS, DOMINICAN REPUBLIC, BY ORDER OF THE BRIGADE COMMANDER, SECOND PROVISIONAL BRIGADE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

GOBIERNO MILITAR DE SANTO DOMINGO.
SANTO DOMINGO, R. D., Abril 1919.

Asunto: Mitigación de la sentencia de Francisco A. Cordero.

Referencia: (a) Comisión Militar—caso de Francisco A. Cordero, ex convicto de la República Dominicana, juzgado el 16 de Julio de 1918.

1. Como resultado de una reconsideración del caso de Francisco A. Cordero, un habitante de la República Dominicana, la cual fue hecha por resolución expresa del Señor B. H. Fuller, Brigadier General U. S. M. C., en la creencia que esta clemencia recibirá el debido reconocimiento, la Corte queda mitigada como sigue:

2. Se ordena que el dicho Sr. Francisco A. Cordero sea puesto bajo la supervigilancia de las Fuerzas Militares de tal manera que el Jefe de la Brigada o su sucesor. La sentencia quedará suspendida por el término de dos años desde esta fecha y, entonces será remitida, si la conducta del Sr. Cordero durante ese período haya sido a la satisfacción del Gobierno.

THOMAS SNOWDEN,

Rear Admiral, United States Navy,
Head of United States Military Government in the Dominican Republic.

Certificado: B. H. Fuller, Brig. Gen. U. S. M. C.

LES. This witness desires to make a brief statement in regard to the fines, and then he will leave the stand.

Q. I wish to add the document which refers to the fines imposed on the Province of Cegandors. These fines and other fines like this have been collected in the Provinces of Macoris and Seibo, and this money has never been turned over to the public treasury.

A. How do you know that?

Q. I know, because I have read the reports that are published, and I see those in the itemized reports of fines reported.

A. Let him give a statement of the cases in which fines were collected and not paid over to the public treasury.

Q. What court was it that sentenced this witness? Does it appear

LES. The military court, he said, that was composed of seven

STATEMENT OF DR. ALEJANDRO CORADIN, OF HATO MAJOR.

A. Here is what purports to be a letter addressed to the United States Senate in charge of the investigation of Dominican affairs, and the original is in Spanish and duly signed, as I understand it, here is what purports to be an English translation. If I have correctly translated the contents this offer is in the record.

Q. Yes; for the convenience of the committee I had a translation

A. Well, you know it to be a correct translation. Let it be placed in the record.

Q. (The document will be filed with the clerk to the committee.)

Q. What is your name?

A. Dr. Alejandro Coradin.

Q. Where were you born?

A. In the Province of Samana.

Q. Where do you live now?

A. Hato Major.

Q. Have you lived continuously in the country?

A. Yes; always.

Q. Now, you have some matter that you desire to declare to the committee? It is a matter that comes within your personal knowledge please

A. Yes. You address him as doctor. Is he a physician?

Q. No. He is a doctor of law.

A. Before starting, I wish the commission to know that it is not my intention of relating these facts to ask that the methods employed be changed in the forces in the country. What the Dominican people want is the freedom and simple, of their independence. In virtue of same and I have heard the president of the commission state that it is not agreeable to hear matters relating to officers mentioned, but on this occasion I mention him in connection with the facts that I am about to relate to the

A. Let me say there has been no statement of that kind at all. He is going into a subject which he saw.

A. But "It is not agreeable to us to hear statements regarding officers." No such statement has been made and no thought of that kind of the commission. What we want is to confine the witnesses to the matter whom they hit.

CORMICK. Or whether they are agreeable or disagreeable.

Q. On the 22d of June, 1917, I saw an old man dragged, tied to the back of a mule—an old man by the name of Jose Maria Rincon—by an officer by the name of Gonzalez.

A. An officer of what? Of the marines?

Q. He was dressed in marine uniform.

A. Where was this?

Q. In Hato Major.

A. When was it?

Q. The 22d of June, 1917.

Senator POMERENE. What was his rank?

Dr. CORADIN. A lieutenant.

Senator POMERENE. Was he an American or a Dominican?

Dr. CORADIN. He was not a Dominican. This man was tortured in such manner because he carried a prescription to a drug store in which sulphur and lard were mentioned. This was for some skin disease, and the doctors of the forces stated that it was for dressing wounds, and that was sufficient reason to have what I have just stated done to him. After that he was shot, and in being shot he was hung from a tree.

Senator McCORMICK. Did you see him shot?

Dr. CORADIN. I saw it, and I saw him hanging from a tree.

Senator POMERENE. Who else was present at the time?

Dr. CORADIN. That happened in the plaza.

Senator POMERENE. From whom did you get this information about the prescription?

Dr. CORADIN. I am a doctor.

Senator POMERENE. No; from whom did he get the information? He said that it was sold to him; that he got this prescription, and for this reason it was done.

Senator McCORMICK. Who told him that Rincon was subject to torture? He killed because he carried that prescription?

Dr. CORADIN. I heard the medical officers state that that salve was for dressing wounds.

Senator McCORMICK. Can you name any of those officers? It would be an inquiry.

Dr. CORADIN. No, sir. Perez was the man who committed the act.

Senator McCORMICK. Was Perez also present at the hanging?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes; Perez was mounted on horseback.

Senator POMERENE. Can you name any other witnesses who saw this? Who know about it?

Dr. CORADIN. These men were present [indicating two men standing in the room].

Senator POMERENE. Ask each his name.

Mr. SUAREZ. Emilio Suarez, Hato Major.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Jesus Maria Vasquez, Hato Major.

Senator POMERENE. Proceed.

Dr. CORADIN. On the 24th of August, 1918, Cipriano Alarcon was killed. Capt. Charles Merckle. All that I state here I saw. Mr. Alarcon was seen at his door; and Capt. Merckle and Maj. Taylor, under the orders of Col. [unclear] had concentrated all the peasants in town. There were about 2,000 persons in the public square, when a shout was heard, and Mr. Alarcon, who was under the influence of liquor, appeared to have made some remarks that offended Capt. Merckle, and it appeared to me, as a serious man, that whatever the reason may have been, it was not sufficient reason for taking his life.

Mr. HOWE. Where was this occurrence?

Dr. CORADIN. In Hato Major. Capt. Merckle took him by the left arm and took him to a corner of the house, drew his revolver, and shot him in the head. I saw this, because I live in front of the house. The captain sent for the chief of police and me in order that I might render my services as a doctor in the case, to which I replied that I could not, as the man was in a dying condition. More than three or four hundred of the same kind of cases happened in the community; but as I did not see them, I do not wish to have any discussion regarding them, as my predecessor had. Before closing—

Mr. HOWE (interposing). May I ask a question here that would be very useful? Was Capt. Merckle in Hato Major or on duty in or about Hato Major beyond June 22, 1917, at the time when Rincon was killed?

Dr. CORADIN. No. Before closing, I wish to present the commission of the victims of the water torture committed by Capt. Merckle. If the commission wants to examine him, they can do so.

Senator POMERENE. What is this man's name?

Dr. CORADIN. Pedro Hernandez Rivera.

Senator POMERENE. Where does he live?

Dr. CORADIN. Hato Major.

Senator POMERENE. And when did this occur? Let him sit down, if the matter has anything further.

Dr. CORADIN. At this time I do not know whether the military government had ordered concentration of the wretched inhabitants of the community.

major who had been locked up like pigs in stockades under the pretext of investigating whether or not they were bad persons, a procedure which we consider puerile. This is psychological. When an individual is taken from the street to the light suddenly a certain impression is formed owing to the effect on the optic nerve of the light. These individuals are inclosed in the stockades. They are taken to a room where there is a marine with a flashlight, and soon as they come out the flashlight is put on them, and the individual is examined, and for that sole fact I considered it bad. I can present a picture of a concentration camp [handing a picture in], which is similar to the camps in Cuba. Some individuals who can pay have been fined.

Senator McCORMICK. Is there not a hiatus there?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I think there is, Senator.

Senator McCORMICK. His last sentence referred to the military camp. The sentence which I heard from the lips of the interpreter was that some individuals who can pay had been fined, and therefore not put in the camp.

Senator ARADIN. No. As soon as they pay they have been released. Until they pay they are kept confined.

MENT OF MR. PEDRO HERNANDEZ RIVERA, OF HATO MAJOR.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your name?

Mr. RIVERA. Pedro Hernandez Rivera.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

Mr. RIVERA. In the rural districts of Utujado, Porto Rico.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long have you been in this country?

Mr. RIVERA. About 14 years.

Mr. KNOWLES. And where have you resided since you have been in this country?

Mr. RIVERA. In Hato Major.

Mr. KNOWLES. Continuously?

Mr. RIVERA. I was in Santiago de los Caballeros for about four or five years.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you resided in that city during the military occupation?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did anything occur to you during the occupation?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you please tell the committee exactly all that happened during that incident?

Senator McCORMICK. First, Mr. Interpreter, as nearly as may be, the time and the place.

Mr. RIVERA. The 14th of April, 1918.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where?

Mr. RIVERA. At Hato Major.

Mr. KNOWLES. Proceed.

Mr. RIVERA. I was taken prisoner by the forces of occupation under the command of Capt. Merckle, who was in charge of that district. A rope was round my neck, my hands tied, and I was taken to the country about 4 kilometers from town, on foot, and had to keep up with a horse trotting.

Senator McCORMICK. Let me ask. Who tied your hands and who led you by the horse?

Mr. RIVERA. Capt. Merckle and some other marines.

Senator POMERENE. Did you know them or know their names?

Mr. RIVERA. No.

Senator POMERENE. Were they Americans or were they Dominicans?

Mr. RIVERA. Americans.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Knowles, it is not customary for one witness to speak from behind.

Mr. RIVERA. And when in the country I was tied by the feet, placed on my hands with my face to the sun, and with a funnel water was poured into my mouth from a demijohn. I was in that state for about three or four days.

Mr. KNOWLES. You mean in that position?

Mr. RIVERA. No. I only mean I was kept tied for about four or five days, at night I slept with my hands and feet tied in the open air with a sentry near me, and near to a huge bonfire which had been built. That is all. About three or four days after I was released as there was nothing against me.

Senator McCORMICK. There was no charge made against you?

Mr. RIVERA. I was confounded or mistaken for a man by the name of P-Rivera.

Senator MCCORMICK. Were you cross-examined during this period?

Mr. RIVERA. I was asked how much ammunition I had sent to the m-the hills. That was all the questions asked. They did not allow me to ask

Senator MCCORMICK. Is that all, Mr. Knowles?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; I wish to ask a question.

In whose hand was the rope that was tied around your neck?

Mr. RIVERA. A marine on horseback, but Capt. Merckle was there.

Senator POMERENE. You know the names of any of those marines?

Mr. RIVERA. No.

Senator POMERENE. Have you seen any of them since?

Mr. RIVERA. I may have seen them but I could not identify them.

Senator POMERENE. You would not be able to recognize any of them if you were to see them?

Mr. RIVERA. I could identify the sergeant who went to my place to take prisoner. His name is Mario.

Senator POMERENE. Was he an American or a Dominican?

Mr. RIVERA. An American.

Senator POMERENE. Have you seen the captain since then?

Mr. RIVERA. I saw him after that; that is about three or four years ago.

Senator POMERENE. Now let's be a little more specific, upon another point.
Can you tell us where this place was to which you were taken?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Was it near their camp, or where?

Mr. RIVERA. They had a camp there.

Senator POMERENE. That is where this treatment was given to you?

Mr. RIVERA. Where they took me they had a camp about 4 or 5 kilometers from town.

Senator POMERENE. I think that is all.

Mr. KNOWLES. You were arrested and tied in the city, Mr. Rivera?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes; on the street.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many marines and officers were in the group that you to this place?

Mr. RIVERA. About 10 or 12.

Senator JONES. Did they take any other prisoners at the same time?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes.

Senator JONES. How many?

Mr. RIVERA. Two more.

Senator JONES. Who were they?

Mr. RIVERA. Agapito Jose and Pedro Rivera and Jesus Reyes. Two taken with me and one brought up in the night.

Mr. KNOWLES. Besides how many American officers or marines were in group of 12 along with Capt. Merckle?

Mr. RIVERA. Ten or twelve took us out in the country, and there may been about 20 in the camp.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were they all Americans, officers and marines?

Mr. RIVERA. The only officer I recognized was Capt. Merckle. I saw sergeants and corporals. I had no time to notice their rank.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were they Americans or Dominicans?

Mr. RIVERA. Americans.

Senator JONES. All of the marines were Americans?

Mr. RIVERA. Americans.

Senator MCCORMICK. Let me state to the distinguished counsel, Mr. Knowles, that during the brief recess we sought to lay our hands on the formal charges against Capt. Merckle and papers relating to his suicide when officers were sent to arrest him. We have not been able to lay our hands on those papers, but, of course, as soon as we can find them they will be ready for the and at his disposal. I do not need to say to Mr. Knowles that the members the committee speak with restraint when they say that they are ashamed regret that such incidents should have taken place under the direction officer of the American forces here or anywhere. Pending the arrival of papers I publicly want to note that the commander of the American forces jealous for their honor, caused charges to be filed and ordered the arrest Capt. Merckle.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman and Senators, I am glad that the honorable chairman makes this statement, voicing, I am sure, the sentiments of is Government and fellow Senators but of every American citizen, and I t to say, as I expected to say, that I did not intend to present this testimony in the form of charges against either the officers and men who committed actions or the other officers that were here at that time, or against the rican Government, but merely for the purpose that the committee might rstand that certain reasons and causes—it matters not who committed —produced a mental effect upon these people that made them resentful rd us. I hope I make myself clear in my purpose in that statement. It to explain more why these people feel as they do, rather than to make ges against those who actually committed the acts. And, furthermore, e we perhaps shall close in a moment, I wish to say somewhat in explan of my position that I consider my first duty in this investigation to aid ll fair and honorable means this committee to get at the truth of all of the committed, impressions formed among these people, with the hope that ay lead to an early solution and ending of the differences that now exist een them.

Then you were taken to the police—

Senator MCCORMICK. This relates to another witness, but perhaps as it is mind we had better clear it up now. The witness who is on the stand testify- with regard to finances was to have furnished a copy of the protest which and others signed against the holding of the election. I have here from the of the military governor a copy of that protest, and assuming that it is a —and I have no doubt about it—I will offer this to be incorporated in record now.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, I would say, Senator, I have also a printed copy that y my possession that is signed.

Senator MCCORMICK. So that it gets in the record, and the stenographer will r that in mind. It is a typewritten copy. Let me suggest that it be in- orated, and if you will examine the Spanish copy and you find that it is entirely accurate—

Mr. KNOWLES. Oh, I have no doubt it is correct, Senator, but in case you dd like to have the two I will also give the Spanish copy.

The documents referred to are here printed in full, as follows:)

Protest raised by the Antielection League of the Santo Domingo Province against the order of convocation promulgated on July 14, 1921, by the United States of America in the subjugated territory of the Dominican Republic.]

Whereas the Antielection League of the Santo Domingo Province is composed f Dominican citizens who are determined not to submit to the criminal rute force being employed here by the United States of America, which in 916 sent to the Dominican Republic a pirate expedition that, under the com- and of the already celebrated filibuster, Caperton, landed on the sacred soil f the Dominican Republic, took possession thereof, and still retains same erely by virtue of their machine guns and bayonets. They commit mur- er, burn, and concentrate the poor peasants of entire regions, depriving hem of their lands and water for the benefit of despicable Yankee corpora- ions; they weigh the people down with burdensome taxes, squander and rob he public funds to the extent of bringing the country to bankruptcy, sup- press public instruction throughout the land, and, lastly, commit all kinds of unjust abuses before the eyes of the world, which witnesses such acts in consternation;

Whereas the United States of America is haunted by the incessant and increas- ing clamor of protest from Spain, Latin-America, and England, and, goaded by its insane desire to possess the treasures of the Dominican soil, as well as Dominican funds and police, on the 14th of June last it issued a proclama- tion in which it hypocritically expressed a desire to withdraw from Santo Domingo, and ordered the Dominican people to hold an election to the end that sovereignty might be placed in the hands of the United States;

Whereas from among the people the Antielection League has been formed to oppose the holding of the elections ordered by the Americans, undaunted by the apparent complicity of the three party leaders, who, when requested by the head of the military occupation to lend him their aid, contrary to the will of the people, expressed their willingness to vest him with the powers of constitutional President, and, if the United States deemed it necessary, to form a treaty with that country;

Whereas entirely ignoring the unanimous protest of the Dominican people, the United States of America persists in holding elections, and after promulgating an election law, also promulgated, on the 14th instant, an order of convocation for the primary assemblies to meet on the 13th of August next; Whereas the only object pursued by the Antielection League is simply to prevent the Dominican people of the Santo Domingo Province to abstain entirely from taking part in said elections; now, therefore,

The Antielection League of the Santo Domingo Province—

1. Protests against the order of convocation published by Rear Admiral Robison on the 14th instant.

2. Exhorts all citizens to ignore said order of convocation and to completely abstain from choosing electors or other public officials, or from being chosen such. And it is further declared that—

(a) No citizen should vote, even though his party leader advises him to do so, for parties owe their existence to the will of the people rather than that of party leaders, and the people have publicly declared themselves opposed to any election ordered and arranged by the United States.

(b) No member of a political party should accept any appointment as member of an election board, nor form local party committees, nor take as such member of an election board, nor take his place as such member on the day set by the order of convocation.

(c) No Dominican should as a member of the superior advisory boards of parties inform any foreign official, who represents the executive power in accordance with the election law, as to any special insignia used as a distinctive mark on ballots; nor deliver any quantity of ballots to the municipal secretaries, nor, finally, comply with any of the provisions of the superior advisory boards of parties, whether they appear in the so-called election law or not.

3. It also exhorts the municipal governments, aldermen, sindicos, secretaries and municipal employees not to obey said order of convocation and to abstain entirely from complying with the so-called election law contained in executive order No. 646. And it also declares as follows:

(a) That the municipalities should pay no attention to the American officer who by force usurps the functions of the secretary of the interior, police, and should throw into the wastebasket the order for the formation of electoral precincts; and, consequently, they should form no precinct in a commune nor erect guardrails, nor place ballot boxes, nor construct booths, nor post maps or plans of the precincts.

(b) Municipal chairmen should appoint no aldermen, and the latter should accept no such appointments to form part of an election board, nor to administer oath to the chairman of such board, and not notice any communication from party leaders.

(c) Municipalities should refuse to allow polling places to be established in their respective communes on the 13th of August next. The municipal chairmen should cast into the wastebasket the lists furnished to them by the foreign official who would be dubbed the secretary of the interior and police, and the municipal secretaries should accept no ballots nor give receipts therefor. They should the municipal chairmen see to it that such ballots are furnished, either in large or small quantities, to polling places; nor should such polling places be supplied with either a large or small ballot box, either covered or uncovered, nor should any voting certificate sent be received.

(d) Municipalities should also fail to secure places for the electoral colleges to meet in.

(e) All officials and magistrates as are mentioned in the null and void law, published with the absurd title of executive order No. 646, should also regard that which is so abusively decreed therein by foreign authorities as absolute defiance of the right and dignity of the Dominican Republic.

(Signatures follow.)

SANTO DOMINGO, R. D., July 18, 1921.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you please describe again exactly what happened when you arrived at the destination of the officers and marines who were taking?

Mr. RIVERA. About an hour after I arrived I was placed on my back, my face to the sun, and was kept there for about two hours while water was poured through a funnel at intervals, and when I refused to open my eyes they forced it open with a stick.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were you fastened to a stake or tied to anything?

Mr. RIVERA. Yes. [Indicating with his arms out at right angles and his hands separated.]

Mr. KNOWLES. And each hand and foot bound to a stake?

r. RIVERA. Yes.

Senator McCORMICK. Lying on his back?

r. RIVERA. Lying on my back.

r. KNOWLES. How many men were present when the funnel was put in your mouth?

r. RIVERA. Americans?

r. KNOWLES. Yes.

r. RIVERA. About eight Americans. My feet and arms were held by Americans. My head was held by an American. I still have a scar (pointing to his temple). I did not feel it at the time.

r. KNOWLES. Who was it, if you could see, that poured the water in the mouth that entered your body?

r. RIVERA. A marine. I did not know him. He kept it over my mouth.

r. KNOWLES. How long did they continue to pour this water?

r. RIVERA. Two minutes. They poured water in the funnel until I became unconscious. Then some minutes they poured again after I revived.

r. KNOWLES. How many times was that repeated?

r. RIVERA. I believe it was about three times.

r. KNOWLES. Why did they stop?

r. RIVERA. I don't know, because I suppose they did not wish to give me more.

Senator McCORMICK. Now, let me ask a question. He said, if I remember, there were two other companions taken at the time. Were they similarly treated?

r. KNOWLES. Yes, Senator; we have some here.

Senator McCORMICK. Does he know that fact? If so, let him testify.

r. KNOWLES. Were there any others that were taken to the camp or to that place that same day and treated in the same way as you were treated?

r. RIVERA. Yes.

r. KNOWLES. What happened to these men?

r. RIVERA. They threw water in the same way as I have stated.

r. KNOWLES. With what result?

r. RIVERA. I don't know, because I was taken about 20 or 30 meters away. I heard the movements.

r. KNOWLES. Do you know whether serious injury resulted to either of them?

r. RIVERA. I think they were injured.

Senator McCORMICK. Well, they are here, so they will testify.

r. KNOWLES. How long did they keep you at the stake there after they were shed?

r. RIVERA. I was tied by a rope around my neck to the trunk of a tree. At night I slept in the same state, with my right hand loose and the other hand tied.

Senator McCORMICK. It is needless to say that the other members of this committee share in the expressions of regret which was given by the chairman of the committee. Now, we will adjourn until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Whereupon the committee adjourned until 9 o'clock a. m., December 14, 1911.)

INQUIRY INTO OCCUPATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

DECEMBER 14, 1921.

UNITED STATES SENATE.
SELECT COMMITTEE ON HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.
Santo Domingo City.

The committee met pursuant to adjournment.

Present: Senators Jones and Pomerene. Messrs. Howe, Knowles, and Angell.
Senator Pomerene presiding.

Senator POMERENE. Let me say, while the matter is in my mind, if I can, for the record, that the committee, as stated by the chairman yesterday, was very much distressed to hear about these cruelties which were perpetrated upon some of the Dominicans. The stay of the committee here is necessarily very short, because we are obliged to return to Washington. However, if any of the people of the Dominican Republic have any charges or evidence with regard to other cruelties which may have been perpetrated by the occupational forces, if they will present these charges and proofs to the governor of the Republic or send them to the committee at Washington, they will be examined to the very best of our ability. Neither the Government at Washington nor the occupying forces here will tolerate anything akin to cruelty when the fact becomes known.

Now, Mr. Knowles, I am going to suggest to you, out of deference to your own physical condition, that you keep your seat and do not overexert yourself, and if at any time you feel that you would like to have the committee suspend its hearing for a little while we shall be very glad to do it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Thank you, Senator. On Monday, Senators, I think it was, asked for permission to visit one of the prisoners in the city here, which I did, and interviewed him at some length. I would like very much to obtain for verification and as soon as possible the record of his case, Armando Cabral.

Senator POMERENE. Will you furnish the name to the stenographer, and, Commander, will you get that report if you can? And can you give the date of the court-martial proceedings?

Mr. KNOWLES. It has been very recent, within the last 30 days or 6 weeks.

Senator POMERENE. And where was the court-martial held?

Mr. KNOWLES. I think at Macoris; but at any rate, they have the record here with the prisoner, who is here in the fort.

Senator POMERENE. They would have the commitment, but whether they would have a record of it here, I am not prepared to say. I don't know.

Mr. KNOWLES. Another statement, Senator, we would like to have from the records of the military government, and that is the total amount that has been spent for medicinal supplies.

Mr. HOWE. Within what periods of time, Mr. Knowles? From the beginning of the occupation on?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; from the beginning of the occupation.

Senator POMERENE. I can anticipate it might take a little time to prepare that.

Mr. KNOWLES. As to the amount for all the medical supplies.

Mr. HOWE. Do you mean medical supplies for every marine and every sailor, or do you mean those which were supplied and charged to the funds of the Dominican Government?

Mr. KNOWLES. That is what I mean; yes. That was for the marines and on the ships—

Mr. HOWE. That would be charged to the United States Treasury, but you are interested in the amount charged to the Dominican funds.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is right.

Senator POMERENE. Do you desire simply a lump sum?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; that would be sufficient, but with particular reference to the vaccine points. If they could give me that vaccine points item first, the rest can come later.

Senator POMERENE. Very well. That will be furnished.

STATEMENT OF DR. ALEJANDRO CORADIN—Resumed.

Mr. KNOWLES. Dr. Coradin I failed yesterday to get some details relative to certain descriptions you made relative to the man in Hato Major named Jose Maria Rincon. I wish you to speak to the commission something particular about this man, who he was, how long he had lived in Hato Major, and the esteem with which he was held by the people.

Senator POMERENE. Is that the man who was shot?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; he was shot and dragged at the tail of a horse.

Dr. CORADIN. Jose Maria Rincon was a man 80 years old, generally esteemed due to his conduct as a good man. As stated yesterday, he was taken prisoner in the drug store in town by Mr. Perez, who was operating with the forces of the occupation.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you mean operating or in charge of?

Dr. CORADIN. He was the lieutenant. There were other officers of high rank whom I did not know. Under the imputation or accusation that the medicine which had been prescribed for healing some skin disease was for dressing the wounds of the men in rebellion in the hills, of course—I add to-day to what I stated yesterday that this man was tied.

Mr. KNOWLES. I want to get this clear as to this point. You mean to say that the medicine that was found in his possession was intended to dress the wounds of his compatriots who were outside of the city and who may have been wounded in contact with the marines?

Dr. CORADIN. That was an accusation made by the forces of the occupation because the medicine was not intended for dressing the wounds of those men.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is that?

Dr. CORADIN. I state to-day and stated yesterday that the medicine was for healing a skin disease, and that the marines stated that it was for dressing wounds. That is what I said.

Senator POMERENE. Can you give the names of those marines who stated that?

Dr. CORADIN. I have said more than once that I don't know the marines. I know Mr. Perez.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask a question. How long had you known this man Perez?

Dr. CORADIN. At that time.

Senator POMERENE. Only at that time?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Are you certain about his name? Do you know his first name?

Dr. CORADIN. No.

Senator POMERENE. Are you sure he was a marine, or did he belong to La Guardia?

Dr. CORADIN. He was a marine. He was with the marines and dressed like a marine.

Senator POMERENE. Explain to the witness that I am asking these questions so that we shall be able to identify this man. I am advised that there was a man by that name in the Marine Corps.

Dr. CORADIN. I have sworn.

Senator POMERENE. Well, I know, but you may be mistaken about the name or other people who informed you may be mistaken about the name. We want to identify him, and if we can find out who he is he will be prosecuted. That is all there is to it.

Mr. KNOWLES. Senator, may we ask how he found out the name?

Senator POMERENE. Yes. Now, maybe he can help. We want all the information which will lead to the identification of that man.

Mr. KNOWLES. I see what it is, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Will you suspend a minute. I have some little information that may help to clear this thing up. Was there a military police force there at this place at that time?

Dr. CORADIN. Here is the chief of police. [Indicating a man in the room.]

Senator POMERENE. What is his name?

Mr. CORADIN. Jesus Vasquez.

Senator POMERENE. I have just been informed that this man Perez was a member of the police force of San Pedro de Macoris, and was not a member of the Guardia or the marines. Now, any information that they can get which will enable us to—I wish you would explain to him what I have said.

Mr. KNOWLES. I will.

Senator POMERENE. Any information they can get which will help to identify the man we would like to have.

Mr. KNOWLES. It seems, according to certain information furnished at this moment to the commission, that a man by the name of Perez was connected with the police service of Macoris, and it was that man, according to the information the Senators have received, that was the man—

Mr. HOWE. Oh, no; that was not the information that was received.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Howe says he can make a brief statement that will carry that up. Let us have that.

Mr. HOWE. According to the information received by the committee from the military authorities there was at that time a man named Perez who was one of the policemen on the police force of San Pedro de Macoris. Some time ago the military authorities were informed by one, Mr. Caceras and by Archbishop Noel concerning the incident of the dragging of an old man through the streets at the tail of a horse. In connection with that information the date was not furnished, the name of the old man was not furnished, the name of the person accused of dragging him through these streets was not furnished. The only particular that was given was that the incident happened at Hato Major.

The time thorough investigation was made and the two informants were questioned for further particulars, which were not forthcoming, therefore the authorities were unable to find out whether or not such an incident had taken place. They were unable to find out who was responsible for it. Now, for the first time, as I understand it, is anyone in authority able to go on definite information and make an investigation of this matter. But it would be premature at this time to say that the Senate committee has received information about the man Perez, who was on the police force, was, in fact, the man who executed that Rincon be dragged through the streets or executed. But with this information now at hand and any further information which we may get from the witness, further investigation will be made and the results incorporated in the record.

Mr. CORADIN. The data just given is connected with a celebrated letter of Archbishop Noel to Mr. Russell, of which the American Senate has knowledge. I understand that this is a disagreeable matter for the honorable Senate commission, because had I been an American citizen I would feel ashamed of all those acts that have happened at Hato Major.

Senator POMERENE. All we ask is that you give us the information to help us identify this man, and it will be taken care of.

Mr. CORADIN. With regard to the fact that this man was a member of the police force of Macoris, I can not affirm that, but even if it was so, and even if Perez was a Chinaman, he was acting under the orders of the American forces.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who told you that the name of this man who was in charge of that force there, or that operation, was Perez?

Mr. CORADIN. I knew Perez in the drug store where old man Rincon had taken his prescription.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did this man that was in the drug store say that his name was Perez, or had you heard previous to this time that his name was Perez?

Mr. CORADIN. He stated that his name was Perez.

Senator POMERENE. That is, Perez himself?

Mr. KNOWLES. Perez himself stated that.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Knowles, if you have any uncertainty about the identification, tell him to describe the man, whether he was a large man or a small man. His general appearance.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now, will you please describe, as near as you can, the appearance of the man, his approximate weight and height, whether he was a tall man or short man, a heavy man or a light man.

Mr. CORADIN. He was a tall man, and weighed about 160 pounds.

Senator JONES. What was his age?

Mr. CORADIN. A young man, somewhere between 35 and 40 years old.

Senator POMERENE. Dark or light?

Dr. CORADIN. White.

Senator POMERENE. Do you remember the color of his hair, or anything of that kind?

Dr. CORADIN. Brown hair.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have we sufficient on that point?

Senator POMERENE. Anything that you can get. You have conferred with him, and anything you can get to help identify that man we shall welcome.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you describe a little more particularly, if you can, the kind of uniform he had on?

Dr. CORADIN. A marine uniform.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he the man, Peralez, who was in charge of that detachment or body of men that operated in the city at that time?

Dr. CORADIN. No; as I stated yesterday, there were officers of higher rank.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were they present during all of the happenings that you have described?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes; there was a doctor, a captain, and another captain.

Senator JONES. Two captains?

Dr. CORADIN. Two captains and Lieutenant Peralez.

Senator JONES. Oh, Peralez was a lieutenant?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was Rincon a strong man?

Dr. CORADIN. A man of 80 years old can not be a strong man.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he taken out of the drug store?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. And immediately the rope passed around him?

Dr. CORADIN. No; he was taken to the camp and then brought back to town.

Mr. KNOWLES. How far was the camp?

Dr. CORADIN. About 200 or 300 meters.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was the rope fastened to him in the camp?

Dr. CORADIN. I suppose so, because I remained in the drug store. When I came out I saw him being dragged through the streets.

Mr. KNOWLES. How soon after he was taken from the drug store did you see him dragged by the tail of the horse?

Dr. CORADIN. About 15 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Can you say whether or not any trial of any kind or charges were made before anybody against the man?

Dr. CORADIN. I suppose accusations were made.

Mr. KNOWLES. When do you suppose they were made?

Dr. CORADIN. I suppose they were made the same day.

Mr. KNOWLES. Between the time he was arrested and the time he was dragged by the horse?

Dr. CORADIN. I can not assure you that, because I was with Rincon in the drug store. I don't know what happened on the street.

Mr. KNOWLES. Well, it was 15 minutes, so there could not be much done. In what manner and in what part of the city was he dragged?

Dr. CORADIN. I can not state in what part. I state through the streets of the town.

Mr. KNOWLES. In the presence of many or few people?

Dr. CORADIN. Of the whole town.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long a time, if you know, was he dragged about before the man who dragged him stopped?

Dr. CORADIN. The town is small, and you can go around it in 15 or 20 minutes on horseback.

Senator POMERENE. Let him tell there the population of the town.

Dr. CORADIN. About 500.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask just a couple of questions there, if it is not interrupting you. I think you gave on yesterday, but I have forgotten, the date.

Dr. CORADIN. The 17th of February, 1917. I am not stating as to the exact date.

Senator POMERENE. Are you certain as to the year?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. The month? February?

Senator POMERENE. Now, another matter. Did you make complaints to any of the authorities? And if so, to whom did you make complaint?

Dr. CORADIN. No; at that time I would have wished God to deliver me from doing such a thing.

tor POMERENE. Have you made any complaints since then or made any of this to any of the officers, either Dominican officers or American?

CORADIN. This is the first time.

KNOWLES. When they stopped where did they stop dragging him? At what point in the city?

CORADIN. Northwest part of the town.

KNOWLES. But in the city?

CORADIN. In the town.

tor JONES. What became of his body?

KNOWLES. State to the Senators exactly what happened when they were there with the man, and the condition in which he was.

CORADIN. It is easy to suppose the condition in which that old man must have been after having been dragged by the tail of a horse at full speed in the town. When Peralez stopped with him I can state that he was KNOWLES. And then what happened?

CORADIN. And then Peralez shot him. And then with the same rope he took him and hung him from the branch of a tree.

KNOWLES. Was that in the presence of all the other marines?

CORADIN. A short distance from the camp.

KNOWLES. In sight of the incident?

CORADIN. Yes.

tor POMERENE. What became of the body?

CORADIN. It was buried.

KNOWLES. Where?

CORADIN. It was buried about 2 kilometers from the town. I suppose, among the marines.

tor POMERENE. Can you locate the grave?

KNOWLES. Or tell us how we can locate it?

CORADIN. Should the commission wish to visit Hato Mayor I could point out the man's grave.

tor POMERENE. Well, the commission can not, but this will be investigated and we are asking so that you could take any officer who wishes to go to the grave. They may want to do it.

tor JONES. In what direction from that town was the body buried?

CORADIN. In the northern direction.

tor JONES. Was his body buried in the public cemetery?

CORADIN. No.

tor JONES. Buried by the side of the road?

CORADIN. Yes.

tor JONES. How far from the road is the grave?

CORADIN. About 10 or 12 meters from the road. Near to Hato Mayor is a plain, and he was buried on the plain.

tor JONES. Is there anything there to mark the grave?

CORADIN. I don't know.

tor JONES. Have you personally seen the grave?

CORADIN. No.

tor JONES. Then you are not personally able to point out the grave?

CORADIN. But I can find some one who can point it out.

tor JONES. Who told you where it was?

CORADIN. There are no skyscrapers in Hato Mayor. There are small houses, so a man can easily see in the distance.

tor JONES. That does not answer my question. I asked who told you where that grave was located?

CORADIN. I saw from a distance when he was killed and the body was taken some distance from there and buried.

tor JONES. Oh, you saw it buried?

CORADIN. I saw when they were burying the body.

tor JONES. Didn't you state just a while ago that you had not seen that?

CORADIN. I stated a while ago that I had not seen the grave, but I can find persons who can tell you, who can take anyone to the spot.

tor JONES. I asked you to state who told you where the grave was located.

CORADIN. I saw when they were burying old man Rinson on the northern side of the town from a distance.

Senator JONES. How near the town was the grave? Was it the same town? Were you remaining in the same town where he was killed at the time he was buried?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. And that is about 2 kilometers away?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Could you see that distance of 2 kilometers?

Dr. CORADIN. Right outside of town there was a plain, and it is about 5 kilometers across, and a man from one side could easily see a man on the other side.

Senator JONES. Are there trees on the other side of the plain?

Dr. CORADIN. Hills.

Senator JONES. Was he buried near those hills?

Dr. CORADIN. No. About half way between the town and the hills.

Senator JONES. And he is buried where he was killed?

Dr. CORADIN. No. I stated a while ago that he was not buried at the spot. A little farther away.

Senator JONES. How much farther away?

Dr. CORADIN. About 500 feet.

Senator JONES. Then he was killed about 500 feet from where he was buried?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Was he carried out on that plain where you could see him?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. Where was the tree, then, to which he was hanged?

Dr. CORADIN. On the plain there; there is a tall tree which is on a small hill. Perhaps that is the only tree on the plain, so that you could see from town where he had been done to him.

Senator JONES. What kind of a tree is that?

Dr. CORADIN. I don't know.

Senator JONES. Is that tree there yet?

Dr. CORADIN. Yes.

Senator JONES. And he was buried about 500 meters from that tree?

Dr. CORADIN. More or less about.

Senator JONES. In what direction from that tree is he buried?

Dr. CORADIN. To the north.

Senator JONES. And near to a road leading north from that tree?

Dr. CORADIN. There are many roads on the plain.

Senator JONES. Have you ever been to that grave?

Dr. CORADIN. No.

Senator POMERENE. I want to make a statement to you. If you do not hear of any other evidence which would help the authorities to locate the man or identify this man Peralez, whom you charge with this offense, the committee will be obliged to you if you will immediately give that information to the governor or other members of his staff.

Dr. CORADIN. All right.

STATEMENT OF MR. LUIS BAUTISTA, OF HATO MAYOR.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your name?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Luis Bautista.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

Mr. BAUTISTA. In the city of Santo Domingo.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you lived continuously in this country since then?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes. I have left the city for a short time.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside at present?

Mr. BAUTISTA. In the town of Hato Mayor.

Mr. KNOWLES. I understand that you can give some information to the committee.

Senator POMERENE. Before you go to that find out what his employment is, whether or not he is in any way engaged with La Guardia, or anything of that kind.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your present occupation?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I was released from prison 15 days ago, and I have tried to set my property in order, which was burned by the forces of the occupation.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long were you in prison?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Ten months and 11 days.

Mr. KNOWLES. For what were you in prison?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I am going to state briefly—

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you in prison?

Mr. BAUTISTA. In the prison at San Pedro de Macoris.

Mr. KNOWLES. How far from that is the town in which you reside?

Mr. BAUTISTA. About 38 kilometers.

Mr. KNOWLES. Now proceed with the description as to the cause of your imprisonment.

Mr. BAUTISTA. On the night of the 26th of December, 1920, a group of marines of the forces of occupation burned my property. Those properties were composed of a house in which I was doing business and the house in which I resided. On the same date, the 26th of December, I was not present, but the man in charge of the establishment was there.

Senator POMERENE. Where were you?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I was in the town of Hato Mayor. The governor opened an investigation in connection with the burning of my properties, and after studying the case and finding it necessary to take the matter up with the high governmental functionaries I came into the city for that purpose. On arriving here—

Senator POMERENE. When did you arrive here?

Mr. BAUTISTA. On the 30th of December, 1920; several newspaper reporters asked me to give them the date for publication, in spite of the fact that I had made a brief statement which I sent to the Liston Diario to have it published in the columns of that paper. On my arrival here I asked some confidential friends to introduce me to the military governor, which I succeeded in having them do. When it appears that the publication of that data was prejudicial to my cause, because after having visited the military governor and having put off my case for later on it happened that on my return to San Pedro de Macoris I was imprisoned. The marines who burned were sentenced to suffer imprisonment. After having been sentenced I was accused by the same marines in their condition as prisoners of having sold liquor on the morning of the 28th. After that I was brought to trial. You may judge of my surprise when the same marines who had burned my house had contributed to rob me of the only thing that remained with which to attend to my family, and that was my liberty. That court—

Senator POMERENE. What court?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The court of San Pedro de Macoris; that court in all its severity—

Senator JONES. Was it a military court?

Mr. BAUTISTA. A military court—sentenced me to pay the sum of $3,000 United States currency, under pretext of having violated the Executive order relating to same.

Mr. KNOWLES. What do you mean by "the same"?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The sale of liquor. In spite of having proved to the court that I had not sold any liquor on that day. At that time Rear Admiral Snowden was relieved by Rear Admiral S. S. Robison. In sending my deposition to Gov. Robison demanding justice, which I considered I should have, the only answer I got was that my request had been denied.

I now invite the honorable Senate commission of the United States if they consider it just, after they are in the United States, to reconsider my case, in order that they may find out exactly the defense which I presented during the seven days through which my case lasted, in which I proved to the military court that I had not sold liquor to the marines.

Senator JONES. You were seven days in the trial of the case?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes; the case lasted seven days. That same night the same marines burned four other commercial establishments in the same town. Only one family house was burned by the marines, which shows that the marines attacked the commercial establishments only because they refused to sell them liquor.

Senator JONES. Did the commercial houses have the liquor?

Mr. BAUTISTA. On Christmas eve I had taken about $3,000 worth of liquor to my establishment.

Senator JONES. For what purpose did you take it there?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Because it is the custom to celebrate Christmas.

Senator JONES. Do you usually spend $3,000 for liquor for the purpose of celebrating Christmas?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Not only for Christmas celebration, but for sale in general.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was your business that of a merchant in liquor?

Mr. BAUTISTA. General provisions, dry goods, provisions, etc.

Senator POMERENE. A general store?

Mr. BAUTISTA. A general store.

Mr. KNOWLES. You have a license or permission to conduct such a store?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was anyone injured at the time of the burning of these houses?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No; but the marines that night after setting fire to the houses prevented anyone extinguishing the fire; the 16 who took part in that witness fired shots until the house was burned to prevent anyone extinguishing the fire.

Before closing, I request the honorable Senate commission to guarantee for myself but for my companions who have come in to declare, because remember that my complaint to the military governor was the cause of imprisonment; and I don't wish, after having left prison recently, to be imprisoned again for the statement which I have just made.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does the Senator understand?

Senator JONES. Assure him he will not be.

The INTERPRETER. He thanks you.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish that that observation might imply to others who were before the commission. One or two have hesitated because they feared consequences. I told them if they would come there would be the best protection they could have against any recourse against them after their testimony.

Senator POMERENE. We assume that any witness who is presented before this committee comes to tell the truth, and the committee will see that they are protected. I am quite sure that none of the military officers, either here on this island or in Washington, and representing the American people, have any intention whatsoever of interfering with or trying to intimidate any witness who comes before it. What we want is to know the truth; and, in the language of the oath which was administered, we want not only the truth, but the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and any witness thus testifying will be protected to the utmost of the power of the Government of the United States and of the military authorities.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you state any other events or happenings?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Anything that is in my knowledge I am ready to state.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you know, of your own knowledge, of any other attacks which occurred in your city?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The crime committed on the person of Cipriano Alarcón.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is he present here?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No; he died. He was killed.

Senator POMERENE. Is that the old man?

Mr. KNOWLES. No; another man, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Let him give all the details of the crime.

Mr. KNOWLES. State who this man was, the date of the incident you are about to relate to the commission, and all of the things, and nothing but the things actually witnessed yourself.

Mr. BAUTISTA. Mr. Cipriano Alarcón was the man who lived by his work; after noon on which the offense took place the people were summoned by Mr. Merckle for a meeting. After the people were gathered there—

Senator POMERENE. How do you fix the date of that meeting?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The 24th of August, 1918. He addressed them in the following manner: "I have gathered you together to tell you that I intend in the most efficacious manner to have you tell me the persons who are accomplices of bandits in this town." The majority of the people replied that "If it is true there are bandits in the community of Hato Mayor we, the men who devote our time to work only, could not select the bandits, because we have proved to the officers of the occupation once again that we, the inhabitants of Hato Mayor have used every effort to prevent there being malefactors around the town." After this speech he himself separated a group of citizens—

Senator POMERENE. That is, the captain?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Capt. Merckle, which he asked: "Are you a bandit?" and replied, "I have my home and family here. How could I be a bandit?" and in that state of things he made use of his revolver and fired two shots in the air. Of course, the people were scared at what happened before—

Mr. KNOWLES. What do you mean by that?

Senator POMERENE. He means the speech, I suppose.

Mr. KNOWLES. What do you mean by that?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The outrages and killings. Some ran away. Then, as a result the shot fired there was some wounded—

Mr. KNOWLES. Fired by whom?

Mr. BAUTISTA. By Capt. Merckle. Later on he went to the house of Cipriano Alarcon, and when about 3 meters from the house—he was standing in front his house—

Senator POMERENE. That is, he means by "he" the witness?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Cipriano Alarcon was standing in front of his house. Capt. Merckle asked—

Senator POMERENE. Did you hear this yourself?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes; I was standing a short distance away.

Mr. KNOWLES. In reply to the question of Capt. Merckle, "What are you doing re?" his answer was what?

Mr. BAUTISTA. "I am standing at the door of my house." Then he drew his revolver and fired a shot at him, which shot caused his death. About five minutes after Dr. Coradin was called in my presence by Capt. Merckle. He told him, "Can you do anything for this man?" Dr. Coradin replied, "I can do nothing for him, because he is dying." That is all I know.

Senator POMERENE. You heard afterwards, did you not, that the military governor issued papers for the arrest of Capt. Merckle, and that he committed suicide?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I did not only hear that, but Col. Thorpe, in prison, told me so.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was Capt. Merckle alone or were there other men—marines or soldiers—with him?

Mr. BAUTISTA. A group of marines were behind him.

Mr. KNOWLES. How near to him during all these incidents?

Mr. BAUTISTA. About 8 or 10 paces.

Senator POMERENE. How many marines?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I can not state.

Senator POMERENE. About how many?

Mr. BAUTISTA. About six or eight.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were any of them in uniform of officers?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No, sir; Capt. Merckle was the only officer.

Mr. KNOWLES. Of your own knowledge do you know whether any of the liquor was in these houses—

Senator POMERENE. Will you pardon me just to make this remark. Do you know any of these marines who were with Capt. Merckle?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I might know them by sight. I don't really know.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you know of your own knowledge whether or not the marines, on the occasion of the burning of those houses on Christmas Eve, took any of the liquor that was in yours or the other houses?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I am going to state something in connection with that. On leaving my house the marines went to the employees of the commercial establishments, requesting them to sell them liquor.

Senator POMERENE. Let me suggest this: That won't help us very much.

Mr. KNOWLES. I know. I have not the slightest idea of what answer he is going to give to my questions.

Senator POMERENE. But he leaves us all in the dark about the matter unless we can get the particulars.

Mr. KNOWLES. Suppose we get that in now. What is the name of the business man that they went to?

Senator POMERENE. Did the witness go with the marines to that man? Was he present when the conversation occurred?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No, sir. I got to know this through the investigation opened up by the Government after this thing had happened.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were you present at the hearings when the investigation was made?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Is what you are saying now the sworn testimony you heard in that court?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. I presume that testimony is all available, is it not?

Mr. KNOWLES. I suppose so, Senator.

Senator POMERENE. Then I don't believe I would take up time.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think it would be well for us to ask for the record of that case that he refers to.

Senator POMERENE. Give a memorandum of it, and we will try to get it.
Mr. KNOWLES. Will you tell us where and about when that trial took place?
The INTERPRETER. He does not understand.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; he does. He says on the 27th they opened an investigation. How soon after the firing of the houses, about, did the investigation take place?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Twenty-four hours after.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where was the investigation held?

Mr. BAUTISTA. In the camp, which is about 500 meters from town.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were you present at the hearing?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who presided at that investigation?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I don't know his name.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he an officer of the marines?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. One or more—was there one or more that sat in court?

Mr. BAUTISTA. The major in charge of the forces there. The officer in charge of the detachment in Guajabo Dulce, that burned the houses. There were five officers.

Mr. KNOWLES. I think I will identify it, Senator, as about the end of 1920 or 25th of December, 1920.

Do you know anything of your own knowledge in respect to the taking of liquor from either your own house or other houses that were burned on that occasion?

Mr. BAUTISTA. They took liquor from all of these places.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did they take it from your place?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Yes; from my place and from other places, too.

Mr. KNOWLES. How much from your place did they take, more or less, in quantity and value?

Mr. BAUTISTA. It is very difficult to state. What they couldn't drink broke.

Senator POMERENE. They did not carry any away?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I can not state.

Mr. KNOWLES. I wish to say, merely for the purpose of letting the court have an idea as to the credibility and proof of this testimony, that I have been informed that 16 courts-martial, or perhaps more, were held immediately after this incident as the result of this investigation.

Senator POMERENE. And after he made complaint?

Mr. KNOWLES. I don't know whether it was after or not.

Senator POMERENE. The commander advises me that he made the statement that the investigation began 24 hours after he had made complaint.

Mr. KNOWLES. What was the sentence imposed upon you when you were arrested after having given the information to the newspapers there?

Mr. BAUTISTA. To pay a fine of $3,000, which was later on reduced to $500.

Mr. KNOWLES. Any imprisonment?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No; but as I had not the wherewithal to pay I remained 11 months and 11 days in prison, because all that I had was destroyed in the burning.

Mr. KNOWLES. How were you able at last to get the $500 to secure your release?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I proposed to the court, based on the promises made to me, that they take over my losses, which amounted to $700. They refused to release me, because I was a young man and could work again. That proposal was not accepted.

Mr. KNOWLES. And, then, how at last did you give the $500?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I didn't get it, and remained 11 months in prison, working hard labor, with commutation at $2 a day.

Mr. KNOWLES. And it was with that hard labor that you were able to secure your release?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I was released after having finished my sentence.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many marines were present at the burning of your other houses?

Mr. BAUTISTA. There were about 30 marines in camp, and these were present at the incident—and my employee pointed out or selected those who went to oblige him to sell them liquor, and as they could not get him to sell them, they went in and took all they wanted.

Mr. KNOWLES. In what manner did they set fire to the houses?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I can not state, but, as I was told by my employee, they set fire to a little hillock and opened a box of petroleum and set it on fire.

and they used an axe to break open the doors and set fire, and they acted the same way at other places.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was there any act of rebellion of any kind, or resistance of any kind, made by the people of the town when that was done?

Mr. BAUTISTA. No, no, no. There was no encounter at all. Only the thirst for liquor.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask a question to clear up a matter that is in my mind: Was this burning before or after you and your employee had refused to sell liquor to the marines?

Mr. BAUTISTA. After.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Knowles, in view of the statement that was made a little while ago, I am now advised that there were 24 courts-martial coming out of this incident of which you speak; there were 13 convictions and 9 acquittals, and 2 are not yet tried, and the sentences run as high as one five years' imprisonment.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you not, for the benefit of the commission, who is trying to give enlightenment to the people on all these matters, make that statement so these people may know?

Senator POMERENE. Just repeat that statement, so that they may understand.

Mr. KNOWLES. And where are those men who were sentenced to imprisonment? Please let the people know they are actually in prison.

Senator POMERENE. I am advised that these marines who were sentenced were transported to the United States and are now serving time in the penitentiary in the United States. Capt. Howe furnishes me here with a memorandum showing in detail the disposition of each of these cases, and I will incorporate it at its point for the record.

Mr. HOWE. I produce the record in that case for the committee, with, however, a remark that final action on this case has not yet been taken by the military governor, who is considering it.

Senator POMERENE. With that understanding, do you desire it in the record?

Mr. HOWE. I will make the suggestion that as these papers are needed by the military governor for the consideration of this case they be admitted in such form that they be immediately available for the military governor.

Senator JONES. Moreover, I suggest the impropriety of going into a case which is under consideration by the military authorities.

Senator POMERENE. There may be truth in that; but I think so far as the record has been made that Mr. Knowles has the right to investigate that. I suggest, however, that it be not formally introduced in the record, and that you can look it over at your leisure. We will not stop now, but you can look over it at your leisure, and if there are any special matters in it that you wish to all to the attention of the committee, the committee will be very glad to hear that, unless there is some special objection that I know nothing about.

Mr. KNOWLES. There were two arrests. This, I presume, is the latter one in his case, and this young man was arrested twice for the same offense; that I wish him personally to state to the committee.

Senator JONES. I think that would be highly improper, Mr. Knowles, to bring up here at this time any case which is under consideration by the military authorities. After a case is disposed of, if counsel sees anything wrong about it will be glad to consider it then.

Mr. KNOWLES. But as to the case that was disposed of and he was sentenced and imprisoned and served his time?

Senator JONES. That is all right.

Senator POMERENE. There is no objection to that, I presume.

Mr. HOWE. If this record does not disclose those facts, if Mr. Knowles will furnish the committee with the approximate date of the earlier conviction—it was a conviction was it not, and was not an arrest; it was more than an arrest?

Mr. BAUTISTA. I only know that the man told me that he was imprisoned. Whether there was any conviction or not, I don't know; any trial or not, I don't know.

Mr. KNOWLES. About when?

Mr. BAUTISTA. Some time during the present year, and so I simply let the young man state under oath when he was arrested; for what, so far as he knows; that he was arrested; and how long he was in prison. I don't know, as I said—

Senator POMERENE. Well, counsel, of course, will understand me when I say, in regard to a matter of this kind, he may have honestly had the idea that he was arrested for one thing and, in fact, been arrested for another. And, of course, whatever the record is that is the best evidence, and if you will look into a little further there will be no trouble.

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; if it shows it was all the same case, then we will bring it to the committee.

Senator POMERENE. I suggest that you defer that.

Mr. KNOWLES. I have asked Mr. Angell to examine the record.

Senator POMERENE. Very well, we will get along with that all right.

Mr. KNOWLES. The witness wishes to say one word or two more. I think will be wiser to let him say it.

Mr. BAUTISTA. My aspiration is not for the Senators to try and repair material damages, but as every young man needs only liberty and action to prosper I at this time join my weighty protest against the intervention, with the hope that the honorable commission of the United States will be successful in the projects formed for the speedy restoration of our sovereignty. That is all.

Senator POMERENE. Mr. Knowles, I think we will recess for five minutes. (A recess of five minutes was here taken.)

STATEMENT OF MR. JESUS M. VASQUEZ.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your name?

Mr. JESUS VASQUEZ. Jesus M. Vasquez.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Hato Major.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In the town of Los Llanos.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where is that place located in respect to your present residence?

Mr. VASQUEZ. It is in the Province of Macoris.

Mr. KNOWLES. How far from Hato Major?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 18 leagues.

Mr. KNOWLES. Have you always resided in the Province of Macoris?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long have you resided there prior to the present time?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 20 years.

Mr. KNOWLES. Continuously up to the present date?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No.

Mr. KNOWLES. How far back from the present date have you resided there?

Mr. VASQUEZ. My residence is in Hato Major.

Mr. KNOWLES. You mean in Hato Major?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Thirteen years.

Mr. KNOWLES. What is your occupation?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Silversmith.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did you ever occupy any official position in your town?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Chief of municipal police.

Mr. KNOWLES. When and for what period?

Mr. VASQUEZ. From the year 1915 to the year 1919.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you please state to the committee any incidents which you have personally witnessed and which have not been reported to you?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I am going to disclose here as to what I saw personally in connection with the crime on Agapito Jose, a merchant in Hato Major.

Senator POMERENE. That is his home city?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes. On the 14th of April, 1918, Capt. Merckle and four marines came out and took Agapito Jose prisoner. After having taken him prisoner they took him out of town tied. Three days after they returned to town with him.

Senator POMERENE. Does he mean by "they" this same captain and four marines?

Mr. VASQUEZ. The captain and eight marines. They went to the camp about 20 minutes past eight that night, a group of six marines went out with him Maj. Taylor and Capt. Merckle armed with carbines and rifles, and at about 50 meters from the camp in the center of the town a volley was fired at Agapito Jose who was killed instantly. Then Maj. Taylor took a dagger and driving it into his throat slashed him down to the abdomen, from the neck to the abdomen. Maj. Taylor called me immediately to take away the body, and I and two policemen took it and went to bury it wrapped in a blanket. He told me that he had killed that man.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who told you?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Maj. Taylor told me that he had killed that man because he was a bandit.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who was this man?

Mr. VASQUEZ. A Syrian.

Mr. KNOWLES. A business man in the town?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long had he resided there?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Thirteen or fourteen years.

Mr. KNOWLES. What was the opinion of the people of the town about him?

Mr. VASQUEZ. That he was a good man, a hard working man.

Mr. KNOWLES. As chief of the police, do you know whether he was ever guilty of any offenses against his neighbors?

Mr. VASQUEZ. None.

Mr. KNOWLES. Did he ever of your knowledge, or was any charge ever made to you as chief of police, that he had ever committed any act against any of the marines, and especially Maj. Taylor?

Mr. VASQUEZ. to my knowledge none.

Mr. KNOWLES. Can you tell us of any other incidents?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Only that.

Senator POMERENE. Let me ask you. You said the first day that Capt. Merckle and these marines took this man.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Was Maj. Taylor with them when they took him out?

Mr. VASQUEZ. When they fired the volley at him Maj. Taylor was there, but when they took him prisoner Maj. Taylor was not there.

Senator POMERENE. This you say occurred April 14, 1918? You were chief of police at that time?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Did you make any report of this killing to the Dominican authorities or to any of the military authorities on the Island?

Mr. VASQUEZ. None.

Senator POMERENE. Have you made no report at any time.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Only now.

Senator POMERENE. Can you give the names of any other witnesses to this killing?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes; Regla Moto.

Senator POMERENE. Where does he live?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In Hato Major.

Senator POMERENE. Does he live there now?

Mr. VASQUEZ. He is at present in Consuelo. That is a sugar plantation.

Senator POMERENE. Now, give the names of any other witnesses and where they can be found.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Felipe Meris Pacheco. He was in Hato Major. I don't know if he is still there.

Senator POMERENE. Any other men or women?

Mr. VASQUEZ. We were the only persons at that time. We, the policemen, because we were ordered to do so.

Senator JONES. What were the names of the other policemen?

Mr. VASQUEZ. The two just mentioned.

Senator POMERENE. Did you see this firing that killed this old man?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Did you hear the order given to fire?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I didn't hear the order.

Senator POMERENE. You know who gave the order?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I don't know which of the two officers did.

Senator POMERENE. Are you sure that it was Maj. Taylor who told you to take this man and bury him, and not Capt. Merckle?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Maj. Taylor.

Senator POMERENE. I desire to say that I am informed that this is the first information that the military authorities have had connecting Maj. Taylor with this offense, and as I understand it, this is the first knowledge that the authorities have had of the killing of the man, and it will be most vigorously investigated.

Senator JONES. Where did you bury this man?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In the cemetery at Hato Mayor.

Senator JONES. Who was present at the time he was buried?

Mr. VASQUEZ. The two policemen.

Senator JONES. Did he have a family in town?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No; he had a nephew out of town.

Senator JONES. In what part of the town did the shooting occur—were the shots fired that killed Jose?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In the middle of the town, on a street called Mercedes.

Senator JONES. Were there houses all along that street?

Mr. VASQUEZ. There are several.

Senator JONES. Were there people living in them at the time?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. Did they all see the shots fired?

Mr. VASQUEZ. The houses were all closed, because the people were all asleep.

Senator JONES. Did they put Jose up by the side of a house and fire at him? Were several shots fired at him?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In the middle of the street.

Senator JONES. And how many shots were fired?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I saw six rifles.

Senator JONES. Do you think that all of those six rifles were fired?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I don't know. I heard the volley. I was behind.

Senator JONES. You could not see it then?

Mr. VASQUEZ. See what?

Senator JONES. See the shots fired.

Senator POMERENE. The flash.

Mr. VASQUEZ. The night was very dark.

Senator POMERENE. How far away were you?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 5 or 6 meters.

Senator JONES. Well, if you were only 5 or 6 meters away you would know whether all of those guns were fired or not, couldn't you?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No. I only heard the volley. I can not state whether all fired.

Senator JONES. Were there several fired?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. Was Maj. Taylor there at that time?

Mr. VASQUEZ. He was at the head.

Senator JONES. And you were standing 5 or 6 meters away?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. And Maj. Taylor then turned to you and told you to bury the body, did he?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes; immediately.

Senator JONES. Did you go up to where the body was and where Maj. Taylor was, or did Maj. Taylor go to where you were?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I went up to them.

Senator JONES. How far was Jose from those men who fired the shots at the time the shots were fired?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 3 or 4 meters at the most.

Senator JONES. Did Jose have a rope around him at that time?

Mr. VASQUEZ. None. He was loose.

Senator JONES. In what way was he brought up to that point?

Mr. VASQUEZ. They told him to keep on and they followed him.

Senator JONES. As they came into town Jose was in front of these men?

Mr. VASQUEZ. They left their camp in Father Pena's house in which Company 52 was quartered.

Senator JONES. How far is that away from the place where this man Jose was shot?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 15 meters.

Senator JONES. Just near by?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Very near.

Senator JONES. Was this company of marines quartered right there in the town?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Right in the town in Father Pena's house.

Senator JONES. Where were you when they left Father Pena's house with Jose?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I was at one corner of the camp.

Senator JONES. These other two policemen were there with you?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes; they were with me that night.

Senator JONES. And they saw them bring Jose out of Father Pena's house to the street?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. Who is Father Pena? Where does he live now?

Mr. VASQUEZ. He is the priest of that town. He lives in Hato Major.

Senator JONES. Where was he that night?

Mr. VASQUEZ. He was in El Selbo.

Senator JONES. What time of the night was this—did this killing of Jose. . .

Mr. VASQUEZ. Twenty minutes past 8.

Senator JONES. And it was a very dark night?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Pretty dark.

Senator JONES. The moon was not shining that night?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No.

Senator JONES. Was it a cloudy night?

Mr. VASQUEZ. No. You know in places where there are no street lamps it is Senator JONES. Did you see Maj. Taylor take his dagger and mutilate the Senator JONES. He did that after he had asked you to take the body and Senator JONES. Did you take the dagger also?

Mr. VASQUEZ. It was buried with the man's body.

Senator JONES. What kind of a dagger was that?

Mr. VASQUEZ. A short dagger resembling a knife with a hilt and a black Senator JONES. What sort of a blade did it have?

Mr. VASQUEZ. A blade about an inch wide.

Senator JONES. How long?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 5 inches.

Senator JONES. Did the major have a scabbard in which he carried that Senator JONES. And after mutilating the body with that dagger, he left the Senator JONES. Yes.

Senator JONES. And you did that?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I carried out the orders he gave me.

Senator JONES. And that dagger is buried there with the body?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. And buried in the public cemetery of that town?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. Can you locate that grave now?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I can.

Senator JONES. Did you and your two policemen dig the grave?

Mr. VASQUEZ. We did.

Senator JONES. How deep did you dig the grave?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Between 2½ and 3 feet.

Senator JONES. Where did you get the blanket in which to bury the body?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I knocked at the door of a commercial establishment, Mr.

Senator JONES. How much did you pay for that blanket?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I went on the following day to pay him and he would not

Senator JONES. What is the name of the man who donated the blanket?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Pedro Rosa.

Senator JONES. Where is he now?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In Hato Major.

Senator JONES. Is he still a merchant there?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Senator JONES. Was this body buried near some other grave?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Near to several others.

Senator JONES. Whose?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I don't know, for at that time persons were buried privately.

Senator POMERENE. Just a question or two. Was Maj. Taylor in command of La Guardia at that time, or the marines?

Mr. VASQUEZ. At that moment he was not commanding La Guardia. He was with the Fifty-second Company of marines.

Senator POMERENE. Did he have the uniform of the marines on?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes; a major's uniform.

Senator POMERENE. Now, are you certain that the men who fired the shot that killed this man were marines, or were they members of La Guardia?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I only saw marines.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know the names of any of these marines?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I don't know any. I only know the captain. I know him.

Senator POMERENE. Would you be able to identify any of these marines whom you were to see them?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I can not state with certainty.

Senator POMERENE. What was Maj. Taylor's first name?

Mr. VASQUEZ. I only knew him as Maj. Taylor.

Senator POMERENE. How long had you known him?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Four or five months.

Senator POMERENE. And how long had you known Capt. Mercier?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Ever since he came to Hato Major. In June or July, before he took charge.

Senator POMERENE. Can you give the names of any other witnesses killing than those you have already given?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Only the policemen, because the people were in such state at that time that at 7 o'clock at night they were all closed up in their houses.

Senator POMERENE. Now, will you say to this witness that if he can at future time discover the names of any witnesses who may know about the facts concerning which he has testified before this commission, will he give those names to the governor general or to other officers of the American army here on the island?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Should I hear or know of any I will.

Mr. KNOWLES. Or forward to the—

Senator POMERENE. Yes. It will save time if he will give them here, you willing to assist the officers in the investigation of this matter further.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes; I promise to help in any way.

Senator POMERENE. We shall be obliged to you if you will give them help in your power.

Mr. VASQUEZ. Everything that comes to my knowledge, I will let you know.

Senator POMERENE. And do it very promptly. As soon as you get it the information to the officers.

Senator JONES. How far from the town is the cemetery where Jose was buried?

Mr. VASQUEZ. At present it is about 18 or 20 meters.

Senator JONES. Just nearby where he was shot then?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Not very near, because the town is much bigger to-day than it was at that time.

Senator JONES. How far from the place where he was shot is it to the place where he was buried?

Mr. VASQUEZ. About 200 meters.

Mr. KNOWLES. Will you please state to the commission what was the reason that you waited until now that the commission is here to give information to this act?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Because at that time we did not dare speak the truth. For one who made any statement was punished.

Mr. KNOWLES. I had not the slightest idea of what his answer would be to that question.

Senator JONES. Did you and the two policemen alone carry the body to where it was killed to the place of burial?

Mr. VASQUEZ. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was Jose a man of family?

Mr. VASQUEZ. He had a nephew who was not in town.

Senator JONES. Where is that nephew now?

Mr. VASQUEZ. In Macoris.

Senator JONES. How old is he?
 Mr. VASQUEZ. About 33 years old.
 Senator JONES. What was he doing there?
 Mr. VASQUEZ. He was working.
 Senator JONES. What's his name?
 Mr. VASQUEZ. Isaias Jose.
 Mr. KNOWLES. How old a man was Jose, the one that was killed?
 Mr. VASQUEZ. He was between 42 and 45 years old.

STATEMENT OF MR. EMILIO SUAREZ, HATO MAJOR.

Mr. KNOWLES. What's your name?
 Mr. SUAREZ. Emilio Suarez.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Where do you reside?
 Mr. SUAREZ. In Hato Major.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Where were you born?
 Mr. SUAREZ. In Macoris.
 Mr. KNOWLES. What is your occupation?
 Mr. SUAREZ. I am a merchant and farmer.
 Mr. KNOWLES. How long have you lived and conducted business in Macoris?
 Mr. SUAREZ. I have not lived in Macoris for a long time.
 Mr. KNOWLES. How long?
 Mr. SUAREZ. For two years after my birth.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Do you reside there now?
 Mr. SUAREZ. Where?
 Mr. KNOWLES. In Macoris.
 Mr. SUAREZ. No.
 Mr. KNOWLES. How long had you resided there prior to this day?
 Mr. SUAREZ. You mean Hato Major?
 Mr. KNOWLES. Yes.
 Mr. SUAREZ. Twenty-seven years.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Had you had any connection or position with the army or navy under the military government?
 Mr. SUAREZ. No. I only acted as guide.
 Mr. KNOWLES. For what time and period?
 Mr. SUAREZ. A year and two months.
 Mr. KNOWLES. In that capacity as guide what did that call upon you to do?
 Mr. SUAREZ. Capt. Merckle obliged me to accompany him.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Where?
 Mr. SUAREZ. In Hato Major.
 Mr. KNOWLES. And where did he accompany Capt. Merckle?
 Mr. SUAREZ. In San Francisco, Pedro Sanchez, Le Candelaria, Anama (?) Bayabo Dulce, Mata Palacio, Dos Rios, Hato Major, Savannegrande, El Jobo.
 Senator POMERENE. Between what dates were you a guide?
 Mr. SUAREZ. From the 12th of April, 1917, up to July, 1918.
 Mr. KNOWLES. During that time that you accompanied Capt. Merckle as guide were there other officers and men of marines?
 Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.
 Mr. KNOWLES. In the party?
 Mr. SUAREZ. In Hato Major; yes.
 Senator POMERENE. Now, I don't think I understand that answer.
 Mr. KNOWLES. I asked him if there were other officers of the marines that accompanied Capt. Merckle.
 Senator POMERENE. On this tour?
 Mr. KNOWLES. On this tour. And he replied "In Hato Major." Now—
 Senator POMERENE. You understand that there were no other officers with him at these other places?
 Mr. KNOWLES. I don't understand in that way.
 Senator POMERENE. Well, proceed.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Will you state any incidents when you were acting as guide for and with Capt. Merckle which you yourself witnessed and wish to relate to this commission?
 Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Proceed with your declaration in your own way.
 Senator POMERENE. Let him give dates as near as he can.
 Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; and fix the date and place of each incident as you relate them.

Mr. SUAREZ. It is very difficult to give dates, because I did not keep the record on which we made a tour in my memory.

Mr. KNOWLES. We only want approximately. Even the month will be sufficient.

Mr. SUAREZ. In June we left Hato Major with a detachment of marines.

Mr. KNOWLES. June of what year?

Mr. SUAREZ. 1917. Under the command of Capt. Merckle and Lieut. Simmons of the Forty-fourth Company.

Mr. KNOWLES. Any other whose names you recall at this point?

Mr. SUAREZ. And Lieut. Buckle, of the Fifty-second Company.

Mr. KNOWLES. Other names?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; no other officers.

Senator POMERENE. Simmons was of what company?

Mr. SUAREZ. The Forty-fourth.

Mr. KNOWLES. Proceed.

Mr. SUAREZ. On arriving opposite a place called Santana, Capt. Merckle ordered Lieut. Buckle to continue or go on as far as San Lorenzo, section Magrin, and Capt. Merckle and Lieut. Simmons and I in the group went to San Valerio. Capt. Merckle obliged the people in that place to declare where the bandits were to be found, tying women, men, and children, and threatening them with death if they did not state where they were to be found. When they were all taken to San Lorenzo. But before getting to San Lorenzo, about 2 kilometers before reaching the place, Capt. Merckle ordered the prisoners be blindfolded.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many were at that time prisoners?

Mr. SUAREZ. About 25—women, children, and men. When there at the trunk of a tree an incision was made in the trunk of the tree and a hole placed in the ground and the leg raised and placed in the incision and there. Then Capt. Merckle ordered all the marines to build houses on that spot, and he placed his camp there for a long time. After being there about three or four days he sent away all that he had brought from San Valerio as prisoners. After going through the country around there he sent the people in that section from their houses and carried them away as prisoners in the same condition that he did the first. The following day he commenced to send them away until he had released all. After that he went in the country, setting fire in El Candelaria, in Pedro Sanchez, in Maricao, and in San Francisco, burning many houses, perhaps about 200 houses. That, in the month of August, the forces were concentrated at Hato Major at the petition of Col. Thorpe—

Mr. KNOWLES. What does he mean by "at the petition of Col. Thorpe"?

Mr. SUAREZ. By order of Col. Thorpe. Col. Thorpe ordered the reconquest of the whole eastern Province. After that there were about 1,500 marines in Hato Major. This was started on the 24th of December, 1918. After that Capt. Merckle called me and told Amador Cisneros, that second chief of police of San Pedro de Macoris, and me that we had to kill many prisoners in the country, so as to put a stop to banditry. On the 27th of September we went with a detachment of marines for Dos Rios, passing by Matapolacio. When we got to Matapolacio he ordered that the whole town of Matapolacio be burned. Only one house was left standing at that place, and the name of the owner was Martin Santos.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many houses were burned?

Senator JONES. He said about 200.

Mr. SUAREZ. Where we slept. The following day we left that place in the direction of Dos Rios. On reaching the El Salto, which belongs to the Ma. Sugar Co., a town with a good many houses, Capt. Merckle ordered all the houses to be burned. After that I and the marines in examining, found on the river bank a man wounded in the thigh, and we took him to Capt. Merckle, who told him that he ought to state where his companions were. He told him that he had been wounded and had been interned in the colony, for maintaining himself by eating sugar cane. He told him that that was insufficient, that he should tell the truth as to where his companions were, and stated that he didn't know. Then he took that man and took a big trunk of a tree and placed him face downward on the trunk and cut another stick of that thickness [indicating], and beat him on the buttocks and all over the back. Cut off his ear, wounded him on the chest in two places.

Mr. KNOWLES. How did he wound him?

Mr. SUAREZ. Making crosses on his chest.

Mr. KNOWLES. What with?

Mr. SUAREZ. With a knife. He poured salt into the wound and orange juice. Amador Cisneros was present, too.

Senator POMERENE. Who is this man?

Mr. KNOWLES. He is the chief of police of Macoris at the present time. Proceed.

Mr. SUAREZ. Then he took that man and mounted him on a horse and tied his legs tightly under the belly of the horse, and we left for Dos Rios. We arrived there in the afternoon, and then the chief at Dos Rios told Capt. Merckle that he knew where there were two fugitives, and that he wished to capture them. He told him that he could go, giving him two revolvers. The following day, pretty early, he appeared with the two men as prisoners, one of them had yaws.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you know what it is?

The INTERPRETER. It is a tropical skin disease.

Mr. KNOWLES. Proceed.

Mr. SUAREZ. These men stated that they had not come to town, because they were suffering with that bad disease, and they might infect the people of the city. His companion stated that he had not come because he was keeping the company of his sick friend, as on a former occasion his sick friend had done the same for him. That night Capt. Merckle and Amador ordered us to kill the man suffering with yaws with our knives. We told him we would not do so, because the man had not offended us, and he had many rifles and machine guns and could use them on him. Then he sent a sergeant of marines and an enlisted man, and the sergeant fired one shot. He fell on the ground alive, then the enlisted man drove a pick-ax through his head from one side to the other.

Senator POMERENE. Do you know the name of this sergeant or this marine?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; I don't remember.

Senator POMERENE. Or of the marine?

Mr. SUAREZ. No.

Senator POMERENE. Have you any way of finding out their names?

Mr. SUAREZ. It is impossible. However friendly you may be with the marines, you seldom get to know their names.

Senator POMERENE. Are you willing to assist the officers in looking this matter up?

Mr. SUAREZ. I will do all that I can. Then Capt. Merckle ordered me and Amador Cisneros, the chief of Dos Rios, to bury the body. Then the sergeant told me that that man was suffering from a bad disease, and we might be infected with the same disease if we tried to bury him; that we should tie a rope around him and throw him away in the hills, about a kilometer and a half away.

The following day Capt. Merckle saw him and asked us why we had not buried the body. We told him that the sergeant had opposed our doing so, telling us that the man was suffering from a bad disease and we might be infected. Then he threatened Amador and me with death for not having obeyed his orders.

Senator POMERENE. Amador. Was that this private?

Mr. SUAREZ. The second chief of police. At that moment a man came up and reported to the captain that $66 had been stolen from his place, that three young men had committed the robbery, and the young men were brought before Capt. Merckle right away. They alleged that they were not guilty of the robbery of that money, but that man demanded and insisted in saying that they were the ones, they had enough to pay him or return his money.

Mr. KNOWLES. Give him the amount.

Mr. SUAREZ. Or reimburse the amount. Then Merckle declared that he was going to set an example in order that no more robberies might be committed in Dos Rios. He tied each of the young men and turned each one over to a marine, telling them that if they allowed one of those men to escape he would shoot them.

Mr. KNOWLES. Shoot the prisoner or the marine?

Mr. SUAREZ. Shoot the marine. If he allowed one of the prisoners to escape he would shoot the marine. About two hours after we left for Hato Major with the three prisoners, with the man who had been tortured, and the companion of the man who was suffering from yaws and had been shot the previous night, mounted on a horse the same way he came from Dos Rios. On reaching M. Lambre, Capt. Merckle ordered that the three young men and the companion of the man who had been suffering from yaws, be shot, and he ordered that he be released one by one, and he stood off with a machine gun and killed each one only leaving the man whose ears had been cut off and whose chest had been marked with crosses. Then he shot each of those men through the ear and then dead on the plain near the road, and the bodies were eaten by the pigs or the hogs and dogs. Then he ordered Armado Mejia, whose ears had been cut off, to tell him where his companions were, saying that if he did not tell him, he was going to shoot him. He said that he could not state where they were. Then he set fire to the leg in which he was wounded and burned his trouser on that leg. After that we left for Hato Major. On reaching the H. Higuamo he ordered that breakfast be prepared for the forces.

Mr. KNOWLES. How many men were there in that detachment?

Mr. SUAREZ. Forty marines. He ordered 10 marines to throw oranges at Mejia and to strike him all over the body. Sometimes he fell on the ground and he remained breathless for a time, and he asked them to kill him and to torture him so much, but they stated that he was a bandit and should die by little; that bandits should neither eat, drink, nor sleep, but die by little, and that he would not give him anything else to eat until he was hungry and thirst.

Senator POMERENE. Who said this?

Mr. SUAREZ. Capt. Merckle. Then we left that place and arrived at Hato Major. The following day Col. Thorpe arrived at Hato Major and saw a wounded man. The wounded man told Col. Thorpe of all that had happened to him, and then Col. Thorpe ordered Dr. Coradin to dress his wounds and attend to him every day.

Senator POMERENE. Did you hear this talk between the wounded man and Col. Thorpe?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. Fix the date of this if you can.

Mr. SUAREZ. In October.

Senator POMERENE. 1918?

Mr. SUAREZ. No, no, no; in September.

Senator POMERENE. 1918?

Mr. SUAREZ. The 2d of September, 1918.

Senator POMERENE. Now, do you mean that, or do you mean 1917?

Mr. SUAREZ. The 2d of September, 1918.

Senator POMERENE. There is something wrong about the date, because he was in the early part of his examination that he was with Capt. Merckle from August 1917, to July, 1918.

Mr. SUAREZ. The 17th of December, 1917.

Mr. KNOWLES. The 17th or the 2d of September?

The INTERPRETER. He doesn't appear to remember.

Senator POMERENE. Let me put another question. How long did you continue in the service of Capt. Merckle after this talk between the wounded man and Col. Thorpe?

Mr. SUAREZ. A very short time.

Senator POMERENE. Now, Mr. Knowles, it is just about 1 o'clock, and I think we will suspend until 3 o'clock. We have another engagement.

(Whereupon the committee, at 1 o'clock p. m., took a recess until 3 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The committee met pursuant to recess at 3 o'clock p. m.

Present, Senators Jones and Pomerene.

Also present, Messrs. Howe, Angell, and Knowles.

STATEMENT OF MR. EMILIO SUAREZ—Resumed.

Mr. KNOWLES. Senator, the witness desires to correct one or two matters in his testimony this morning in regard to dates.

Senator POMERENE. All right.

Mr. KNOWLES. You can make such modifications and corrections in the dates as you wish as you spoke to me about.

Mr. SUAREZ. I wish to explain to you that my services rendered to the military government instead of beginning in April, 1917, began in April, 1918, and ended in July, 1919.

Mr. KNOWLES. And I suppose that means that the dates would be just one month later?

Senator POMERENE. Yes; the stenographer will note that. Occurrences stated occurring in 1917 will be stated as occurring in 1918.

Mr. KNOWLES. In your testimony this morning you stated that there were 200 houses burned. In about what period did that occur?

Mr. SUAREZ. In three months.

Mr. KNOWLES. And to make the record clear, according to what you later told me, I understand that those 200 houses were not of any one place, but included in all of the different towns.

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes; at different places.

Mr. KNOWLES. Do you know whether or not any of the people were injured or lost their lives in the burning of these houses?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. What do you know about it?

Mr. SUAREZ. The day on which Maj. Taylor and Capt. Merckle burned the house of Nicholas Tavera in Magarin and several other houses in the same place, they killed Frederico Ramos and the wife of Pedro Cedena, going toward a Candelaria and burning several other houses, among them the house of Arcelina Paredes, Lorenzo Musu, and several other houses, the names of the owners of which I don't know.

Mr. KNOWLES. Were any lives lost, if you know, in those houses?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; not in those houses, but in Vincentillo.

Mr. KNOWLES. What can you say in regard to those places?

Mr. SUAREZ. As the peasants were scared when they saw a detachment of marines at that place, the people used to run away, leaving their houses, and in one house, after being burned, the cries of a child were heard, as several persons had been killed in that place for having run away through fear of the marine forces.

Mr. KNOWLES. How long was Capt. Merckle in that district?

Mr. SUAREZ. He used to go there very often, and whenever he went he stayed about four or five days.

Mr. KNOWLES. Where did he go from? When he was not in that district, where, if you know, was Capt. Merckle?

Mr. SUAREZ. In Macoris.

Mr. KNOWLES. Macoris was his headquarters?

Mr. SUAREZ. He used to go from Hato Major to Macoris.

Senator POMERENE. Just ask him to state where his headquarters were when he was in this section of the country.

Mr. SUAREZ. In Hato Major.

Mr. KNOWLES. Was he the most of the time in Hato Major or in Macoris?

Mr. SUAREZ. In Macoris.

Mr. KNOWLES. Over what period of time from the first time you saw Capt. Merckle in Hato Major, or in that section, until the last time, how long was that? How many weeks or how many months?

Mr. SUAREZ. Five or six months.

Mr. KNOWLES. During all of that five or six months, were these occurrences such as you have described?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES. Any questions, Senator?

Senator POMERENE. Are you through?

Mr. KNOWLES. Yes; I am through with him.

Senator POMERENE. Did you make any report of these atrocities which were committed under Capt. Merckle to either the Dominican authorities or to the military occupation?

Mr. SUAREZ. No. Capt. Merckle had several men who used to go around with him in the country. And more than one was killed by Capt. Merckle himself, because they had been eye witnesses to these acts.

Mr. KNOWLES. Who were these men thus killed?

Mr. SUAREZ. Domingo de la Cruz.

Mr. KNOWLES. Does he mean they had given testimony?

Senator JONES. No; he means they were there and saw the thing done.

Senator POMERENE. Any other witnesses?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; I don't recall any other.

Senator POMERENE. Did you not tell some of the Dominican authorities this?

Mr. SUAREZ. Nothing absolutely. This is the first time.

Senator POMERENE. Is this the first time you have related this to us?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes; to the military officers.

Senator POMERENE. How is that?

Mr. SUAREZ. To the military officers.

Senator POMERENE. I don't quite understand that.

The INTERPRETER. It is the first time he has related it to the military authorities.

Senator POMERENE. Was it through a sense of fear on your part that you did not report this?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes; because I was threatened with death by Capt. Merckle himself, after having rendered him good service.

Senator POMERENE. When did Capt. Merckle kill himself, if you know?

Mr. SUAREZ. I don't know the date, but I know the date on which he was ordered to arrest him, because Col. Thorpe ordered him to come to Macoris.

Senator POMERENE. Ordered whom to come to Macoris?

Mr. SUAREZ. Capt. Merckle.

Senator POMERENE. Well, now, you know that Capt. Merckle was arrested for these offenses which you just described, did you?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; I did not know.

Senator POMERENE. Well, what did you think he was arrested for?

Mr. SUAREZ. I didn't know. Col. Thorpe ordered him to Macoris, but he did not state that he was to be taken prisoner.

Senator POMERENE. After Merckle was arrested, or after his death, did you not then feel free to tell the American authorities about what he had done?

Mr. SUAREZ. No; because we were still afraid. After Col. Thorpe had ordered him to go to San Pedro de Macoris on the 1st or 2d of September, 1918, he returned to Macoris two days after he returned to Hato Major with a detachment of marines on his way to Los Pajos, going to El Salto, the colony of Mr. Fernandez, and firing at the laborers whom he saw in the colony.

Senator POMERENE. Who fired?

Mr. SUAREZ. Capt. Merckle. And burning the house on the colony of Mr. Romero. After that they dismounted at La Pluma of Mr. Jimenez and took two prisoners and shot them on the river bank of El Higuano. Mr. Jimenez and Mr. Jimenez reported the matter immediately to the manager of the plantation, and the manager reported the matter to Col. Thorpe at San Pedro de Macoris. When Capt. Merckle got to Hato Major he found a radio from the Government ordering him to return again, after which he was confined.

Senator POMERENE. Now, as I indicated before, the authorities here on the island are going to investigate these disclosures further. Are you willing to help the military authorities here in their investigation?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. And you will do that to the best of your ability?

Mr. SUAREZ. Yes.

Senator POMERENE. I desire to say for the committee or repeat what I have before, that these occurrences which have been reported here are very distressing. The principal participant has evidently confessed his guilt of at least some of these cruelties, because his suicide is the evidence of his confession. We are very sorry that these things have occurred, and say for the benefit of others who are present again that if they have any information which will lead to the conviction of men who have been guilty of this kind of crime, Admiral Robison, the military governor, and the people of his staff, as well as the Government of the United States, will be under obligation for any assistance that may be given, to the end that the truth may be known and the guilty, if any, may be punished.

Mr. SUAREZ. I have no objection whatever to prove all that I have stated only because I stated, but because there are hundreds of persons who have appeared before you to mention their grievances for lack of means, and I have no objection to giving all aid I can to the military authorities as long as they guarantee my life and person.

Senator POMERENE. No one is in any danger who will come and tell the truth to the military governor and his associates, because they are all high-class and want to get the truth.

Mr. KNOWLES. Before he leaves there is just one question I omitted, and that to ask what became of the men whose homes were burned that he has scribbed.

Mr. SUAREZ. Some of them are on the sugar plantations. Others are at Hato Jor.

Senator POMERENE. If you or other witnesses will submit the statements in the form of affidavits, giving all of the particulars of any atrocities, so that they can be investigated by the American authorities or others, we will appreciate that very much. Give the dates and places. You, of course, as a lawyer, understand what we want about that, and we want it so that we can investigate to the very limit. If you will get that for us we shall be obliged.

Mr. HOWE. I have here the file concerning Capt. Merckle and investigation of his case, and I offer for the record the letter from the brigade commander the brigade paymaster, dated September 30, 1918, reporting that Capt. Merckle is placed under arrest September 27, 1918. Also the report of the investigation by Maj. Kingsbury, begun September 28, 1918, with Maj. Kingsbury's opinion and findings. Also a set of six specimen charges prepared against Capt. Merckle, including the charge of murder, which charges, however, were not completed because of the death by suicide of Capt. Merckle on October 27, 1918. And I submit the report of the board of inquest on Capt. Merckle's death, showing his death by suicide in his tent while under guard.

With this request, however, that, although these are admitted into evidence before the committee the military authorities here supply the committee with copies of these portions of the files so offered in testimony, because it is the only file which they now have on the important subject of Capt. Merckle.

I also have a report on the fines collected, which was requested by Mr. Knowles, and I submit that with the statement that it supplements the report given for the time from June 20, the date which was turned over yesterday, and includes those collections. The total shown for all the fines from the beginning of the occupation to date is $69,587.60.

Mr. KNOWLES. That is for the whole country?

Mr. HOWE. For the whole country; fines in the provost court.

I also have figures showing the amount spent on vaccine points in the last year. The medical expenditures called for are being prepared. But I have a report here from Commander Reeves, in charge of the sanitary department, showing that $40,000 was expended in vaccine small points, with a statement which I think can be placed in the record now.

Mr. KNOWLES. As I understand, that refers to one year?

Mr. HOWE. To one year. The other figures are in course of preparation.

There is also this statement as to the extent and prevalence of smallpox during the years when those smallpox points were bought and expended, showing the extreme prevalence of that disease during the time those smallpox points were obtained and brought here at that expense.

I also have the statement of Commander Mayo, commenting on the statement submitted yesterday by Señor Pau. I offer that.

(The documents produced by Mr. Howe are here printed in full, as follows:)

Provost Marshal General.

UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS.
HEADQUARTERS SECOND BRIGADE.
Santo Domingo City, December 12, 1921

Memorandum concerning receipts and expenditures of provost funds

1. Prior to June 30, 1920, provost funds were kept by the individual provost officer.
2. On June 30, 1921, all balances were collected in a general fund and expenditures made to the individual provost officer from the provost marshal general's office.
3. Expenditures from provost marshal general's office were of two kinds: ordinary monthly expenses, which has amounted to approximately $1,000 per month; extraordinary appropriations, which were requested by commanding general to meet some expenses that was out of ordinary and not included in ordinary expenses table. All expenditures, both ordinary and extraordinary were supported by vouchers, original kept by provost office, a signed duplicate forwarded at end of month to the commanding general.
4. Unexpended balances from sums sent to meet expenditures called for in ordinary table of expenses or extraordinary appropriations were returned to the provost marshal general's office for further expenditure.
5. All sums received by provost marshal general's office have been deposited in the International Banking Corporation, Santo Domingo branch, and all expenditures made by check.
6. A radio to all district commanders to have provost marshals submit total of all fines received by their offices immediately has been sent and as received a statement of totals will be submitted. As the period for a request is made covers a number of years, it will undoubtedly take some time to secure such information.

SANTO DOMINGO CITY, SANTO DOMINGO.

May 20, 1921.

[Fourth indorsement.]

APRIL 22, 1921.

From: Military governor of Santo Domingo.

To: Commanding general Second Brigade, United States Marines.

Subject: The running amuck of the Seventieth Company, Guayabo Dulce, Dominican Republic, on the night of December 26, 1920.

Returned; contents noted.

THOMAS SNOWDEN.

MARCH 14, 1921.

From: Regimental commander.

To: The commanding general.

Subject: The running amuck of the Seventieth Company, Fifteenth Regiment, at Guayabo Dulce, Dominican Republic, on the evening of December 26, 1920. Reference: (a) Letter of military governor, 623-21-Sn-AMC, dated February 24, 1921; (b) first indorsement, commanding general, on reference (a), 363-3-F, dated February 26, 1921.

Closures: Two.

1. I assumed command of the Fifteenth Regiment and eastern district on November 16, 1920. Up to December 26, 1920, I had, I believe, twice visited the camp. I know that on a Sunday early in December I inspected the camp at Guayabo Dulce, the headquarters of the company. At that time the camp was in very good condition; everything was neat and clean; arms and equipment, clothing boxes, etc., looked very well. There was nothing to show that the men were not under good discipline. I believe that my inspection was made without prior knowledge of the company commander.

2. The first sergeant and gunnery sergeant were men of long service, the first sergeant, I believe, having been a commissioned officer in the United States Army during the World War. It was noted by me that most of the men were recruits. That was, however, the condition in all camps. As soon as the shooting affray was reported to me I went to this camp and investigated the matter. I was very forcibly impressed with the youth of the men who were at the time implicated; several were not 19 years of age, and only two were more than 20. I think the majority of them joined the company in November. Besides the first and gunnery sergeants, the noncommissioned officers were very young, one, private Blood, being about 18 years of age. He, I understand now, was sent away from Parris Island because he took bribes from recruits. I believe it not, however, be proved.

3. Nothing has transpired which shows that Capt. Harrison neglected duty. I do not consider that he is a strong, forceful officer. He is and to quote the company medical officer, "treated his men better than deserved." I believe that Lieut. Col. McE. Huey, who had been in command since June, recommended Capt. Harrison to me when I assumed command.

4. I had issued no special orders regarding conduct during the holiday season. I had never observed that excitement naturally runs high during holiday season among troops in the field. More trouble is experienced on pay day.
